RE-TESTS OF CATTLE START NEXT WEEK

With Dr. O. J. Reed of Belleville in charge, re-tests of Prince Edward County cattle will take place next week. Operations will start in the Township of North Marysburg, Dr. C. E. Goodwin, Picton, will assist Dr. Reed.

BAND CONCERT IN AID OF TOY FUND

Music-lovers are due for a rare treat tomorrow night at the City Hall auditorium, when the Belleville Municipal Band under the baton of Lieut. Fred Jobson will give a concert in aid of the Toy Fund of the Belleville Fire Department. A feature of the concert will be the appearance of Mr. Harry Moorman and his vocal octette, an organization of local male singers whose vocal ability is of the highest. Special numbers have been arranged by Mr. Moorman while the general program, drafted by Lieut. Jobson is one that is outstanding in its variety and selection of numbers.

The Toy Fund, used to supply toys for underprivileged children of the city is sadly in need of replenishment, and the lads in brass and blue appeal to the public to again respond in their usual generous manner by attending the concert that starts at 8.15 tomorrow night.

FISH HATCHERY AT GLENORA QUITE BUSY

Literally millions of small fish are now making their way into the Glenora Fish hatchery, officials of which anticipate one of the busiest seasons in years during the coming winter.

Eighty thousand brown trout, that spent the summer at the Warings Corners creek have been transferred to winter quarters in Glenora while seventy-four million whitefish eggs, and twenty-two millions of herring eggs have been gathered from Hay Bay.

Five hundred thousand brown trout are now in winter quarters awaiting the arrival of another half-million from Pennsylvannia. Eight hundred thousand lake trout eggs will be delivered at a later date. From the Georgian Bay district, four million lake trout eggs have been gathered.

Lydia Lodge Instals Officers

Thursday, December 15th, at the regular meeting of Lydia Lodge No. 350, L.O.B.A with P.W.M. Sister Ceigler as presiding officer. The new officers for the year 1939 were duly installed in office:— W.M. Sister K. Bankey; D.M., Sister S. Kennedy; Chaplain, W. Sister E. Holst; Recording Secretary, Sister M. Asselstine; Financial Secretary, W. Sister F. Bell; Treasurer, W. Sister E. Smith; 1st Lect., Sister P. Buck; 2nd Lect., Sister E. Juby: Director of Ceremonies, W. Sister E. Turner; Inside Guard, Sister Kew; Outside Guard, Brother Hanna; 1st Com., Sister S. Thompson; 2nd Com., Sister Alexander; 3rd Com., Sister H. Bell; 4th Com., W. Sister A. Soules; 5th Com., Sister Reeder; Guardian W. Sister Hanna; P.W.M., W. Sister Ceigler; Degree Cap., W. Sister Turner.

On behalf of Lodge Sister Kennedy presented the presiding officer with a gift in appreciation of her work. After business of Lodge was completed to the tune of Merry Bells, Santa arrived. As lights were lowered he proceeded to the Christmas tree and all members received a gift from the gaily decorated tree. When all had admired their gifts a social hour was spent and a dainty lunch served by the committee. All departed for home after wishing their sisters the compliments of the reason and hoping for a brighter and better New Year.

T. Rainbird Heads C. N. R. Veterans

Succeeding President Thomas Cushing, Mr. T. Rainbird was elected to the chief office of the Belleville Veterans Club of the Canadian National Railway at their annual meeting held this week. Other officers who will guide the destinies of the organization of the club for the coming year include, Hon. President, T. Clare; Vice President, J. Rowe; 2nd Vice President, R. E. Snell; Secretary-Treasurer, E. B. Bell; Committee, J. R. Reid, H. Bateman, W. J. Corbett, R. Slaven, G. W. Clark and H. Diment.

His Worship Mayor Jamieson Bone of Belleville and Mr. T. Hazzard were made honorary members of the club, members decided following the election of regular officers. A feature of the meeting was an instructive address by William Bray, section foreman at West Huntingdon, who regaled members with highlights of his thirty-five years experience with the road. Discussions included the problem of railway transportation and effects upon it by the increasing inroads of highway transportation.

Committees Appointed for Holiday Dance

Committees have been appointed for the outstanding holiday social event, the dance being held under the auspices of the Women's Hospital Auxiliary. Belleville Collegiate will be en fete for this occasion on December 28th., with dancing to an eight piece orchestra in the combined gyms, bridge and euchre in the Library, supper in the cafeteria and the gym balconies arranged for sitting out, and for cooling soft drinks.

Mrs. A. H. Ketcheson is convener of the dance committee which includes Mrs. J. H. Forrester, Mrs. R. G. Stafford, Mrs. J. D. O'Flynn, Mrs. J. W. Imlah, Mrs. R. H. Martin, Mrs. R. Hamilton, Mrs. E. J. Bernstein, Mrs. Mack Robertson, Messrs. Fred H. Deacon, A. H. Ketcheson and Charles Dolan will assist this committee.

Miss Burke, Mrs. Stafford, Mrs. G. A. Morton and Mrs. Hamilton are in charge of the supper, Mrs. J. W. Imlah, the bridge and euchre, Miss Ash the decorations and Mrs. O'Flynn and Mrs. Martin the refreshment stand in the balcony. No invitations have been issued for the event.

Foxboro Factory Produces 249,505 Lbs. Of Cheese Last Season

During the season which has just ended, Foxboro Butter and Cheese Company produced a total of 249,505 pounds of cheese which sold at an average price of 13.82 cents, it was reported at the annual meeting held at the factory yesterday.

Fred Campbell was named president of the factory for the coming year, and D. H. Watt and Jos. Hollinger auditors. Fred Campbell was appointed salesman for the cheese making season, and also secretary during the active season. During the interim the duties of this office will be undertaken by Seldon Homan.

Directors named yesterday are:—Seldon Homan, John Patterson, Addison Coulter, John Longwell, John Gowsell and Wm. Kelly.

It was decided during the coming season to make considerable repairs to the Foxboro plant to bring it up to modern sanitary standards; one of the chief problems during the coming year will be the installation of some filtering method by which the water of the Moira River may be used in the factory. The probability of the installation of a mechanical refrigerator in the cutting room was also voiced by patrons of the factory.

New Manager for Capitol Theatre

Capitol Theatre has a new manager, Mr. W. C. Tyers of Toronto having arrived to take the position vacated by Mr. S. L. Blain, who has been transferred after several years spent in Belleville. Mr. Tyers is a capable theatrical man, having spent several years as a member of the staff of Famous Players and occupying managerial positions in various theatres. Mr. Tyers has a pleasing personality and will no doubt make many friends here. To the Ontario Intelligencer Mr. Tyres said that he is busy booking a number of first-class pictures for the Capitol and will be satisfied with nothing but first call entertainment for patrons, carrying out the good work begun by his predecessor.

Police Blotter

Not a single arrest was necessary in Belleville during the past 24 hours, the cell block having not been occupied, except for the accommodation of eleven transients last night, since Thursday.

Thos. Thorne, keeper of the city dog pound, found a stray brown and white colored Fox Terrier at large yesterday and took the canine in custody. Mr. Thorne stated today the dog was apparently a valued animal, but carried no city or township dog tag. "It would make some small boy's heart glad at Christmas time," suggested Mr. Thorne in conclusion.

Today's early fall of wet snow made traffic progress rather difficult for motorists, several motor vehicles being in difficulty on hills and grades immediately outside of the city. Later Highway Department workmen sanded these treacherous portions of the highways to assure safety in traffic.

OBITUARY

CHARLES E. JEFFERY

For the past twenty-five years Mr. Jeffery resided in Belleville and was well-known and highly esteemed by many friends and acquaintances to whom his death has brought sincere feelings of regret. Over a long period of time he was connected with the wholesale meat business and represented the Harris Abattoir Company and later the Canada Packers, Limited, in Central Ontario. By his employers he was valued as an energetic and reliable salesman and with the retail dealers upon whom he called regularly for many years he was popular and enjoyed their business confidence. To these business friends his death will also bring sincere regret.

The late Mr. Jeffery was born in Picton, Ont., his parents being the late Mr. and Mrs. George Jeffery. In religion he was a member of St. Thomas' Anglican Church.

Surviving to mourn his passing and to whom the sympathy of many friends will be extended are his widow; one daughter, Mrs. H. P. Holway, Belleville; four sons, Mr. Charles L. Jeffery, Toronto; Mr. James E. Jeffery, Toronto; Mr. Thomas Jeffery, Belleville, and Mr. George Jeffery, Toronto; one sister, Mrs. George Boulter, Toronto.

Of a cheerful, jovial disposition, Charlie Jeffery was optimism personified and saw life always through rosy glasses, bringing a smile and good cheer to all with whom he came in contact. One of the first commercial travellers for wholesale meat, he started with the Harris Abattoir Company, of Toronto, and continued with that firm for many years, until superannuated with honors several years ago by the firm, now known as Canada Packers, Limited. At the various annual conventions of the firm in Toronto, Mr. Jeffery was the recipient of special honors and acclaim as the oldest and best traveller for the firm, blazing a trail for wholesale meat travellers which has been an inspiration to the younger travellers who succeeded him.

Charlie Jeffery took a great interest in sport and was an ardent and generous supporter of all kinds of athletic endeavor, his particular love being baseball—but every branch of sport had his support and approval if it was fair and honest.

Mr. Jeffery was well and favorably known all over Ontario, had warm friends everywhere his business called him, and he was known as an expert in the meat business, retailers all over the province deferring to his judgment with profit to themselves. His death will bring many pangs of regret and his memory will long be treasured as a true friend, good citizen and hundred per cent Canadian.

MRS. JESSE F. GRAVES

(Picton)

Picton, (Special)—Margaret Mary Ennis, wife of Jesse F. Graves, passed away at the family home on Queen St., on Thursday, Dec. 15th., in her 72nd year. The deceased Mrs. Graves was born in Ireland, coming to Picton with her sister as a young woman. She was a devout member of St. Gregory's R. C. Church, and active in all the women's organizations of her church. She was a woman widely known for her kindness and hospitality, who will be greatly missed in the community as well as in the family circle. Surviving are her husband, two daughters, Mrs. Thos. Flurey of Belleville, and Miss Margaret Graves, and one son, Ennis Graves, at home. Requiem Mass was sung by Rev. J. A. Meehan, in St. Gregory's Church on Saturday morning, Dec. 17th, and interment made in Mount Olivet Cemetery.

FRED W. MILLER

(Picton)

Picton (Special)—The funeral of Fred W. Miller, who died in Toronto on Dec. 14th, was conducted at the home of his brother, Edward D. Miller, Paul St., on Friday, December 16th Mrs. F. W. Miller, and Mr. and Mrs. Victor Miller, accompanied the body to Picton. Interment was made in Cherry Valley Cemetery.

Collegiate Attendance High in November

Attendance during the month of November at Collegiate Institute and Vocational School reached a high average of between 92 and 99.7 per cent, it was stated in the monthly report submitted by Principal P. C. MacLaurin at the final meeting of the Board of Education last evening.

Examinations terminated on November 30th and pupils' answer papers have all been corrected and terms reports given. Daily attendance during the fall term has been exceptionally good, stated the Principal. Total registration for this term was 915 pupils.

The fall term will close on Thursday, December 22nd., and the winter term will begin on January 3rd 1939.

Mr. MacLaurin in extending the compliments of the season to members of the Board on behalf of himself and staff, expressed the appreciation for the co-operation that had been offered the teachers and principals of the schools by the Board, during the season just ending, and the full co-operation that has been marked during the year.

Nearly seventy-one years ago, a now forgotten writer on the old Toronto Globe, in an article which was later reprinted in the Canadian News of London, England, found the present village of Marmora a fertile field for his imagination. Even then the demise of the now healthy village was predicted by this journalist.

In his article it is noted: "In Marmora we see but the shadows of the past, the relics of prosperity long since departed." This was the story written in the year 1868, on January 16th.

The writer continues:

"But although the glory of Marmora has departed and gone to Blairton, Marmora still has its charms. The commodious residences, the comfortable village hotels, which have not deteriorated with age, the new mills and a few new houses, prevent one from feeling too melancholy at the signs of failure of the old Marmora Iron Company; while the coal kilns and cold, silent blast furnaces of the iron works suggests serious reflections on the mutability of human works in general and of Marmora iron mining in particular.

"The failure of the works at this place was caused by the lack of fuel for smelting the ores. The transportation of ores, with the facilities at command, was out of the question, and the effort to supply the want with charcoal manufactured there was not successful. The wood could be procured cheaply enough, and the large kilns capable of burning about 2,000 bushels of coal each at one time could supply fuel pretty rapidly but the charcoal was found insufficient for smelting the richest ores so that the attempt had to be abandoned after large sums had been spent in erecting kilns and furnaces."

The unknown writer continues: "For a time it seemed as if the immense deposits of iron in Marmora district would have to be left for future generations to work; but about a year ago (1867) a new mode of procedure was decided upon and has worked most successfully. The company's works at this place were given up entirely and operations commenced at Blairton, six miles west of here. The ore is taken out and shipped to Pittsburg, Pa., and smelted there. A railway has been built from Blairton to the water transportation of Rice Lake, and thence the railway carries it to Cobourg, to be again shipped by the lake to its destination.

Only Rich Ore Profitable

"So much carriage has, of course, its drawbacks, one of which is that ore yielding less than 60 per cent of iron is practically worthless, and is thrown into the lake to get it out of the way. It is only the great richness of the ore that renders the working of the Marmora iron beds profitable, much of it yielding from 70 to 75 per cent pure metal."

The reporter describes the drive up the hill from Marmora to a "limestone plateau" and concludes that the general character of the country is "desolate in the extreme."

"Only one or two houses are to be seen in the whole distance, and those are near Blairton where little patches of arable land are found encircled by the rocky hills. The village and station might escape notice of a traveller on the main highway. (Ed. note: Now No. 7 Highway) a few acres of bush intervening to cut off the view.

"As you emerge from the swamp and enter the village, you see that the houses are new, constructed of wood and unpainted, but they are very substantial and comfortable.

"The company known as the Cobourg, Peterborough and Marmora Mining Company have put up no less than fifty good dwelling houses within a few months for the use of their employees at the works. In addition to these are the boarding houses, hotels, stores, groceries, butcher shops and shoemaker shops. There are, too, the station and freight houses for the railway, and the blacksmith shops for doing the company's work. Altogether, Blairton is probably ahead of any other village of its age, in Canada. The rapid growth of the last few months, however, cannot be taken as a guarantee for future progress at the same rate. The number of hands that can be profitably employed is limited by the facilities for the transportation of ore.

300 Men Employed

"During the season of navigation 300 men were employed, taking out a ton of ore each day for each man. Now the number of men is only about 150, taking out 150 tons of ore each day. This ore is piled up in immense masses beside the tracks from the railway to be transported on the opening day of navigation. The quantity now on hand (1868) is about 15,000 tons, and 40,000 tons were shipped last season.

"Were coal deposits accessible in conjunction with the iron, the operations of the company might assume unlimited magnitude. The iron ore is abundant enough to supply for many years to come incalculable quantities of the ore, but the single hill at which they are now at work contains deposits that will not be exhausted for many years under the most rapid progression.

"It is, in fact, a mountain of iron on the shore of a little lake known as Marmora Lake, or Crowe Lake. The work already done only suffices to show to some extent the immense deposit of iron in the hill. The 50,000 or more tons that have been taken out have only cleared away the face of a small point of the hill, and enabled the miners to prosecute their work to good advantage. Nothing has been done yet in the way of shafts to bring the ore up from below the general level. Mr. Wilson the manager states that ore taken from a depth of fifteen feet in a test shaft is of the best quality, and appears to get richer as the depth increases.

On the face of the hill a large working surface is exposed. It is about 200 feet high. At various elevations on its face the miners are at work in parties of three each, one man to hold the drill and two to strike. The drills vary in length and diameter. The holes are four to nine feet deep. The lower one third is filled with powder. Some of the deeper blasts will dislodge as much as ten tons of the ore where the situation is favorable and thus the material can be gotten out cheaply.

"The miners are distributed over the almost perpendicular face of the mass of iron, their drills industrious in the work of boring through the ore. At the base of the wall the ore is lying in rugged masses varying in weight from a few pounds to a few tons which the laborers are breaking up in small chunks with sledges and wheeling away up the tramway to the top of the piles.

Drills Last Short Time

"The demeanour of the workmen and their character as sober, industrious citizens is spoken of in the highest terms by those who are acquainted with them. Some idea of the force of the blasting here may be formed from the fact that the sound is distinctly heard at Eldorado and Bannockburn near Madoc, a distance of twenty-five miles. About two kegs of powder are used a day, and four forges are kept at work almost exclusively in sharpening drills.

"The drilling of the ore is less difficult than many of the rocks in the Madoc gold regions. Each drill will penetrate the ore to the depth of about one foot before it becomes so dull as to require sharpening, while in many of the gold mines it will do only two or three inches till it must return to the forge.

"Mr. Wilson says that he lacks for nothing necessary to the working of the mines, the company always sending the supplies punctually and frequently in larger quantities than asked.

"All is very plain, nothing ornamental as yet having found its way to the iron mines. Development has been rapid, Marmora mining region may yet attain to some importance. There was not a single house here last February, nor one man employed in the locality. Now it is the terminus of the railway, and a hive of industry. A great deal of the country around is unfitted for anything else than mining. The valuable timber has been removed and the area of farm land is very limited, but the mineral resources are almost unlimited. The supply of iron ore is sufficient to give employment to a large population and if fuel could be found for smelting, the number of manufacturies would be such as to make the district wealthy and prosperous," writes this journalist of some long ago.

Christmas Trees for U. S. Christmas

For years Canada has been the only important exporter of Christmas trees to the chief northeastern cities of the United States, although in 1937 quantities of Newfoundland trees made their appearance in Chicago, shipped through Montreal and Philadelphia. Most of the Canadian trees imported into the United States are shipped by rail, both in open flat cars and in box cars. The box cars do not hold so many trees as the open cars, but because the trees in the box cars cannot be strapped down they arrive at their destination in better condition. For this reason the trend has been the greater use of box cars.

It is estimated that the flat open cars carry between 450 and 550 bundles, as compared with 325 to 375 bundles in the box cars. There is a small movement by boat, but many dealers do not favour this method on account of the possibility of heating. New York is the most important outlet for the Christmas trees, but nearly every large eastern city, particularly Philadelphia, Detroit, Pittsburgh, Cleveland, and Chicago, accounts for substantial quantities.

The Nova Scotia balsam is preferred to all others, although balsam firs from New Brunswick and Quebec have large sales. Spruce is little used, especially in New York, and it brings prices considerably under those for balsam. Douglas fir Christmas arees are also imported from British Columbia by the United States and come as far east as Cleveland. Trees must be put up in bundles, the number in each bundle depending on size. Bundles may consist of one to seven trees, with sizes of 5 to 6 feet high representing the bulk of the trade. For the 1937 Christmas, 5,299,229 trees were exported to the United States, the number exported increasing year by year.

Many farmers in the districts where evergreen trees grow which are used as Christmas trees, benefit by this trade.

SIDNEY LIBERALS ELECT OFFICERS FOR COMING YEAR

Morley B. Sine Re-Elected As President of the Association

ADRESSES GIVEN

The Sidney Liberal Association held their annual meeting and election of officers in the town hall, Wallbridge early this month with the house packed.

Morley B. Sine, chairman, called the meeting to order and called Mr. Mack. Robertson, Belleville, Mr. Chas. Smith, Picton, John E. Finnigan, Frankford, and Col. R. Vandewater to take chairs on the platform along with the executives of the Women's Association and the 20th Century Club.

Mr. Mason presided at the piano and, after some community singing and the chairman's preliminary remarks, Mr. Robertson gave an address. This consisted mainly of a resume of the work done by him and his executive as President of the riding of West Hastings L. A. during the year 1938. It was very enlightening to all present because it showed that the position is no sinecure and the man who handles it has to be wide awake, tactful and efficient, all of which Mr. Robertson has been proved to be.

A couple of readings by Mrs. Tucker were much enjoyed and provided a variety in the way of programme.

Election of Officers

The ward chairman will hold meetings in each poll to elect their officers and working committees.

Mr. Finnigan of Frankford brought greetings from his division and enlarged on some of the statements of Mr. Robertson, who in his modest way, had not taken full credit for what had been accomplished.

Mr. Smith of Picton then gave a very inspiring address also bearing testimony as to what had been done in the past year.

Ladies to Meet

The ladies decided to hold their election of officers at a subsequent date. Their secretary reported five meetings held during the year and the treasurer reported over $9.00 on hand.

Mrs. Geo. Clapp favoured with a solo which was much enjoyed.

Mrs. Margaret Vandewater entertained all with her tap-dancing.

Owing to a prior engagement our member, Mr. Chas. Cameron, did not arrive till almost lunch time when he was greeted with everyone singing lustily, "For he's a jolly good fellow." On account of the lateness of the hour he deferred his address to some future time, taking time only to greet those present and to voice his appreciation of the co-operation and help he had received through the officers of the executive of Sidney.

The orchestra furnished music and a social hour was spent as lunch was served.

Plainfield

Plainfield—At the annual meeting of L.O.L. No. 279, held in the hall on Monday evening the following officers were elected for the year 1939: Master, Mr. Robert Rollins; Deputy Master, Mr. Fred Prindle; Recording Secretary, Mr. Horace Palmer; Chaplin, Mr. Harry Harrison; Secretary-Treasurer, Mr. James W. Hamilton; Director of Ceremonies, Mr. Norval Barker; Lecturers, Mr. Bill Doran and Mr. John King; Committeemen, Messrs Joseph Gow, Clarence Marshall, Ralph Wilder and Orvil Rollins. The officers were installed by Mr. Jay Emerson.

The young people held their meeting in the church on Tuesday evening with a splendid attendance. The service was opened with a reading by Evelyn Outwater entitled "Pegging away." The minutes were then read by Carman Emerson. Mr. Fred Prindle and Oscar Moore rendered a duet, "Glory be to God the Father." Prayer was offered by the minister. Robert Rollins gave a fine talk on "Temperance", in which he told a number of personal experiences as a young man in Manitoba. Irvin Moore and Stewart Goodfellow received the offering. Mrs. Everson told the story of "When I survey the wondrous cross," after which the hymn was sung. Mr. Everson led the group in a study of "Religion as an experience" following the interpretation of Rev. D. A. Cowan in "The New Life." He was assisted by Vernon Emerson, who read the fortieth psalm, relating the religious experience of David. Irene Hall, who read Acts. 9:1-9, explaining the experience of St. Paul as an example of one who found Christ suddenly by means of a disturbing event; Mrs. Eddie Emerson who read 11 Timothy 1:1-9 describing Timothy as one who gradually became a Christian and Margery Creeper who read an account of the conversation of Charles H. Surgeon. The meeting was closed by singing "The great physician now is near" and the Benediction by Rev. J. P. Everson.

Springbrook

Springbrook—The regular weekly meeting of Springbrook Young People's League was held on Monday evening. The President, Bessie McMullen opened the meeting. The report of last week's meeting was read by the secretary, Lorne Bailey, followed by the roll call which was responded to by "Your favorite hymn." after which the President conducted the business of the meeting. A hymn was sung. The Fellowship Convener, Miss Edith Wallace, had charge of the following program; Scripture readings by Elwood Bateman; Current Events by Mrs. Walter Heath; music by Misses Jeana and Alma Nickle and Thelma Ketcheson; reading by Mrs. Murney Mason. The topic "Living Creatively" was given by Bessie McMullen, after which a sing song was conducted by Rev. A. W. Harding. A reading by Grace Fleming was followed by singing a hymn. Miss Wallace then staged a contest. The meeting was closed by the Mizpah Benediction.

Sunday guests of Mrs. Grace Reid were Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Heath and family of Stirling, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Reid and family of 11th concession, also Mr. and Mrs. R. Morton and family of 9th concession Rawdon.

Mr. and Mrs. Alex Bateman were Sunday evening guests of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Bateman.

SPECIAL SILVER DOLLAR

There will be a great demand for the special Canadian dollar to be issued in commemoration of the visit to the Dominion next May of Their Majesties King George and Queen Elizabeth. The issue of a jubilee dollar in 1935 when King George Fifth celebrated his quarter of a century on the throne was eagerly sought and many Canadians were unable to obtain a coin. The coronation silver dollar issued last year was likewise taken up.

As the forthcoming visit of the Sovereigns is the first ever paid by a ruling sovereign to a British possession, the occasion will be memorable and very many Canadians, Britishers and also residents of the United States will desire a memento of the occasion in the new dollar. As Their Majesties are to visit Washington, it is but natural that many citizens of the United States will also desire commemorative silver dollars of Canada.

Special issues of stamps will also mark the visit of the sovereigns. The red three cent issue will bear the likenesses of the King and Queen, the brown two cent stamp will show the National War Memorial at Ottawa and the green one cent stamp will bear the features of the Princess Elizabeth and Princess Margaret Rose.

FROM CHRISTMAS TREES TO CHRISTMAS

Never such days in the year for the child as this time of Christmas trees and entertainments, and the visits of Santa Claus by special request to these numerous pre-Christmas festivities arranged by Sunday schools, secular schools and so many societies and organizations. The child has been living in the world of fancy for some time, has been practising song or recitation, a part in the drill or tableau, all pointing to the one event, Christmas, that is to be the realization of everything the child holds precious in its imagination.

It is no wonder children are on tiptoe with delight. At these programs, there are screams of joy as they see Santa appear at the Christmas tree. They almost quiver as they go up to shake the hand of Santa who is making them presents of fruits and cakes and sweets. Before the arrival of Santa they have been expectant, as only the young mind, not absorbed or worried by business, or by the problems of making ends meet in the family budget, can be alert. They are transformed as it were from the boy and girl usually seen about the house, now they are all alertness and imagination, wrapt in the great mystery of Christmas.

Strange to say, they do not lose their interest in Christmas because they take part in Christmas entertainments before Christmas. These school entertainments and the visits of Santa at these functions do not make them weaken in enthusiasm for the coming of Santa when all is quiet in the house where they sleep in innocence and in the childish sense of wonder. These preambles to Christmas whet the appetite of childhood, they do not wither the full blossom of Christmas Day.

The time is then changed to Christmas Eve and athrill they are coaxed into their beds where they shall fall asleep in the lap of nature, while through their brain may travel reindeer and the wondrous St. Nicholas bringing gifts for all the children of the earth. Such a little brain in the head of the child sleeping in a tiny cot is a whole universe of wonder. What children see therein they cannot speak for wonders cannot pass their lips. But wonder is read in their actions, in their eyes as they see the fulfilment in the morning. The miracle has been performed, and dreams have come true, possibly beyond the range of their fancy to conceive. Such is the mighty miracle Christmas works.

So these are preparatoty days for the young. They are, tired mothers will admit, also preparatory days for the parents, who have the great task of bringing to pass this miracle which comes before Christmas morning. In these preparatory days, busy as mothers are, all the family take time to go to the Christmas tree, a good omen, a portent, a prophecy of what is to be in universal fulfilment. The child that accepts Santa Claus a week before Christmas at an entertainment is the same child who lies down weary of body on Christmas Eve, but alert in mind, ready for the wondrous event. And the parents know that this miracle is to be performed.

These Christmas trees teach lessons of wonder, of truth, of love, and of faith. They picture the real source of this happy, merry season, in the childhood of Him whose coming is marked at this season.

LIQUID ASSETS

IT HAPPENED IN BELLEVILLE—told to an Ontario Intelligencer reporter by a Bank Cashier:

"This for deposit, please," requested the local business man who slid a sheaf of bills and a book across the counter of the teller's wicket in a downtown bank this morning.

"And how many bottles do you wish to add to the account today?" grinned the friendly teller as he glanced through the book and slid it back to the well known customer.

The second glance by the local man was sufficient to disclose that the book tendered so casually and automatically, was a liquor permit book at the Ontario Liquor Commission store on East Bridge street, but distinctly out of place on the teller's counter of the bank.

FEW PEOPLE IN CANADA outside of the immediate locale of the story will remember the incidents concerning the building of several deep-sea trawlers by the Canada Car and Foundry Company for the French government twenty years ago, and the arrival at Fort William of a party of 120 French sailors to take the completed trawlers overseas. The story as told by the Port Arthur News-Chronicle is very interesting but on ccount of happening in the closing years of the war received little publicity beyond Port Arthur and Fort William. Here's the story as told by the News-Chronicle:

> The trawlers, small ships built for coastal work and commonly used in the war for mine sweeping and kindred duty, were not omplete on the arrival of the sailors despatched from France. Consequently, they had several weeks to wait. During that time the men became familiar on streets of the two cities. In their natty sailor garb, carefree, happy young fellows, talking a foreign tongue, they attracted much attention. Many individuals and organizations arranged various forms of entertainment and the French Sailors, as they were commonly called, became quite well known and popular.
> When the trawlers were declared ready for delivery, the season was well on into November. The fall season storms were at their height on Lake Superior. Forty sailors were assigned to each of the craft, although they could have been navigated as well by crews of ten or twelve. Canadian pilots were on board. Three of the little ships constituted one group which pulled out from Fort William.
> Of these three, two have never been heard from since. Neither lifeboat, raft, piece of wreckage or body has been found from any one of them. It was simply a case of ships sailing out into the open lake and disappearing with their eighty or more sailors, their war graves being the unknown depths of some part of Lake Superior.
> Various theories were advanced in explanation of the disappearance. One was that the craft had been wrecked on the shoal that lies obtween Passage Island and Michipicoten, sometimes described as the Nichol shoal and believed to have been the cause of many unexplained wrecks on Lake Superior. More generally accepted was the belief that the trawlers, hurriedly constructed at a war time plant, which was at most temporary, in that it was not an established shipyard, were simply unable to withstand the storms which blow up on Lake Superior every fall.
> Under other than war conditions, there probably would have been an inquiry, but there was none in this instance.
> It was just another eighty men sacrificed to the demon war. The mothers who mourned were only some of the million mourning mothers of France.
> The other trawlers, some leaving at different dates, reached the lower lakes and seacoast of Canada but it is understood none of them ever saw French waters. The war was over soon and the craft were not needed, even if they could have crossed the Atlantic. Just what finally became of them is not a matter of local record.
> But as long as war memories remain among those who were resident here at the time among them will be that of those young men who spent several weeks awaiting that fatal journey, under pay of a few cents per day from the French government while the men who worked at building the craft which were to be their coffins received wages of $10 to $12 per day or more.

MATANUSKA VALLEY IN ALASKA is the scene of one of Uncle Sam's most notable experiments. A picked body of farmers and artizans, all on the ragged edge of destitution, were selected and sent to Alaska to form a colony and make good, assisted by Uncle Sam's experts and abundant money Passing through the usual turmoil of experiments of this kind and banishing malcontents who did their best to ruin the infant colony, Matanuska is now on its feet but still suffering from growing pains. Walter Pippel, who landed with the first contingent of 200 farmers, with a capital of $54, and became Matanuska's star farmer, has been kicking over the traces, and causing worry to the elected representatives of the municipal majority. All produce is supposed to be handled in a co-operative manner with machinery devised for that purpose, but Farmer Hippel has been marketing his own crops, going in person to various Alaskan centres and marketing his own goods. Reminded that he had contracted to use the co-operative and pay five per cent for the service Farmer Pippel blew up. He said that in two years he had made $11,000 by his own hard work, had no intention of disgorging $550. He got up at five o'clock every morning while some of his neighbors slept until ten—here in Matanuska, said he, "the man who does is supposed to support the man who does not. To the best of my knowledge there is only one country in the world dedicated to that principle, and it's not the U.S.A."

LOOKING BACKWARD

20 YEARS AGO

DEC. 17TH, 1918

At the 'Prentice Boys' Hall a very jolly evening was spent by members of the Belleville Carpet Bowling Club. A league match was played by teams skipped by R. Sills and P. K. Fisher. The match was keenly contested; the final score was 38 to 23 in favor of the team skipped by P. K. Fisher. The following composed the teams P. K. Fisher, skip; J. W. Robinson, E. W. Fenn, H. A. Lennox, F. Naylor and R. Grote. R. Sills, skip; B. O. Frederick, B. F. Butler, A. H. Benson, W. Parrish and W. Tugwell.

Lieut. Geo. S. Mundy, Johnston Camp, Jacksonville, Florida, is here to spend Christmas with Mr. and Mrs. Rowland.

30 YEARS AGO

DEC. 17TH, 1908

It is reported that an arrangement may be made with the Women's Christian Association to manage the Isolation Hospital.

Mr. Walter Alford is home from Newmarket, Ont., to spend a few days. At present he is engaged in building a college at Newmarket for the Society of Friends. The estimated cost is $100,000.00.

It is not likely that "Miss Belleville" will find a Collegiate Institute in her stocking this Christmas.

Ald. Green states that he will not be a candidate for re-election at the coming elections. This is to be regretted as he is a good ladlerman.

Ald. Panter is gaining supporters every day and he will most likely be the next Mayor of Belleville.

The sleighing is very good; a little more snow, however, would do no harm.

Mrs. J. W. Miller of Cleveland, Ohio, is visiting her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Salle, Moira Street.

DEC. 17TH, 1898

Owing to the condition of the roads, there being neither good sleighing nor wheeling, the attendance at the market today was not up to expectations. The inside of the building, however, was filled with a large supply of poultry which commanded high prices. Following are some of the prices: Turkeys 75 cents to $1.50; geese 45 cents to 60 cents each; ducks 60 cents to 80 cents per pair; chickens 35 cents to 50 cents per pair; fresh eggs were scarce and sold as high as 24 cents per dozen; butter 16 cents to 18 cents per pound; potatoes 75 cents per bag.

Mr. Arthur Halstead of Owasso, Mich., is visiting his uncle and aunt, Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Ketchapaw.

Messrs H. W. Sierichs and T. Wallace of the local post office staff, were successful in passing the recent civil service examinations.

50 YEARS AGO

DEC. 17TH, 1888

Mr. T. O. Bolger, City Engineer, Kingston, is a visitor in the city.

Mr. W. S. Drewry, Dominion Land Surveyor of this city, will leave for Ottawa tomorrow, where he will prepare his report covering his explorations in the Rocky Mountains. He will remain in Ottawa during the winter.

Mr. H. Corby and Mr. W. H. Biggar are spending a short time in New York City.

Mr. C. S. Hostage, who left today for the Old Country where he will visit friends, was called on last evening by friends at his quarters in the Hub Hotel and presented with a handsome gold locket suitably engraved.

The Origin of Vaccination

The outbreak of smallpox in St. Thomas, and the fears of Chatham's Medical Officer of Health Dr. A. E. Northwood, that it is not an impossibility for a similar outbreak to occur here, has aroused increased interest in vaccination against this dread disease.

It may be of interest to learn something about the evolution of vaccination, which has proven such a boon to humanity in protecting people against this dangerous malady. Dr. R. Cameron Stewart of Montreal in the Canadian Health Review, has performed a notable service to the public health of the country by his account of the evolution of vaccination against smallpox and by recording the earliest vaccinations performed in what is now Canada.

Jenner, who discovered vaccination in 1796, gained the idea that cowpox might prevent smallpox, from overhearing the chance remark of a dairy-maid to the effect that she could not have smallpox because she had had cowpox. There had long been a tradition in parts of England that inoculation with cowpox was a preventive of the, at the time, common and fatal disease smallpox. As early as 1174, according to the inscription on the headstone of Benjamin Jesty in the churchyard at Worth in Dursetshire, this man had successfully vaccinated his wife and children with cowpox. Jenner put a vague belief on a scientific basis. He demonstrated that cowpox, which is smallpox modified by its passage through the cow, is a mild disease with a local eruption, that it may be transferred readily and safely from man to man and that it prevents smallpox.

The smallpox of India, the Far East and North Africa is virulent. It is called variola major, while that found in Canada, the United States, England, the West Indies, Brazil and South Africa is called variola minor, also known as alastrim or ammass.

All Canadian smallpox is not mild. In 1927, the city of Windsor, Ontario, had an outbreak of malignant smallpox. Happily through the vigilance of the local medical officer of health it was limited to 67 cases, but the character of the disease may be judged by the fact that, of the 67, 32 died within a few days after the affection appeared. We are too slack in vaccination in Canada. One of these days we may have a salutary lesson in the shape of a virulent epidemic. The only way in which this may be avoided is by having our small children vaccinated early in life. The best time is at 6 months of age. It should be done simultaneously with the toxoiding against diphtheria, a measure which has proved so valuable in the prevention of this malady. The article of Dr. Stewart indicates that our forbearers in this country were alive to the dangers of smallpox and that they took advantage of the discovery of Jenner. —Chatham News.

That Body of Yours

By James W. Barton, M.D.

As the cause of psoriasis—white raised patches of scales on the skin—is unknown, physicians have tried various methods of treatment. Treatment included the use of Xrays, ammoniated mercury ointment applied to the patches once a day or every other day, arsenic internally in the form of Fowler's solution beginning with two or three drops daily gradually increasing up to ten drops and then decreasing to the two or three drops daily.

Although diet was considered a factor it was not until the war (1914 to 1918) that it was definitely shown that when the amount of fat eaten was decreased, the cases of psoriasis improved or were completely cured. As the scales in psoriasis contain a large amount of fat, it showed that when fat was removed from the diet or greatly decreased, psoriasis likewise disappeared or improved because there was less fat eaten to supply the little white pearly scales.

Dr. J. Gate and his associates in Paris, in Annals of Dermatology and Syphilis, report their invesaigation of a number of cases of psoriasis by the use of diets very low in fat. All foods containing more than 30 per cent of fat were forbidden and only foods containing 3 to 12 per cent of fat were allowed.

Foods containing 30 or more per cent of fat are spiced beef, ham, head cheese, pork chops, spare ribs, salt pork, pork sausage, lard, butter, American cheese Swiss cheese, egg yolk, potato chips, practically all nuts.

Foods containing from 3 to 12 per cent of fat are—round steak, dried beef, mutton kidney, practically all fish except salmon, turbot, catfish, mackerel, young chicken, quail, buttermilk, cottage cheese, skimmed milk, egg white cereals and flours, breads and crackers, all vegetables, all fruits, all soups (canned).

These investigators found that in these cases of psoriasis using these foods with a low percentage of fat lost but little weight.

Tests made during the time of the improvement of cure showed, in the majority of cases, a great reduction in the amount of cholesterol (substance rich in fat) in the blood.

Despite the improvement and cure in a number of cases by this fat free or low fat diet, these research physicians think that the other forms of treatment—Xrays, arsenic internally and ammoniated mercury externally—should be used together with this fat free or low fat diet.

Memories Are So Unreliable

One of the hardest things to realise is that, as we grow older, we ourselves become historical documents. At 50 or a little beyond we have witnessed half a century of the world's progress or deterioration. Within us is the record of cause and effect in the past and the development of the future if we could only learn to interpret what we have seen. One reason why this is difficult is that we are so completely confused by the complexity of the present in which we are compelled to live. Another is that our memories are so tricky and unreliable.

Every one is familiar with the demonstration in psychology in which the professor arranges a fake murder in the class room. Every student testifies to different details. One remembers the "murderer" as hatless. Another insists that he wore a fedora. One hears only a single shot, others remember two or three. We excuse these variations on the ground of shock or confusion. We think we could have remembered the details correctly if we could have had them in slow motion or have assimilated them in an orderly manner. But we are mistaken even there.

There is another test which any one can make for himself to show that the memory is a prankster at best. Try to reconstruct the most familiar room in the house in which you lived when eight years old, or 10 or even 15. One's powers of observation should be normal at that time. Yet all sorts of unexpected gaps and difficulties will arise unless one happens to be living still in the same home. The furniture, of which we think we recall every line, will readily rearrange itself—that is, it will fall into approximate order. But can one be sure that no piece is missing? What color was the cushion in the big chair? Those small side chairs, now—what type were they? What was the pattern of the wallpaper? What were the subjects of the pictures and how many were there? How high from the floor were the windows. Was the floor dark or light and as it covered by a carpet or a rug? Test the accuracy of your memory with a diagram. You may be surprised when you begin to draw it.—New York Times.

Song of the Bells

High over Rangoon, towering in its scores of spires and minarets and domes, rises the mighty Shwe Dagon, Mecca of all Buddhist pilgrims and to them so sacred that you may walk about it only in bared feet. Not even the thinnest of slippers are permissible here.

The Shwe Dagon is really far more than a single shrine. It is a whole village of them, the centre with a tower more than two hundred feet high that glows and flames at the tip with what are declared to be a million dollars' worth of priceless genuine rubies. Mark how the far-come pilgrims cluster about its base, men, women and little children kneeling there, their faces alight with the serenity that comes of satisfied aspirations and contented hearts. They have come, it may be, from the distant north, walked hundreds of miles through jungle and across sun-baked plain in order to pay homage at the foremost shrine of their faith.

Others have perhaps come from lands other than Burma, itself, possibly even from Japan, or from the forests of Siam. Nor are there lacking occasional European Buddhists, white men and women at the temple of a thousand bells.

But for the most part within the great Shwe Dagon there is no particular atmosphere of solemnity nor gravity of contemplation. A few minutes of that at one or another of the individual shrines and then the pilgrims become much more like holiday-makers. In the vast temple enclosure are shops and curio-stalls, vendors of all sorts of objects both sacred and secular, a free resthouse for far-come and indigent pilgrims, places where you can buy everything from a tiny ivory Buddha to a genuine ruby.

There is freedom of movement, of converse and social intercourse, but it is all in a kind of undertone that never swells into boisterousness. Children play quietly about the nooks and terraces of the shrines, elders squat in calm discussion at the base of the jewel-tipped central tower, pilgrims from far away eat their simple fare on benches beside the marble-flagged promenades. And ever through the hours of the hot day and the sweet refreshing night the bells, large and small, peal and tinkle. Always in the soft breeze the tiny silver bells at the tips of the towers and the minarets blend in harmony tender and devout. Unceasingly the song of a thousand bells of the mighty Shwe Dagon whispers benignly to the followers of the Gautama and bids them seek Nirvana through a closer adherence to his teachings.

And so, disregarding the fact that the Shwe Dagon is not, perhaps, in every detail a thing of unblemished beauty and that the Asiatic throng partakes in some respects of characteristics of the East not altogether in accord with Occidental prejudices, you wander about shoeless and stockingless, contemplating with pleasure the delights of rich coloring, brilliant gems and exotic Oriental architecture, above all the serene benignity that seems to prevade everything. You take pleasure and find cheer in the amiability that marks the social intercourse of all these far-come and varied peoples, these eastern races gathered here to listen to the song of a thousand bells.—M. T. G. in Christian Science Monitor.

DOCTOR'S HOPE

Middle-aged people are the hope of public health authorities in the drive to lengthen the "expectation of life" according to the Department of Pensions and National Health at Ottawa. "We may extend the life span much further if people in middle age will only pay more attention to health," it was stated by National Health officers.

During the past century the expectation of life has been lengthened from 28 to 58 years, due to the control of infectious diseases. Doctors say people suffering from kidney troubles, diabetes, high blood pressure and other diseases associated with middle age, could prolong their lives by sensible living.

KIWANIS CLUB TO PROVIDE RINKS FOR CHILDREN

Reference is Made to Certain Housing Conditions in Belleville by Two Trustees at Board of Education Meeting

Members of the Board of Education spend through business briskly last evening at the last meeting of the year, adjourning shortly before ten o'clock until the inaugural meeting of the new Board on the evening of the third Friday in January.

In his retiring address, chairman Chas. Hyde who will relinquish that office this year thanked members for the generous support that had been given him during the past year.

"It has been a year of heavy responsibilities, but one that has been enjoyed by myself. At this time I have a feeling of relief that my term as chairman has expired, but it is with regret that I will sever my office as chairman. It has been a year of enjoyable experience, a year which has been marked with the utmost harmony and co-operation from every member of the Board, officials and staff of the schools. All have been most efficient and obliging. This is appreciated greatly, because I do not believe that any chairman could do very much without this help and assistance so freely given.

Two New Members Named

"To the incoming chairman, whoever he may be, I can only ask that he be given the same loyal support and co-operation," added Chairman Hyde.

"We will be sorry to lose the valuable services of Mr. Percy McGuire this next year, and Mr. Allin, through the retirement of Mr. McGuire and the election of Mr. Allin to city council. But we will welcome two new members, Mr. Fred Deacon and Dr. Locke, who will, I am sure, be valuable additions to the Board."

Board last evening concurred in the resolution that Mr. G. N. Maybee be engaged as full time music teacher for the schools at a salary of $800 per annum, presented by the committee. The report recommending an increase in salary for Mr. Hunter, was referred back to the Vocational Committee.

Next year's estimates will contain provision for the erection of a new fence on the grounds of Queen Mary School, and also provide for sidewalks at King George School, as recommended in the report of the Property Committee. All applications for positions on school staffs will be filed for the incoming Board.

A letter received from the Kiwanis Club of the city thanked members of the Board for the interest in and the privilege which has been allowed in the matter of the construction of open air skating rinks for the school children of the public schools. The Club will construct the rinks from its own funds, and supply the water. The rinks will be kept cleared of snow by the city department of public works, it has been advised. Principals of each school will have charge of the deportment of those using the rinks, it was recommended, which raised the question by Trustee Russ Wotten: "Does that mean that the principals will have to stay there until nine and ten o'clock every night?"

Principals to Manage Rinks

Present insurance carried by the Board will take care of any accidents which might occur on the rinks, it was believed by members.

"These rinks," questioned Principal L. A. Kells, "will they be public, open and free to others from over the hills and under the hills, or will they be just for the school children of the schools for which they are built?"

Members reached the conclusion that the rinks would be very much open to all children who might care to use them. Like the playgrounds explained the Rev. Mr. Payne.

"All children of the city, from six to sixty," agreed Trustee Reg. Moncrieff.

"There's going to be difficulty there," warned Principal W. G. Anderson. "Someone will have to be in charge of them to prevent the big boys from playing hockey and chasing the little boys off them...."

"The rinks will not be for hockey" emphatically announced members.

"As I see it," further explained Mr. Anderson, these rinks are for children, the little ones especially."

Get Them Into the Game

"The Kiwanians, as I see it, simply wanted to provide the children of the city with an open air piece of ice upon which they could enjoy the winter weather. Let the kids get out there on their skates and take the knocks. Let us get away from the idea of steam-heated rooms and sandwiches and coffee, and do as they do in the West, where generations of hockey players and skaters have been born into the great winter game," stated Trustee Rev. Mr. Payne.

"But we don't want to put the onus of the successful operation of these rinks all on the principals of the school," pointed out Trustee Wotten.

The Board supported the recommendation of one principal that two pupils be expelled from school and that the Children's Aid Society take over the case. Chronic tardiness to school, and being absent from classes, together with home surroundings which are not of the best decided members that official interest be taken in the case. "The children would be much better off" it was agreed by Trustees.

Under the heading of "Enquiries" Trustee Moncrieff asked: "Has anything at all been done since the subject first came up some months ago, about cleaning up conditions for the children of this city?

"It's a shame to have some of our people running around yelling about saving democracy for the country when right here in Belleville we have conditions among children that if applied to domestic animals, would not be tolerated by the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals.

"That is up to the Board of Health or the city council, not the School Board," informed Trustee Dr. Kinnear.

Social Worker Employed

Trustee H.B. Fetterley, who some time ago undertook a personal investigation of conditions in some of the city's wards, advanced an explanation.

"Some time ago, as you know, a committee was named from the School Board, to work with us, the Ministerial Association and the Board of Health on this matter of investigation. We were not given all the help we should have been given by the Board," he charged, "and though we were to hold a later meeting, but three turned up. The matter was dropped, and nothing, as far as I know has been done since.

"This matter is up to more than the Board of Health or the School Board, it is up to the citizens. Conditions are as Mr. Moncrieff has said. And we, of the Children's Aid Society, are going to take steps to take the children out of these homes if we have to. then they will become a charge on the city, we don't want to do this unless it becomes necessary.

"The local Children's Aid Society is about to employ a special social service worker, and we expect to do great things," promised Trustee Fetterley.

Before adjournment was made, Chairman Chas. Hyde wished members of the Board to know that the settlement after an accident which occurred on the playgrounds near Queen Mary School was not paid by the Board when awarded in court, but by the insurance company which carried the insurance. "It tra," he made clear.
tra,' he made clear.

BENNETT, MANION MEET AT BANQUET

New Leader Pays Tribute to Mr. Bennett's Service to Canada

Toronto, Dec. 17 (CP)—Two old companions on speaking tours, Conservative Leader R. J. Manion and his predecessor, Rt. Hon. R. B. Bennett, revived memories of past associations today as they awaited their second joint public appearance since they exchanged roles at the National Conservative Convention last July.

The party chieftains spoke last night at the annual banquet of the Commercial Travellers Association of Canada here and left at once for Montreal where they address the banquet of the Dominion Commercial Travellers Association.

Services to Canada.

Dr. Manion paid tribute to Mr. Bennett's services to Canada during his five years as prime minister and expressed the hope he would have many years of happiness and further opportunities to serve Canada and the Empire.

Mr. Bennett said Dr. Manion was devoting his life to a cause "and I know what that means". From those who believed in Dr. Manion and his cause, the country demanded service and only by the rendering of such service could democracy and freedom be preserved.

The former leader said he had come not as a guest but as an honorary member of the association to say goodbye before leaving the country.

Armaments Necessary Today.

In the present disturbed condition of the world great armaments were necessary, said Dr. Manion. The democracies desired peace but it was the dictatorships which had the say as to whether there would be peace or war.

If war came and Canada took part there should be equal sacrifices by all. There should be no profiteering in patriotism. A few should not be permitted to profit while others sacrificed their lives. Believing this to be the sentiment of the Canadian people, Dr. Manion said he had worked out two proposals relating to the manufacture of armaments which might seem radical to some but which would be adopted eventually.

Elimination of War Profits.

"All arms and munitions which we need for the direct defence of Canada," he said, "should either be manufactured by the government itself or under the complete control of the government with profits eliminated.

"There should be complete control of profits in the manufacture of arms and munitions of all kinds for the United Kingdom."

Dr. Manion considered these proposals fair because they provided opportunity for private enterprise and for service to Canada and assured co-operation and a fair deal to the Empire while at the same time enabling Canadian producers to share in the immense British contracts for arms which might be expected.

WINNIPEG FIREMEN ACQUIRE UNIQUE LADDER

Winnipeg's fire department will acquire this hydraulic, all-steel aerial ladder, which was demonstrated recently in Toronto. Equipped with siderails and telephone communication with the ground, it is the only ladder of its kind on the continent.

Santa Claus Briefs

Goderich, Ont., Dec. 17 (CP)—The Goderich Public Utilities Commission marked December power bills paid and returned the payments, totalling $4,000, to Goderich electricity useds. Said Chairman E. R. Wigle: "It's just a Christmas present from the local Commission."

Strtford, Ont., Dec. 17 (CP)—City Council caught the Christmas spirit as carol singers sang on the city hall steps. Staid aldermen and even the City Clerk, W. H. Dorland, hummed and whistled the hymns as the tunes drifted into the council room.

Toronto, Dec. 17 (CP)—Christmas cheer has been spread among many Great War Veterans here this year. More than $1,000 have been given post office work.

Kingston, Dec. 17 (CP)—Kingston hasn't had a fatal motor accident so far this year and police don't intend to have the record broken if they can help it. They announce they are going to "crack down" on drinking drivers during the Yuletide season.

Greenville, Mich., Dec. 17 (CP)—Jack Stephens, aged two, found snooping for Christmas presents does not pay. While his parents were away, he crawled into a closet where his Christmas presents were hidden. He lit a match to help him search. The fire that followed destroyed all his Christmas presents.

Brampton, Ont., Dec 17 (CP) — Many Canadians, judging by orders received at the Dale Estate Conservatories here, will say it with flowers this Christmas. The firm will send out 100,000 roses this season.

GOOD PROGRAM AT THE CAPITOL

Eight Contestants Vie for Honors and Quite Well Received

"The wheel of fortune whirls", whether in New York or in Belleville, when amateurs contest for recognition and last night was no exception to the rule at the Capitol Theatre, when the third in a series of "Tour for Talent" programs was presented through the sponsorship of Ken Soble's well-known Canadian radio broadcast, the contestants competing for higher honors on the Soble broadcast.

Last night saw ten amateurs appear aside from the return of last week's winner, the captivating six-year-old Barbara Neal of Gananoque, whose song and dance act again brought encores and won for her a gold watch. Barbara's older sister, Miss Hazel Neal, was recipient of a camera as second prize on last week's program.

More encores than usual were in evidence for last night's amateurs when Jack Mann, singing yodeller, George Gulliver and Cecil Rogers, guitar and accordion, Vic Whitely, comic song and George Shephard, boy tenor singing "Cathedral in the Pines", all brought encores from an appreciative audience, that filled the Capitol Theatre, so popular are these Friday night "Tour for Talent" programs meeting with public approval.

The complete program was as follows:

1. Joseph Harvey—accordion solo.
2. Norma Coleman — song and dance.
3. Ethel Rush—song.
4. Jack Mann—singing yodeller.
5. Betty Flynn and Dolores Clapp—clarinet solos.
6. Vic Whitely—song.
7. Geo. Gulliver and Cecil Rogers—guitar and accordion duet.
8. George Shephard—song.

In his own inimitable style Tommy Mason most capably conducted the duties of master-of-ceremonies and accompanist and kept the audience well entertained with his witty remarks and comments. Another "Tour for Talent" program will be presented at the Capitol Theatre next Friday night.

ROBERT R. TURNEY

ROBERT R. TURNEY, formerly of Belleville, returns to his home town as one of America's most distinguished and brilliant pioneers in the modern camera field. Born 35 years ago in Belleville, Mr. Turner dabbled in the various branches of the arts such as music, oil portraiture, water colors and etching, until he finally found the true medium of expressing his manifold talents through the magic of the camera lens.

Migrating to the United States at an early age, Mr. Turney served under the foremost camera experts of the present day, including Gordon Conner of Cleveland, who is nationally known and famous for his outstanding portraits of screen, stage and radio stars. Rebelling against the rigid rules of "still" photography, he organized his own studio combining the warmth of the painters art, with the cold precision of the cameraman's skill to produce portraits that combine the true beauty of his subjects, with all the subtle nuances of their personalities.

Mr. Turney is one of those rare personalities in camera world who does not try to make everyone look vacuously "pretty," but prefers through the inspired use of innumerable lights, technical skill and the most up to the minute equipment, to create a mood, then in one perfect moment, to capture it. The resulting dramatic studies of individual glamour and personality fairly breathe with life.

Mr. Turney has exhibited at the leading salons of America, and his camera portraits of beautiful women have won for him an enviable reputation, comparable only to the top men in his profession.

Mr. Turney has long wanted to return to his home town to open a modern studio, and Belleville is indeed fortunate in having the opportunity of securing his undoubted camera genius for their fine photographs. Mr. Turney's camera portraits are really startling and must be seen to be appreciated. A visit to his studio on Bridge St., to inspect his work, will prove an event of rare pleasure.

DR. DAFOE'S COLUMN on the Quintuplets and the Care of Your Children

Good Habits Taught Early Make Good Children—and Happy Parents

I want to go over a few of the habits we are trying to have the Quintuplets form.

I've told you again and again that, since we are all creatres of habit, if we can teach our children good habits early, we have done something really important in shaping their adult lives.

It is so easy to teach a small child good habits that it is really a shame not to. It isn't hard to teach them when they are young to eat and like the proper foods; to train them in proper bowel and bladder control; to teach them to take exercise; to train them not to be selfish.

To do all this requires only one thing on the part of a parent—steady, patient care. That isn't easy I know, but it pays. It means being on the job every day of the year.

As you no doubt know, the Quints had their tonsils out a short time ago. Well, we had to keep them in bed for quite a while, and while they were sick the routines which they follow were disturbed. When they got up and about again, we found that our discipline had suffered.

They had had a brief interval when things sort of went any way they wanted, and they just didn't relish going back to doing things at a certain time and in a certain way. Of course, it isn't taking any time to get them back to the routines, but it shows how vigilant you must be.

I know lots of people don't like the idea of routines. They feel they wouldn't want to follow them themselves, but it pays dividends with children. Take the Quints, for example; they have sturdy, straight bodies, sparkling eyes and rosy cheeks. Your children can be just the same.

Mealtime is a very important time in the life a child. If you can manage it, see that they get a little rest before they sit down to the table, for if they are rested they eat better and their digestive organs do much better worg.

Parents should never bicker or quarrel at the table. It is very bad for the child who is listening as well as bad for your own digestion and disposition. If you must quarrel, wait until the child isn't around. By that time chances will be you have forgotten all about your little grievance. Nagging is one of the worst faults in marriage, and it doesn't matter who does it. Certainly you can't have a happy home with a nagger present. And if the home isn't happy, how can you have happy children.

Don't coax your child to eat if he is well; of course, it is sometimes necessary to coax the child who is ill. If one of the Quints won't eat her spinach, it is quietly removed and she isn't coaxed to eat it. But neither is she given anything to replace it.

One important thing: Formulate a set of rules for your child's health, then never break them. Be consistent day after day.

Christmas Trees

BRIDGE STREET S. S.

Christmas entertainments with their impressive symbolism and pageantry have not lost any of their charm and beauty, insofar as Bridge Street United Church is concerned at least.

For last night nearly six hundred children and parents filled the Sunday School rooms to capacity where a variable program staged by members of the various classes, children's and youths' was enjoyed to the limit by the large gathering.

The Sunday School Auditorium was appropriately decorated with Christmas colors. Two large illuminated Christmas trees occupied prominent places and were the cynosure of childish eyes all evening. A jolly Santa Claus was the signal for audible enthusiasm on the part of the children. Candy was distributed after the program which was held under the chairmanship of Mr. Clayton Burr, Sunday School Superintendent.

The program:

Joy to the world the Lord is come.— Opening.

Prayer—Dr. Semple.

Operetta—Primary department.

Reading: "Buying Christmas Presents"—Audrey Correll.

CHRIST CHURCH

MUSIC, mirth and Christmas melodies combined to feature the annual Christmas entertainment of Christ Church Sunday School in the church Parish Hall last evening when a large audience of parents and adults enjoyed, with interest, the splendid Christmas entertainment program presented by the scholars of the Sunday School.

Mr. Everett Smith, Superintendent of the Sunday School, most capably handled the duties of chairman, his injected witty remarks always being appreciated. The evening was opened with prayer by Rev. G. G. Wright, rector of Christ Church and later the evening was given over to the entertainment of the kiddies, which reached its zenith upon the arrival of Santa Claus who dashed into the capacity-filled hall in all of his Toyland mythical glory.

During Santa's stay candies and favours were given each member of the Sunday School, while special prizes were awarded scholars for merit and attendance during the year. Rev. Wright personally congratulated the Sunday School teachers of Christ Church for their untiring efforts throughout the year and added praise to those who made the annual Christmas entertainment so highly successful last evening.

The program, presented by the Sunday School members, consisted of the following numbers, all of which were highly commented upon was as follows:

TABERNACLE CHURCH S.S.

A CAPACITY audience was present last evening to enjoy the Christmas entertainment presented by the pupils of Tabernacle Sunday School. They were welcomed by Mr. A. D. Archibald, superintendent of the school. Following the opening chorus, "Ring Christmas Bells" by the school, Rev. D. T. McClintock offered prayer.

The primary class sang very sweetly and softly "Baby Dolls" and "Away in a Manger" as an encore. The boys of Bill Brennan's class presented "A Boy's Code".

Mrs. Arhibald and Mrs. Johnstone's classes were seen in "Bo-Peep's Christmas Party" to which all the fairy-story children came to bring gifts for little Sue, an orphan who wanted a mother for her Christmas gift.

Mr. Taylor's boys did a snow ball drill; after they had finished their shovelling they snow-balled the audience who returned the compliment to them directly.

"Mother Goose" was depicted by Mrs. McIntosh's class portraying the difficulties of the Old Woman who lived in the Shoe and had so many children she didn't know what to do.

A Christmas pudding was made by the girls of Miss Fisher's class. It contained all the ingredients for a successful Christmas.

Mr. Reid's boys were "Weary Willies" or Knights of the oRad who are not afraid of cops at least not until one arrives.

The C.G.I.T. groups presented "The Land of Story Books". Miss Henley's group doing "The Royal Breakfast" with a vocal accompaniment by Miss Jean Shorey. Mrs. Wishart's group did "Winnie the Pooh" where Pooh got stuck from eating too much. Miss Templeton's group presented "Cinderella" who won the favor of Prince Charming and became his bride.

Miss Wardner's group depicted very effectively the trial scene from "Toad of Toad Hall".

All the parts were well taken and the costumes were very effective, showing a great deal of preparation.

Santa Claus arrived in time to distribute the candies and gifts to all the children who were very pleased to renew their acquaintances with the genial old gentleman.

Fashion Flashes

By ALICE ALDEN

THE gold standard still obtains for evening clothes. A grand dress is of cloth of molten gold with a tint of copper in it. It is smocked at either side of the bodice, and to form two curved inserts at either side of the waistline, the smockings enclose a diamond shaped piece of plain lame. The skirt is full gathered in front.

Looking down, one sees the smartest feet in severe black antelope. A lovely shoe is of black antelope, the leather stretchable and cut high and fitted like a glove.

New honors for smoky black, silky caracul this season. A youthful lovely hat is cut short and very full in the back. A little standing collar ties with a grosgrain bow, and there is a big, squashy caracul muff.

Score on score of new designs for evening bags abound this season. The nicest are without too much glitter. A square bag of inky black antelope has narrow bands of tiny rhinestones at each end and is lined with silver or gold kidskin.

Nice going in the country wearing a cape suit of heavy tweed checked in deep blue, beige and plum, the tweed with a hairy surface. The checked cape is worn over a jerkin of plum-colored suede and the checked tweed skirt.

A jewel of an evening frock, but very modestly priced, is of heavy black sheer, with narrow double shoestring straps on a bodice that is all shirred except for a lozenge-shaped section at the waist. The skirt is gathered in dirndl fashion and at each hip has a long slit pocket bound with rhinestones. A good dress amidst all the impressive numbers.

No Peace If Your Feet Hurt

JUNE LANG
Wears proper shoes and gives her feet good care

By HELEN FOLLETT

WHEN FEET hurt, the world is out of its orbit, sunlight isn't golden and moonlight isn't silvery. When there are tinges in the toes, there's no peace in the soul. Yet, many women endure foot ills year after year, make no attempt to find the cause of their troubles.

Stockings that are a size too small can do almost as much damage as shoes that are too short or too narrow. They throw the toes into a huddle, pressing one against the other—ingrowing nails prove tormenting, soft corns form between the toes. Stockings should be changed daily. They pick up skin moisture that makes the flesh irritated and feverish.

When taking the daily bath, use a heavy brush on the feet. The friction will stimulate the blood streams, make for comfort.

Sensible shoes that have chic can be purchased. Spiked heels are an old story, no longer smarty.

Summer, winter, all the year 'round the complexion is benefited by the free use of some oily cosmetic. This lubricating of the cutaneous covering keeps the surface smooth. Harsh winds play the dickens with pretty faces.

Be fussy about the complexion powder you use. If there is the slightest suggestion of gritty substance, you can know you have not found the right product. A good powder is as fine as the dust on a butterfly's wing.

95 Percent of Pupils Immunized Against Diphtheria

During the school period between November 21st and December 16th., 1,209 pupils were inspected by the School Nurse, of which 540 were rapid classroom inspections to detect communicable conditions it is reported in the regular statement by the Nurse, Miss E. Earshman. Of these pupils 250 were marked at the previous inspection for later observation, and 348 were later observations. Four special physical inspections and 27 vision tests were also held.

On November 21st., 23rd and December 12th and 14th, the second and third toxoid treatments were given to approximately 565 children of which 110 were of pre school age. At the present time well over ninety-five per cent of the school children are immunized against diphtheria, it was stated.

During that period six dental clinics were also held in King George School and two in Queen Victoria, at which 27 children were given special treament.

Two more children have been provided glasses by the Kinsmen Club, stated Miss Earshman, acknowledging with thanks, the work of this local club.

First aid and dressings given in the nurse's office totalled 103.

The incidence of acute communicable diseases at present is: Scarlet Fever one; whooping cough seven, and chicken pox, twelve.

"The nurse's report is always one of the best, that is presented this Board of Education, and again I want to commend Miss Earshman on the important work in which she is engaged", complimented Trustee Rev. A. B. Payne. The same sentiment was echoed by Trustee H. B. Fetterly, who seconded the motion it be accepted, and that due acknowledgment with thanks be paid local clubs, which have assisted in school work.

The Work of the Liver
In Maintaining Health

You may sacrifice the appendix and gall bladder, and do without a kidney, or even the stomach, but the liver is necessary if life is to continue. The liver filters poisons from the blood and removes an excess of sugar which is stored for use in time of need. It secrets bile which is passed into the intestines to keep them active and to aid digestion.

It is readily seen that once the liver goes wrong there are all sorts of troubles, such as, indigestion, constipation and a poisoning of the system which soon brings pain and suffering and serious disease.

Scores of the most serious diseases are prevented by keeping the liver healthy and active and this can readily be accomplished by using Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. It is a fine health habit to use one pill a week as a regulator of the liver, kidneys and bowels, making the dose more frequent if found necessary to keep the bowels active.

Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills are for sale by all druggists or The Dr. A. W. Chase Medicine Co., Limited, Toronto, Canada.

Thomasburg

Thomasburg—The November meeting of Thomasburg United Church Women's Association was held in the vestry of the Church on the afternoon of November 24th. The meeting was opened with the singing of a hymn followed by prayer led by Mrs. George Walker. Scripture reading was taken by Mrs. Henry Morton. The Roll Call was answered by a verse of Scripture. Another hymn was sung after which the officers for the coming year were elected resulting as follows:—President, Mrs. William Vance; Secretary, Mrs. Herman Elliott; Treasurer, Mrs. Melburn Adams; Press Secretary, Mrs. Ed. Way; Pianist, Mrs. James Bateman. The meeting closed with prayer by Mrs. Herrington.

The girls of the C. G. I. T. met on Saturday afternoon at the home of Miss Bessie Calberry for their December meeting and the election of officers.

The president Miss Helen McTaggart was in charge and opened the meeting with the singing of a hymn. Miss Irene Walker took the Scripture lesson, chosen from St. John's Gospel, Chapter 15, verses 9 to 71. The secretary gave the minutes of the previous meeting and the Roll Call was answered with the name of a "Tree". The treasurer Miss Ana Morton gave a financial report of the year's activities.

During the business period arrangements were made for the C. G. I. T. Bazaar.

At the close Bessie served a delicious lunch.

The December meeting of Christ Church Women's Auxiliary was held on Tuesday evening last at the home of the President, Miss Emma Porter with a good attendance and several visitors. The president opened the meeting with the singing of a hymn followed by the Members' Prayer, the Lord's Prayer and special prayers. Mrs. S. D. Prindle took the Scripture lesson. Correspondence included a very interesting report of the Diocese Board meeting held in Kingston and a letter with regard to the Living Message. The President expressed her appreciation to all the members for their part taken in making the Bazaar and Supper a success, the proceeds of which amounted to over seventy-five dollars.

Mrs. H. Mouck and Miss Verna Morton were in charge of the following program: A solo by Mrs. Wesley Prindle; A Christmas reading by Mrs. H. Mouck and a solo by Miss Olive Carleton.

The meeting closed with the singing of an Advent hymn and the president pronounced the Benediction, after which Mrs. Mouck served candy.

Mr. Clarence Carleton was in Toronto on Friday and Saturday representing the local Conservative Association at the Provincial Convention held at the Royal York Hotel.

The Young Canada Conservative Club held a very enjoyable dance in the Oddfellows Hall here on Tuesday evening. The proceeds of which were very gratifying.

The annual meeting of the Moira Valley Cheese patrons was held on Thursday afternoon. Mr. J. Dudgeon has been re-engaged as Cheese maker for another season.

Mrs. R. Copeland of Roslin is spending a short time with Mrs. Clare Carter.

Mrs. J. E. Brown spent a couple of days recently with friends in Belleville.

Mrs. Clare Carter and baby son arrived home from Belleville hospital on Monday.

Mr. and Mrs. Harvey Vance, Milton and Lorne of Flinton were guests on Sunday of Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Vance.

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Holbert were Sunday guests at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Stevenson at Halloway.

Maximum Thrill, Skill, Speed Of Hockey Yet to be Realized Says Patrick in Fanning Bee

Sees End of Behind-the-Blueline Defencemen Very Soon

FAR ADVANCED

Streamlining Hockey Teams Does Not Mean End of Stars

(By Alan Randal, Canadian Press Staff Writer).

New York, Dec. 17 (CP)—In keeping with the times, the National Hockey League tempo undoubtedly has quickened over the years but Lester Patrick, long a man of vision, reported today the maximum of thrill, skill and speed is yet to come.

This is exactly a new theory for Lester. Rather it is a reiteration of a gospel as told the career of this high priest of New York Rangers. It is the more interesting though, when one considers that only this season Mervyn (Red) Dutton wrote on hockey as it is today and the New York Americans manager termed it "the fastest game on earth."

For the start of his argument Patrick turned to hockey's cradle days. For the clincher he pointed to present-day gate receipts—juicy dollar signs that few can ignore.

Still Main Object

"The man who invented hockey must first have thought of just one thing—to put the puck, of whatever they played with then, in the net," said Lester during what he termed a crystal gazing session. "That still must be the main object of the game. Defence must be secondary.

"Furthermore, that seems to be the idea of the fans as a whole. The public pays the freight and they appear to want goals, even if a team is in front. And clubs that play that kind of hockey show increased gate receipts to prove the point."

Lester admitted he was referring particularly to his own Rangers because they get liberal doses of his more speed, more goals gospel from one season's end to the other. But, while stating it paid dividends in dollars and cents, Patrick confessed his theory, in its entirety, possibly was too far avanced for the N.H.L. in its present stage of development.

Sees End of Defencemen

He foresaw the end of the behind-the-blueline defencemen, hockey's blocking back. They must give way to secondary offensive men who are as good for a goal as the forwards they back up. Lester figured his own son Lynn as the type of forward most admirably suited to taking over defence duties.

Such a move, if and when it comes, would give the Rangers a pair of rushing brothers on the backline, Lynn and Murray Patrick.

And in this connection, boss Patrick said in spite of difficulties connected wth handling brothers, he was all for such combinations. Lester, who should know because he handled Bill and Bun Cook and now has Neil and Mac Colville in addition to the Patricks, said these difficulties were mostly temperamental quirks.

Not End of Stars

Looking into the crystal ball again, the Rangers boss disagreed with the oft-heard contention that streamlining of hockey presaged the end of the individual stars such as Eddie Shore, King Clancy, Lionel Conacher, the late Howie Morenz or other greats who have stepped down.

"I don't know who he is," said Lester, "but the star of tomorrow is just around the corner. After all, at first glance, who would have said Morenz would have become the great that he did?"

Ciaco Club Holds Successful Tourney At Recreation Alleys

The bowling tournament sponsored by the Industrial Alcohol Social Club for the employees at the Recreation Alleys last evening was an unqualified success and many of the competitors today are proud possessors of a beautiful turkey, the result of their efficiency on the drives or their luck in the draw. Mr. Wilfrid LaPorte superintendent of the plant at Corbyville, James Boyle of the sales staff, also Mr. Lennox, Gerald Barriage and E. Smith of the Ciaco club members of the Excise staff were present and assisted materially in making the evening one grand success. Leo "Stub" Barrett, manager of the Alleys provided splendid facilities for the large crowd and the whole program was run off long before the midnight hour.

The bowling was not spectacular as many were throwing a bowling ball for the first time but everyone entered into the spirit of the evening and good comradeship and felloship prevailed. Florence Sharpe had the distinction of winning the high three string for the lady bowlers with counts of 224, 213, 184—621 and also the high single for the night but as one bowler could not win two turkeys, Miss Sharpe took the high three string and Miss Hazel Gannon was given a turkey for her single game of 213.

In the men's division "Bill" Johns was high three string with 208, 201, 233—642 but he had to get a lot of wood in his last game for Joe Wilson finished up with 624. Mr. Wilson, however, did not go home empty-handed as his 257 was high single for the night. In the lucky draw the score for the women closest to 244 for three strings was won by Mrs. W. Craig with a count of 236, while two men tied in their section, J. Gannon and Cecil Lloyd had each 313 and the closest score chosen was 294. The names were placed in a hat and Mr. J. Gannon had his name drawn.

Mr. Wilfrid Laporte drew for the eight turkeys to be presented those purchasing tickets at the plant and the winners were Terry Boyle, Gordon Miller, George Sharpe, Vincent Foster, R. Farquharson, Jr., Stephen Sword, Miss Phyllis Aseltine and Joe Chapman. In the second draw for six turkeys, D. Dafoe, Miss Ruth Sheperd, W. Peoples, F. Shortts, J. Stone and W. Rouse were winners.

GOODYEARS DOWN ST. KITTS' CHIEFS IN FAST TUSSLE

Score Sixth Win in Seven Starts With One Game Tied

G-MEN WIN

Down Port Colborne 4-3 Getting Winning Goal on Breakaway

Big Bob Ecclestone, bellowing boss of Toronto Goodyears pored over statistics today and came up with the announcement that if his men down Niagara Falls Brights in a senior "A" Ontario Hockey Association fixture here next Wednesday, they'll have beaten every team in the six-club league at least once.

The Goodyear powerhouse roared on in Toronto last night as the undefeated league leaders smashed the threat of St. Catharines Chiefs 5-1. Hot in their last few games, the Chiefs folded under the relentless drive of the Torontonians. It was Goodyears sixth win in seven starts. They tied one game.

Meanwhile, the up-and-coming Oshawa G-Men, who drew with Goodyears in Oshawa Wednesday, stepped into Port Colborne last night and took a 4-3 overtime decision from the Sailors. The winning goal came on a breakaway during a Port Colborne gang attack.

Results left Toronto far ahead in the league race with thirteen points against eight for Port Colborne and St. Catharines. Oshawa are in the third slot with seven.

Goodyears Have Class.

It was disappointing for St. Catharines, who won four of their last five games. It was a let-down too for many of the crowd of 3,500 who rooted for the Chiefs but who soon realized Goodyears had too much class.

The winners scored a goal in the first period, added three in the second and another in the third. The lone St. Kitts' counter came from the stick of Jack Boyd.

Don Metz, who'll probably go up to Toronto Maple Leafs of the National League next season, counted two for Goodyears, as did Georme Imlach, one of the league's leading scorers. Peanuts O'Flaherty scored the other goal.

Best Game of Season.

Port Colborne fans saw their best game of the season in the see-saw Ports-G-Man battle. The tars outplayed their eastern foes but erratic passing robbed them of several good chances.

Tied 3-3 in overtime, the break came when little Winkie Smith broke away from a Port Colborne sortie and passed to Carl Maundrell after carrying the puck the length of the ice. Maundrell, one of Oshawa's best snipers, beat old Hawse Marsh in the Ports' nets. The goal came after seven minutes of the extra session.

Doc Rowden, veteran rearguard, who scored two, and Doc Dafoe with one, were the other Oshawa marksmen. Leo Fitzgerald was a double scorer for the homesters with Doug Runions, a veteran of the ice lanes, adding the other,

GARRISON WINS OVER PERTH 5-1

Victory Puts Soldiers in Tie With Belleville Redmen

Kingston, Dec. 17.—Kingston Garrison tied Belleville for first place in the George Van Horne hockey series here last night with a 5 to 1 win over Perth. The result put the deadlocked leaders one point in front of the university students at the top of the standing.

Kingston—Goal, Lange; defence, Smith and Carey; centre, Younger-Lewis; wings, Carr-Harris and Belwa; subs, Thurlby, Armishaw, Livie, Mosley, Clarke.

Referee—W. Watts.

Lou Nova Wins Decision in 15 Rounds Over Tommy Farr To Greatly Boost His Stock

Young Californian Gave Tonypandy Terrific Lacing

MAY MEET BAER

First Time Nova Ever Went Fifteen Round Bout

By Gayle Talbot, Associated Press Sports Writer).

New York, Dec. 17 (AP)—Write the name of Lou Nova big in your book, for the young man from Alamenda, Calif., who pounded Tommy Farr for 15 rounds here last night is certain—in time—to be the next world's heavyweight fighting champion.

It might be a year, and it more than likely will be two years before the California kid is ready to knock the wreath off Joe Louis' placid brow. But the 10,000 who saw him wreck the durable Welshman last night will bet that he does it sooner or later.

Nova, tempered in only 25 previous professional fights, gave the veteran Farr a worse shellacking than Farr received from Louis, or from Max Baer or from Jim Braddock. He had the Welshman on the verge of a knockout at the finish.

Took Terrific Beating

For the last two minutes of the 14th round Farr absorbed perhaps the most cruel beating of his long career. A terrific left hook first sent him tottering and brought his guard to his knees, and Nova must have poured a hundred furious blows to his chin and body before the bell finally ended the round.

But Tonypany Tommy stood up. Furthermore, he came out for the final round and lasted through that one, too, though the ringsiders wondered what held him up as Nova lashed him with everything in his arsenal.

"I hoped the referee would stop it in the 14th," said the victor as he lay, dead-tired, in his dressing room afterward. "I was afraid I would hurt him seriously. My, I didn't know any man living could take punches like that."

Ready For Baer

Nova and his manager, Ray Carlin, are ready for Max Baer any time. They are willing to fight Louis within a year.

"I'll confess I was a little tired for the last five rounds," Nova said, "but now that I've gone 15 rounds and whipped a man like Farr I feel I'm over the big hump. Maybe Dempsey and Tunney won't think now that I've been rushed too fast." It was Lous first 15-round match.

Tackled for an opinion on the latest "white hope," Joe said: "He looks mighty good, mighty good."

Only Contempt For Nova

Minneapolis, Minn., Dec. 17 (AP)—Tony Galento, Orange, New Jersey's globular contribution to the prize ring, headed home today bellowing contempt for "rat bum, Lou Nova."

"Gimme Nova and three guys like him," the two-ton terror of the taprooms shouted when he learned of Nova's decision over Tommy Farr in New York last night. "I'll take 'em all at the same time. I'll knock 'em loose from their ankles without even gettin' a sweat up."

Joe Jacobs, Galento's bmanager, backed him up.

"That guy Nova," Jacobs sneered. "Tony'd chase him out of the ring—if we could get him in it."

Galento knocked out Dick Daniels, Minneapolis, in the third round of what was billed as an "exhibition" last night. Angered when Daniels poked him with hard rights to the face, Galento flattened him once with a right over the heart, then warned: "Now will you behave?" When Daniels threw some more punches, Galento repeated the treatment and Daninels stayed down.

Between the Lines

Pursuant to the splendid start made in Juvenile hockey circles last year it is to be hoped some interested parties take up the Juvenile torch and hold it high again this year. It will be recalled Belleville was entered in the Ontario Juvenile Hockey Association last spring with the result that several splendid puck prospects were brought to light. The mentors of Juvenile hockey in Belleville last spring are now fostering a junior "C" team in the O.H.A., leaving the Juvenile kids of the city nigh and dry and without sponsors. Frankly speaking we are firmly convinced of the great possibilities and future of the Ontario Juvenile Hockey Association and hope there are still some sufficiently hockey-minded enough in Belleville to sponsor another Juvenile team in the city this coming season.

The O.J.H.A. is changing its regulations somewhat this year, according to Billie Hughes, local district executive member. Clubs entered will be grouped in a similar manner to the O.H.A. and play will commence much earlier this year than in previous years. The last day of entry is December 21st and if there are those interested in entering a Juvenile team from Belleville, we have official application forms available, as has Mr. Hughes, whose telephone number is 2025. The O.J.H.A. has advanced with rapidity, from a small five grouped association four years ago, until over 100 clubs were entered last year. Players participating in the O.J.H.A. must be under 18 years of age on Jan. 1st of the playing year. The Secretary of the Association is J. H. Stafford, 24 Hayter Street, Toronto, who will gladly forward any desired information we have not available.

In recommending the sponsorship of a city Juvenile team we do not mean to interfere or discourage the operation of the Ki-Y hockey groups which have provided hockey for our teen aged boys for many seasons. From the Juvenile section the Ki-Y league sponsors of a city Juvenile team in the O.J.H.A. would have the advantage of scouting the Ki-Y teams for talent. Now that the sponsorship of a city Juvenile team has been established and realizing the full value of the advantages of a Juvenile team towards the general advancement of hockey in Belleville, we sincerely hope some group of interested and sport-minded citizens will again sponsor a Juvenile team in the O.J.H.A. locally. The entrance fee is only $5.00, but the last day of entry is Dec. 21st, so no time should be lost in affiliation.

Formerly the O.J.H.A. only handled play-off series, but this season the association intends to expand its activities. Providing a team was sponsored locally no doubt a couple of other clubs could be induced to enter from around the Bay of Quinte district, thus assuring a compact loop. The advantages of playing in the O.J.H.A. are much superior to those of a city juvenile group, as the kids appear before the public and learn hockey from the ground up. A city Juvenile team would perhaps be afforded much better coaching than a team in a city group, where the teams do not have the facilities of practice. Here's an opportunity for some philantropic group to not only give the kids a break, but enjoy themselves in knowing they are doing a service, which will undoubtedly be appreciated. With Juvenile and junior hockey flourishing in Belleville, the future of the winter pastime will be secure in the thought that Belleville is endeavouring to develop its own hockey talent.

Friends of W. J. "Billie" Whitty, well known Stirling hockey mentor and ardent lawn bowler, will be sorry to learn he has been ordered by his physician to remain in bed for a full month. "Billie" is suffering from a heart ailment. Local lawn bowlers should heed this unfortunate position, especially around Christmas time.

The Oshawa scribe feels the Oshawa seniors have a real find in "Peg" Hurst, their newly acquired goalie, especially if we refrain from refereeing in the loop. We have known the good qualities of Hurst's goal tending for quite some time, but in Oshawa the only time a local lad gets a break is when the Motor City squads are practically up against it and their hand is forced due to 'status quo.'

Frank Buckland, who guided the destinies of Peterboro hockey when it was necessary to develop players and was given the cold shoulder after he produced the material in the raw, was re-engaged as coach of the Petes once again. Buckland was chosen over such applicants as Lornie Rose, Bert McLeod and other veteran players. The only members of last year's group champions left available are Eddie Starr, Bun Kingdom, Honey Tompkins, Shrimp McDougall (the old man river of Peterboro hockey), Arch Weir and one other sub,which is not too impressive.

If we are to believe the radio account of the Nova-Farr fight last night neither one of them could (as the saying goes) punch their way out of a paper bag. Both Farr and Nova, according to the radio commentatoir, pummelled leather into the other with abandon and we looked for a knockout most any moment, but it failed to come. There's one thing certain— Farr again proved he has plenty of courage and the ability to 'take it,' but championships are not won in this manner. A heavyweight today must be able to deliver a knockout blow, which seems to be a minus quantity insofar as Nova and Farr were concerned last night. Neither one seemed of championship timber on their showing last night, as a matter of fact Louis could have taken both of them in order and without much ado.

HODGE PODGE—The Kingston Garrison beat Perth 5-1 last night to move into a mathematical tie with the Redmen....The Garrison has lost one game, while the Thomasites have yet to taste reverse....The Redmen face the acid test next Wednesday against the fast Queen's sextette....Joe Louis and John Henry Lewis signed for their 15-round heavyweight scrap at Madison Square Gardens on Jan. 25th....Ray Mueller, former Boston Bee catcher, has been traded to the Pittsburg Pirates for Al Todd....Last spring we stated Cincinnati Reds would be National League contenders, today we call the Reds to finish one-two next fall.

Sports Roundup

By SID FEDER

New York, Dec. 17 (AP)—If Lou Nova is brought along right, nothing's going to stop him for a long time. . . . He's certainly the best thing among the big fellows since Joe Louis was on the way up. . . . Give him a year or so, and he'll be ready to swap socks with the Brown Bomber. . . . Manager Ray Carlin oughta take him out in the hinterlands now to fight anybody in the field, so he can learn how to throw punches without leaving himself open, and how to pace himself over the 15-round route . . . otherwise, he has heart and more ring poise than lots of the fellows who've been round years longer. . . . As for Tonypandy Tommy Farr—well, he's had four strikes now and not a base hit yet. . . .

Joe Louis is in town, and in A-1 shape . . . been in the country for six weeks doing light work . . . and scales only 207, plenty under the poundage he usually packs between fights. . . . Incidentally, Joe "scouted" Nova last night against Farr . . . and got a great big eye-ful. . . . Looks like the Brownies are gonna have contract trouble with Buck Newsom. . . . He's howling for $20,000 for '39—and they're offering 15. . . .

There's a "Jimmy Dykes" on the Miami News sports staff . . . now if he smokes cigars, you won't know the difference between him and the White Sox boss. . . . The fight crowd can't understand why Tommy Loughran is campaigning Matt Raymond, the ex-Duke University lad, as a heavyweight—when he weighs only 164. . . .

Tiger Jack Fox is out of the hospital—and probably will tangle with Melio Bettina for the lightweight crown (New York version) in Jannary, just as soon as those knife wounds disappear. . . . Fred Bainbridge, who hails from Sweeny, Texas—"where the oil wells are 10,000 feet deep and we dig 'em in forty-five days"—writes that Willie La-Palac on the little Belleville High grid team down that-a-way scored 245 points by himself this season. . . . Tie that, boys.

"Submarine Patrol"

If the picture's directed by John Ford, it has smash! That's what Hollywood veterans say about the rugged Irishman who has been responsible for some of the most successful pictures ever filmed.

By "smash" the experts mean thrills, excitement, suspense and action. Ford's pictures hit hard. They pack a genuine punch. He wouldn't have it any other way, being quite willing to let other directors win the praise for subtle romance. Ford wants surging life and red blood in his stories.

That's why Darryl F. Zanuck selected Ford to direct "Submarine Patrol", the new 20th Century-Fox picture at the Belle. Based on the heroic exploits of America's wartime "Splinter Fleet", a story never before told "Submarine Patrol" focusses on the incredible mission of one of the tiny sub-chasers and her strange crew of civilian odds and ends who go through an ordeal of danger and come out men.

This preponderantly masculine cast is characteristic of Ford's pictures. He demands the masculine touch, which he feels is required for proper dramatic sweep. He wants men to swim raging rivers, face machine-gun barrages, dare any peril—in fact, to wage eternal battle against a merciless foe, whether it be human or the elements.

You've got to be a pretty tough guy to work for Ford. He can't use actors with delicate physiques. He willingly allows other directors to monopolize the musical comedy idols. He wants strapping, barrel-chested fellows like Greene and Foster and Bancroft, Hymer and Fowley and Rosenbloom.

But Ford has the Celtic gift for tender sentiment beneath surface bluster. That's why women swarm to see his pictures too.

Ford's pictures waste no time. He's a merciless slasher of excess dialogue—if it doesn't lead to exciting action, out it comes. His pictures must be terse, vivid and telling; not open forums.

It's only logical that with such a conception of what a motion picture must be terse, vivid and telling; not open forums.

It's only logical that with such a conception of what a motion picture ought to be, and the courage of his conviction, that Ford should win the Academy Award. His direction of "The Informer".

Splendid Shorts

An array of splendid short subjects have been assembled for exhibition on the same program including Mickey Mouse and Donald Duck in Walt Disney's latest color cartoon comedy classic "Mickey's Parrot", the Belle newsreel with its gist of latest important world news events and a novel and entertaining film "What Every Boy Should Know" make for a show that will appeal to every member of the family.

AT THE McCARTHY

"THE GLADIATOR"

"The Gladiator," Joe E. Brown's sensational comedy of a campus superman ends it current run at the McCarthy Theatre. The cave-mouthed star, in the title role, is cast as a scientifically created Hercules, whose prowess in track and field events, on the football team and in other campus athletics is climaxed by a wrestling match for the world's championship. The supporting cast includes June Travis, Robert Kent, Lucien Littlefield, Dickie Moore and Ethel Wales.

Three Stooges Comedy

Preceding "The Gladiator" at tonight's performances, the funniest of all the Three Stooges comedies, "Three Missing Links," A smash hit with Floyd Gibbon's entitled "The Night Intruder", and a splendid winter "sports" subject, entitled "Snow Foolin" combine to make up an exceptionally fine screen programme and one this reviewer claims should not be missed.

Hollywood picture - making and an exciting story form a happy enterainment combination in "Crashing Hollywood" R.K.O. Radio feature production, starring the always popular screen and stage star Lee Tracy, which will be presented next at the McCarthy Theatre.

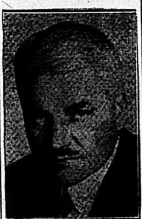
Changes in Staffs are Reported, Department of Research is Established

Montreal, Dec. 17—Three senior officers of the Canadian National will retire from active railway service at the end of the year, according to announcements issued at the headquarters of the system here today.

S. J. Hungerford, Chairman and President, and N. B. Walton, Operative Vice-President, paid tribute to the valued service rendered by these officers, and at the same time issued particulars of changes in the railway staff following upon these retirements. The Chairman also announced the creation of a new department of research and development bearing upon all activities of the Canadian National System.



F. L. C. BOND appointed Vice-President and General Manager of Central Region with headquarters at Toronto.

W. A. KINGSLAND who retires on pension as Vice-President of Central Region.

P. D. FITZPATRICK, hitherto Chief Engineer, appointed General Manager of the Grand Trunk western lines with headquarters at Detroit.

C. G. BOWKER, who is retiring on pension. He has been Vice-President and General Manager of the Grand Trunk western lines (part of the C.N. System).

J. S. McGOWAN, Assistant Director of Colonization, who is appointed Director with headquarters at Montreal.

DR. W. J. BLACK, Director of Colonization and Agriculture who retires.

S. W. FAIRWEATHER, Director of Economics, is named the new Chief of Research and Development in addition to his present duties.

THREE BUILDINGS,

from spreading through the town of 1,200 residents. Thick, wet snow falling at the time, into which occupants of three apartments were forced to flee in night attire, also aided firemen in fighting the outbreak.

Fire Under Control.

Volunteer town firemen and a detachment from Collingwood, twelve miles east of Thornbury, got the fire under control after nearly five hours' work. Water was pumped from the Beaver River, 500 feet from the blazing buildings. With communications crippled, news of the fire was carried by motorists to Meaford and telephoned from there to outside points.

Florence Andrews, night telephone operator, remained on duty warning residents and summoning aid from Collingwood until the flames forced her from her post. Shortly after Miss Andrews fled the telephone office was gutted. All lines from Thornbury were put oit of commission.

Firemen Injured.

The injured firemen were Fred Pedwell and Vance Jarred. They were standing on a ladder fifteen feet above ground, pouring water on the flames, when a sudden burst of flames forced them to jump to safety. The men suffered bruises and slight burns.

Among those forced from their homes were Mr. and Mrs. G. D. Binkley, their daughter, Irene, and Edward Hardry. The fire was believed to have broken out in Binkley's store from an overheated stove and spread quickly to adjoining premises. The burned stores were stocked with Christmas goods which were expected to be a total loss.

Ammunition Explodes.

Exploding ammunition in one of the two hardware stores gutted by the flames created a hazard for firemen. Other premises damaged or destroyed were F. W. Eastland's hardware store; the Independent Order of Oddfellows' Hall and the Thornbury Public Library. Most of the town's residents aided in fighting the fire, forming bucket brigades from the river to the scene of the outbreak.

TANGLED SKEIN

Assisted in Smuggling

The investigators pushed inquiries into reports that Coster, really Philip Musica, an Italian-born immigrant and ex-convict, had, as head of the world's third largest wholesale drug concern, helped finance one South American war and assisted in smuggling arms to Spain in violation of the neutrality act.

So significant did this development appear to Ambrose McCall, Assistant Attorney General, that he abruptly adjourned the State's investigation until Monday in order to study the case.

The United States Attorney's office disclosed it has begun an inquiry into reports Coster helped finance Bolivia in its war with Paraguay over the Chaco boundary in return for a promise of a quinine monopoly.

Papers Missing

Further furore accompanied the disclosure that papers connected with an indictment against Coster-Musica 18 years ago were missing from the office of the chief clerk of the General Sessions Court here. The missing documents were indictments, filed against Coster, then known under his real name of Musica, for forging of evidence and bribery of a witness in a murder case, in 1920. The indictments later were dismissed.

THE OLD STANDBY

Cynics have attacked the story of George Washington and the cherry tree. They have scoffed at the belief that aching corns mean a turn in the weather. They have even voiced doubts of Santa Claus.

But when they try to oust "Sweet Adeline" from the reportoire of barber-shop quartets, it is a little too much. Scientific students of the barleycorn tenor and the Bourbon basso have come up out of the whisky barrel with the heresy that "Sweet Adeline" is a back number. With equal scorn and a decided distillery accent, they add that "Down by the Old Mill Stream" also should have a rock tied around its neck and be dropped in the old mill pond.

It is up to the lovers of good old customs to rise up and refute so dangerous a doctrine, even if they have to break up the harmony to do it. Without "Sweet Adeline" as the backbone of radio jokes, stage jokes, vaudeville jokes and street-corner jokes what is going to become of American humor?

"Sweet Adeline" can't be discarded in any such fashion. It's practically in the Constitution. If we must have heresy let it attack less sacred institutions.

While the Order of ex-Organ Pumpers plays the refrain, let us all join in the good old standby, and long may it live: "Sweet Adeline."
—E. M. A. in Los Angeles Times.

THE APPLE BASKET

A reader has been telling us about his purchase of a bushel basket of Ontario apples. The basket was, he says, stamped No. 1 Spy and with the name and address of the packer in Oxford county. The apples in the top rows lived up to the stamp. They were fine big Spys of good color. But as this ultimate consumer worked his way downwards he found a great change.

The great majority of the apples in the basket, he says, were neither No. 1 nor Spys, and they were far, far below Spy quality. He showed them to the dealer from whom the apples had been bought — and who had sold them in complete good faith. The dealer agreed they were not Spys, whatever they were, and that many of them couldn't be called No. 1 by any stretch of the imagination. The outcome of the incident was the making of another steady customer for British Columbia apples.

Probably it is the literal truth to say there are no finer apples in the world than Ontario apples, but it seems extremely difficult to buy good specimens carefully picked, well-packed, of uniform quality. The purchaser of a box of B. C. apples knows from experience that he can depend upon the marked grade. He knows exactly what he is getting, because the bottom row is of the same size and quality as the top row. That ought to be the first requisite of fruit-packing, but it is something many Ontario packers have still to learn.—Ottawa Journal.

Organized Labor To Fight Against Peacetime Conscription

London, Dec. 17 (CP-Havas)—Any attempt at peacetime conscription will be fought "tooth and nail by the whole of organized labor" The Daily Herald (Labor) said today.

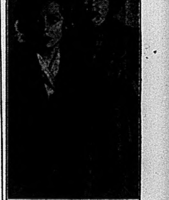
The worning followed a motion placed before the House of Commons asking it to approve the government's plan to install a voluntary system, but to recommend future revision of the plan in accordance with results it will show by next March.

The Daily Express (Independent) asserted that it should have been made obligatory from the start.

"The new motion means that the government leaves itself free, if it feels so inclined, to come before the House again in March and say that voluntary service has proved insufficient and push through a compulsory scheme," the Herald said.

After stating that compulsion would be fought "tooth and nail," the Herald went on:

"Any scheme put up for consideration must meet with three cardinal requirements. It must be efficient, it must be voluntary, and it must be based absolutely on Democratic principles. The sooner the government recognizes that the better."



Joan Woodbury, and Lee Patrick featured with Lee Tracy in "Crashing Hollywood," coming to the McCarthy Theatre.

TORONTO STOCKS CLOSE

Toronto, Dec. 17—(CP)—A wild scramble for the western oil shot prices upward 10 to 40 per cent in the second hour of today's Toronto Exchange Market.

During the last hour more than half the trade was in the oil group. Industrial shares were neglected and they closed slightly lower. The mining shares posted a preponderance of narrow losses. Turnover was about 500,000 shares.

Home Oil opened 25 cents higher around 3.25. After churning around between 3.10 and 3.30, Home slowly climbed to 3.60 It closed around 3.50 for a net gain of 51 cents.

Okalta, Calgary-Edmonton and nearly all the cheaper issues fell into line and within a few minutes after Home settled around 3.50, Calgary-Edmonton had mounted 60 cents to 2.80, Okalta 60 cents to 1.80, Anglo-Canadian 25 cents to 1.40. Top prices were shaded under a late run of profit-taking.

Base metal leaders, Noranda, Nickel, Smelters, Pend Oreille and Ventures all weakened slightly and the silvers, Eldorado and Bear, posted minor declines.

WALL STREET

New York, Dec. 17.—(AP)—Selected stocks displayed recovery symptoms in today's market but many issues still were inclined to rest after their recent climb. While individual spots of strength and weakness were in evidence at the close, minor gains and losses were about evenly divided. Numerous stocks were unchanged.

A few Steels, Aircrafts, Utilities, and Specialties gave the best account of themselves. Motors, Rails, Oils, Mail Orders and Coppers held to a narrowly uneven groove.

Further weakness of Lowe's was somewhat of a chilling influence on speculative sentiment. This stock off nearly five points yesterday, added about two more to the recession.

Boeing pushed up as earnings prospects from war plane building brightened for this manufacturer. Douglas, Sperry, Glenn Martin and United Aircraft lacked rising vitality On the side of the aviation group was the action of Secretary of Labor Perkins in fixing a minimum wage of fifty cents an hour for Aircraft makers under the Public Contracts Act.

General Motors and Chrysler were unable to get going, although December sales for most automobile distributors, running some thirty per cent above a year ago, were said to be better than anticipated.

Canadian issues moved narrowly both ways. Hiram Walker and Canadian Pacific tilted downward while McIntyre Porcupine and Lake Shore advanced fractionally.

Buyers nibbled at Consolidated Edison, North American, Chesapeake & Ohio, Anaconda, Kennecott, Sears Roebuck, Standard Oil of N.J., Goodrich, Western Union and American Telephone.

Board Room Gossip

As supplied to Biggar and Crawford By Financial Service

The outstanding feature of the local market at the present time is Home Oil, the stock having advanced from around $1.20 to above $2.50. The reason for this, of course, is due to the recent bringing in of a well by the company in the northern part of Turner Valley that is rapidly proving to be one of the largest in Canada. In addition, the coming in of this well adds considerably to the value of the company's 10,000 acres in that vicinity. Home Oil should tend to revive interest in the entire Turner Valley and traders and investors looking over the list should find some interesting situations.

Although considerable weakness developed in Brazilian Traction an announcement that the directors had failed to take dividend action for the year-end, it should be remembered that this was not due to lack of earnings, but entirely to the fact that it is impossible to withdraw funds from Brazil. In the meantime, the company's cash position is materially improved, as a 50-cent distribution would have called for a payment of more than $3,500,000. Earnings for 1938 are estimated in the neighborhood of $1.40 a share, and on such earnings, the shares under $9 appear speculatively attractive.

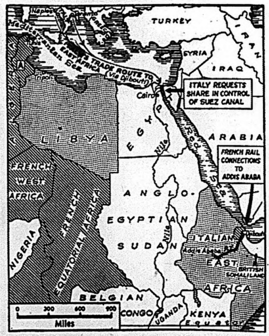
ITALIAN ASPIRATIONS IN AFRICA



Diplomatic relations between Italy and France continue to be strained as the Italian press continues agitation for revision of the Franco-Italian relations in Africa. In Tunisia (A on map), Italy seeks annexation or greater autonomy for 94,000 Italians living there. To develop her trade route to East Africa and the East, Italy demands a greater share in control of the Suez canal, and the annexation of Djibouti, French Somaliland, railport for the French-owned railroad to Addis Ababa, formerly Ethiopia, now Italian East Africa. Stripe-shaded areas are controlled by France, dotted portions by Italy.

BADMINTON PLAYERS TO GIVE EXHIBITION

Four of Canada's ranking badminton players will give an exhibition of this popular winter indoor sport at the Belleville Armouries this evening. The four players to give the performance are Rod Phalen, Jack Sibbald, Dave Robertson and H. Smith, all of Toronto. Phalen and Sibbald together as Canada's outstanding men's doubles last year. This quartette of ranking Canadian badminton players are being brought to Belleville to further the interest of the game and by the Belleville Badminton Club. The general public is invited to witness the exhibition gratis, President Robt. Brown of the local club announced today.

GIFT TO HOSPITAL

London, Dec. 17 (CP-Havas)—Lord Nuffield, the automobile manufacturer and philanthropist, yesterday presented £31,383 ($156,915) to the Wingfield Morris Orthopaedic Hospital at Oxford.

Another Advance in Egg Prices

Light arrivals of fresh receipts continued to give strength to prices on the egg market. Further development occurred in sales through retail channels, which dealers attributed to demand for week-end requirements. Ungraded eggs climbed 1c per dozen on top grades to 30c for grade A-large, 26c for medium, and 25c for pullets; this increase being passed along to the retail section of the market. Graded shipments cleared readily at the firm quotations of 33c for grade A-large, 28c for medium, 27c for pullets, 25c for B's, and 22c for C grades.

The butter market displayed a steadier undertone as offerings of the Ontario product at 21½c dried up. Although one source reported a little more interest, trading was generally quiet, with buying still in odd lots. Holders were asking 22c for the western make, but no sales were recorded at this level. Ontario creamery solids were sold at 21¾c for No. 1 grades, and 21c for 38 score. Prints remained at the previous rate of 23c to 23¾c for top grades, and 22¼c to 23c for 38 score.

Butter Easier At Montreal.

Montreal, Dec. 17 (CP) — Butter prices were quieter and slightly easier on open produce markets Friday, the Dominion Department of Agriculture reported. Egg prices held firm with receipts light, and cheese held unchanged. Potatoes were steady.

Creamery butter prints to retailers were 22½c to 23c a pound and solids for 22c to 22½c. Western butter delivered in Montreal was offered at 22c for fresh and regraded. Quebec No. 1 pasteurized in wholesale jobbing lots was 21¾c for regraded. Receipts: Seven boxes.

Graded egg shipments in used free cases were offered at 34c to 35c a dozen for A-large, 28c to 29c for A-medium, 26c to 27c for A-pullets, 24c for B-large, 23c for B-medium, and 21½c for C. Receipts: 897 cases.

Always Keep Eye on British Market

The most efficient method of marketing Canadian bacon is to make each process from the buying of the live hog to packaging for export a step in the direction of the English market.

When hogs are marketed in large numbers it is often necessary to hold them before they can be killed and then it is necessary to freeze the meat and hold it until it can be marketed without seriously affecting the markets.

Some good lots of hogs received during the week of December 16th, 1938, are as follows:

NAME	ADDRESS	NO. OF HOGS	GRADE A	B	C	D	Light	Prem.
B. Moran	Frankford	7	4	3				$4.00

TURKEYS, GEESE QUOTATIONS VARY ON CITY MARKET

Fairly Heavy Pre-Christmas Offering Features Saturday Display— Ducks Scarce

EGGS STEADY

Forerunner to what is expected to be one of the heaviest Christmas markets in years, the turkey, goose and fowl display at the city market today was productive of a variable offering of birds at prices to suit the humble purse as well as that of the well-to-do person.

Prices ranging from twenty-two cents to as high as thirty-five cents per pound for the haughty gobblers featured a market that during the early hours showed little signs of stabilization of Christmas bird prices. Geese were quoted at from twenty-two to twenty-five cents per pound, while good average weight ducks were offered at from one dollar to as high as one dollar and forty cents each.

Chicken offerings were good but were forced more or less out of the buying spotlight by the large display of the Christmas birds. Prices were steady and showed little or no change from last week's quotations

Plenty of Variety

There was plenty of variety, however, in the turkey display. Large gobblers weighing from twenty to twenty-four pounds were offered at twenty-five and twenty-six cents per pound. A fairly average price was noted at twenty-five cents although several vendors held out for the higher quotations. Some choice "turks" were offered at thirty cents per pound while one optimistic lady vendor priced her birds at thirty-five cents per pound with no takers at an early hour.

Egg quotations maintained fairly level with "A" selects selling at thirty-five cents per dozen with extra specials quoted at forty cents. Average prices, however, ranged between thirty and thirty-five cents with mediums and other qualities and sizes selling at commensurate prices. Farmer butter was steady at thirty-five cents per single pound roll generally with two-pound quantities being offered at sixty-five cents each.

Potatoes halted temporarily, at least, in the more or less sensational price rocketing that has featured this commodity during the past three weeks. Baglots were quoted at $1.50 cents. each although slightly inferior qualities were available at twenty-five cents per bag less. Pecks showed a brisk activity moving well at twenty-five cents each.

Staple Vegetables

Staple vegetables in bushel lots offered on the outside market sold sluggishly today with a driving wet snow keeping potential customers in the warmth of Front Street stores or the inside market. Onions at one dollar per bushel, carrots and beets at fifty cents for the same quantity, parsnips at fifty-five cents and the usual display of cabbage and cauliflower rounded out an average offering. A truckload of winter cabbage was offered at forty cents per dozen head.

Northern Spies and Tolman Sweets headed a fairly good apple display with the former demanding $1.50 per bushel for good fruit. McIntosh Reds held steady at $1.75 per hamper for choice stock while Russets and good quality cooking apples were quoted at one dollar per bushel.

Fresh Whitefish at twenty cents per pound attracted lovers of this food, while the popular mudcat sold well at two pounds for twenty-five cents.

Bridge into the East River before the turn of the century; that perhaps a dummy did the dropping.

"Well, nobody can say that about me," he chuckled. "People watched me jump, then people watched me fall, and then somebody had to haul me out."

Erickson said he had been "on a party" after he reached Vancouver from the Vancouver Island camp which had shut down for the long Christmas work stoppage. He was still "a little drunk" when he went for a walk in Stanley Park and finally out onto the suspension span.

Erickson said he "sure hits fast". It didn't seem any time at all from the moment he jumped until he struck. Actually it was almost four seconds, during which time he must have gained a speed of roughly 75 miles an hour.

The Promise

By BEULAH ROSE

Marion turned from the window through which her wet eyes were scanning the pavement below, and faced the other girl in the room.

"Terry, look at me!"

Theresa looked up from the book at which she had been staring vacantly.

"Terry, dear, I've got to have him!"

There was no response from Terry. But her mind was working very rapidly.

"Don't you understand? I love him," Marion broke out. "I love him, and I know he is good and true to me."

Pushing the chair from her, Terry rose and stepped to the other girl's side.

"Marion, you are planning your own ruination. You must not marry him! You will never be happy with him—I know."

"How do you know?"

The question was asked half fiercely, and the lips that uttered it were quivering.

"Do not ask me that—never ask me that!" Terry's voice had become a hoarse whisper. "Do you remember, dear, I had a sister—Belle—sweet and pretty—do you remember how her life was ruined by a man she thought she loved? I often stop to wonder why someone did not tell her, as I am telling you now, so that she might have been spared such sorrow—such painful disillusionment."

"Terry—she died, did she not?"

"Yes, of a broken heart."

A long, empty silence.

"And—are you afraid that my heart will be broken if I marry—Frank?"

"I know it, and because I love you, and realize the sufferings of my sister, I want to help you do the right thing. Earnest is the man for you, Marion—so strong and good. He loves you dearly. Why not take him and forget the other?"

"Forget!" She laughed a bitter little laugh. "Forget! When one has learned to love so instinctively—as I have—it is not so easy to forget!"

Hurrying down the long narrow street which led to the subway station—her destination—Marion Jensen became suddenly aware that two dark figures were approaching in the distance. A man and woman, arm in arm. And she was looking up into his face and speaking to him. Great heavens, where were they going at that hour? Terry and Frank!

In the sudden fit of jealous passion which besieged her, Marion was nearly prompted to run and confront them, and tell them that they were false and had been plotting together to ruin her happiness.

"You called yourself my friend, Thersea Hamilton!" she exclaimed vehemently. "My friend! Oh, you hypocrite! You loved him and wanted him for yourself. That is why you told me to marry Earnest Barton! So this is the reason you knew so well I would never be happy with Frank—the man you are trying to win from me. Oh, you false, unworthy creature. I hate you! I hate you!"

They were coming nearer, slowly, as if too deeply engrossed in each other to want to hurry.

Upon second impulse, Marion clapped her hand to her trembling lips and, hurriedly looking about her for a lace of retreat, caught sight of a dark, deserted old corner which had once been the entrance to what looked like "Tony's pool room." From the damp, cheerless protection of this hiding place she waited for the two to pass.

She caught a voice—Frank's.

"Terry, let us stop here a moment. I—I'm all in."

Marian's breath came in swift gasps. They had stopped outside and she could hear every word.

Terry was speaking now.

"I have decided, Frank, that I must do it."

He grasped her hand.

"Terry—you mustn't!"

"But you have deceived me again. You promised you would never sink to the depths again—and, now, tonight, I found you in a drunken stupor—a man without a backbone—like an outcast of society—like a cur. You lied to me! Have I not a right to lie to you?"

"Terry! You promised! You promised you would never tell her! I love her—I want her—she is my only reason for living—" His voice broke, as if his strength were spent.

"But if she knew? If I told her—Would she love you then? Frank, she would hate you for deceiving her—as you deceived my poor sister!"

"It was only because I loved you so myself once—before you deserted me, to seek my sister's love—it was only because of that faint spark that still remains—Oh, Frank! that is why I wanted to save you from yourself—and to protect another girl's happiness".

When the two had at last parted, a lone figure stole out into the stillness of the night. Her heart felt strangely light. Terry's words rang in her ears—

"Earnest is the man for you, Marion—so strong and good. He loves you dearly".

SHANNONVILLE W.M.S.

The annual meeting of the W.M.S. of the United Church of Shannonville was held at the home of Mrs. (Rev.) Craig on Thursday afternoon, December 1st, with Mrs. Frank Doxtator, group leader, in charge who opened the meeting with a call to worship. Mrs. (Rev.) Craig gave the Bible reading from the second chapter of Matthew. Mrs. J. Conkell read the Scripture lesson and Mrs. D. Hinchey also read from the scripture, and Mrs. Doxtator offered prayer. A Christmas hymn was followed by worship service from the Missionary Monthly led by Mrs. F. Doxtator and Mrs. Lorne Lazier read the prayer for a more Christianlike spirit within our church. Roll was called by the secretary and brought forth a good response of Christmas verses, twenty-three ladies present. A letter was read by the President, Mrs. Everett Stratton, from Mrs. W. S. Dies of thanks for kind expression of sympathy from the members at the time of her mother's death. Reports of the officers were given showing an increase in attendance and givings over last year. Mrs. (Rev.) Craig reported for the Mission Band and Mrs. Lorne Lazier for the Baby Band. Ten dollars from the flower fund was voted into the regular funds. A layette valued at $10 was reported sent for supply work. Rev. Craig took charge of election of officers only two changes being made. Collection was taken amounting to $3.55 and for the flower fund $1.25. Mite boxes and holiday coin bags were also received at this meeting, making the total receipts $57. The worship service was continued and the prayer read in unison. Mrs. Doxtator read a poem and after the closing hymn pronounced the benediction. A delicious lunch was served by the hostess and her assistants and a social time was enjoyed by all.

Officers for 1939 are as follows: President, Mrs. Everett Stratton; First Vice President, Mrs. (Rev.) Craig; Second Vice President, Mrs. Sam Elliott; Corresponding Sec., Mrs. S. MacDonald; Recording Sec. and Press Reporter, Mrs. W. D. Robertson; Treasurer, Mrs. J. Conkell; Study Book Sec., Mrs. W. S. BAY OF QUINTE W. I.

The December meeting of the Bay of Quinte W. I. was held on Wednesday the 14th at the home of Mrs. Bruce Hogle, in the form of a Christmas party. The president, Mrs. Casey Ketcheson, took charge of the meeting.

During the business discussion, a letter was read by Mrs. Clarence Holmes, from the President of the Cashell Branch, asking for aid in relief for the destitute families in their community. The members decided to send a donation for Christmas treats, for the children in the community, and also to pack a box in the near future to be sent to the same Branch.

The president wished each member to remember Miss Elsie Hunt with a Christmas greeting. Miss Hunt was a former member of this Branch and is now Missionary Nurse in Cold Lake, Alberta. At this time, Mrs. Fred Wilson, read a letter from the Missionary Monthly which was written by Miss Elsie Hunt, Reg. N., entitled, "Christmas In A Pioneer Hospital."

A reading entitled "Santa Claus' Assistant" was given by Mrs. Clarence Holmes. All joined in singing "Silent Night" after which the Roll Call was answered by exchanging of Christmas Gifts. An Apple Contest was given by Mrs. C. Ketcheson and Mrs. C. Holmes received 1st. prize.

Mr. Bills Ketcheson favoured with a cornet solo, "It Came Upon the Midnight Clear" which was greatly appreciated. "Heart of A Child" was read by Mrs. Kenneth Jones, and the National Anthem was sung.

Lunch was served and a social half hour spent.

PLAINFIELD W. M. S.

The December meeting of Plainfield W. M. S. was held on Dec. 14 at the home of the president, Mrs. Wilbur Elliott.

The meeting was in charge of the first vice president, Mrs. H. McCreary. The Roll call answered with a Bible verse. Business items were discussed.

Mrs. Ralph Wilder was in charge of the devotional. Quiet music was played by Miss Olive Hall. A poem "Jesus Satisfies" was read by Mrs. Wilder and a duet was sung by Mrs. McMcCreary and Mrs. H. Harrison. Mrs. E. Denyes led in short prayer. Mrs. J. W. Hamilton read Scripture lesson. Mrs. Wilder then told a story. A hymn closed this part of service.

Miss Annie Hamilton, group leader, then took charge. Hymn and prayer was offered. Readings by Verna Prindle, Mrs. Stanley Hazard, Mrs. Fred Hall. A solo was rendered by Mrs. B. Moore "Hark the Herald Angels Sing". A duet "No Room in the Inn" by Miss Olive Hall and Miss Nellie Hodgen.

A Temperance reading by Mrs. E. Emerson. Doxology was then sung. A Christmas program was then put on by the Baby Band members under the Baby Band superintendent. The following children took part: Solos, Isabel Elliott, Nina Dunning, and Iner Prindle. Recitations by Franklin Hazard, Helen Beatty, Jack Beatty and Bobbie Sullivan. Santa then appeared and presented each child there with a small gift. A peace offering was taken by Iner Prindle. Attendance 29, children 16.

Lunch was served by the hostess and her helpers and a social half hour spent.

WHAT'S THE ANSWER?

A newspaperman whose duties take him to church occasionally says he notices that no matter to which church he goes the men discard overcoats and hats and occasionally rubbers and overshoes, while the women, despite the quite often oppressive heat of the building keep on their coats, furs, hats and rubbers or goloshes. Why? he asks. Perhaps some of the women can give the right answer.—St. Thomas Times-Journal.

The gathering was called to order by Mr. Andrew Thomson and the following address was read by Miss Jerrine Thomson:

Bonarlaw, Dec. 12, 1938.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry McAdam:

Dear Gladys and Harry:

We've gathered here at Gladys' tonight,
We thought it wouldn't be just right,
To let you go away from us,
Without a little bit of fuss.
The twelfth line will not seem quite the same
Since you went off and changed your name,
But Mt. Pleasant is not far away,
We'll all drop in on you some day.
These gifts we bring to you,
Along with wishes fond and true,
May happiness be yours in wedded life,
As you are Harry's loving wife.

Most of us here tonight perhaps know you, Gladys, better than we do your husband but we wish to assure you, Harry, that we are looking forward to your better acquaintance.

And now we take this opportunity to present you with these varied gifts from your many friends and hope that they may be of some use and value to you. Also may they serve to remind you of your many friends and neighbors and of the good will that prompted their giving.

In closing may we again wish that your home be blessed with happiness and contentment.

Signed on behalf of your many friends: Edna Bateman, Jerrine Thomson, Freda Rowe, Ruth Bateman.

Mr. and Mrs. McAdam responded thanking their friends for the beautiful gifts.

Mr. W. Stiles was called on for a speech, also Mr. Earl McAdam and others.

Mr. Garland Irwin, Evelyn Gibson, Mr. C. Heath gave several songs accompanied by the guitars. A very enjoyable evening was spent in cards, games and dancing.

Heroes Waste Their Time!

Sattiday morning Glasses Magee and Shorty Judge saw a horse walking along pulling a wagon without any driver, and they ran out in the street waving and yelling to make it stop, and the driver stuck his head out from the back of the wagon where he was sorting packages and told them if they minded their own business the horse would mind his.

BUSINESS AND FINANCIAL

Puds Simkins lost a cent Wensday after school on account of carrying it in his hand for safe keeping, not having found it yet and not telling unybody the place where re dropped it on account of preferring to hunt for it alone, claiming he still expects to find it because he saw where it rolled without actually seeing where it stopped.

SCHOOL NOTES

Skinny Martin was kept a half a hour after school Thursday for claiming he couldn't help being late on account of losing so much time asking people what time it was.

PAGING SANTA CLAUS

Jane Corby

CHAPTER V

Jan knew that Paul Harris was disappointed in the crowd that had turned out for the opening, but she had no idea of the extent of that disappointment. A week later his bitterness had grown to such proportions that he had decided to do something about it.

"Wait till that Payson girl gets downstairs—I'll have a plain talk with her," Paul Harris was saying to Mary Elizabeth Howard. She had intercepted him in the lobby just a week after the opening night, and inquired bluntly where all the business was that was coming her way in return for the outfitting of that little singer. Paul had been asking himself questions of a similar nature and the arrival of Miss Howard simply precipitated a moment that he had begun to feel was inevitable. Paul had been not quite frank with himself in regard to the Payson girls. Ever since opening night, which had been in the words of Zambrini, 'one beeg flop,' Paul had been telling himself that Jan Payson would have to go. All these days had gone by and it was obvious that if she had ever been an object of interest to William Anthony Deverest, that interest had faded. The wealthy young man had avoided the hotel as if it had been quarantined. So far Paul's path was clear.

But—and he hated to admit it—he could not bring himself to ask the fragile Dora to go back to that miserable hovel from which he had rescued her. It must be that he was getting soft-hearted ....and Paul had not been troubled that way in years. There was a flowerlike quality in Dora's white face and her pain-widened blue eyes that reminded him—yes, it did—of Helen.

The situation was complicated. It made his manner all the more brusque now that a crisis in the form of Mary Elizabeth Howard had arrived. She would have to be paid in some way for Jan's outfit.

"I didn't act hastily," he now told the dress designer, "because sometimes these things take a few days to straighten themselves out. But I've finished waiting. This is the end."

"And what about me?" Mary Elizabeth inquired smoothly.

"You won't lose by it," Paul assured her, "I'm the one who has lost. Her salary—that suite they have." He broke off as Jan, with a laughing remark to the operator, stepped out of the elevator.

Mary Elizabeth eyed the girl as she approached and almost forgot the annoyance the whole incident had caused her, inadmiration of her own handiwork. The girl —in the mid-winter costume Mary Elizabeth Howard, Inc. had designed—was lovely. What a pity she hadn't made good!

Jan, who had been ready to dance across the lobby for delight when she first stepped out of the elevator, felt a sudden chill at Paul's tone. She had been on her way to buy a brand new kitten for Dora. The sick girl had always wanted a Persian kitten, and just yesterday Jan had seen a blue-eyed bundle of yellow fur in the pet shop around the corner. It was twenty-five dollars. She had the money in her bag this minute—the joy of being able to spend money on giving happiness to others! But Paul's sharp voice recalled her to unpleasant reality.

The uniformed man at the hotel entrance, reaching out a gloved hand at this precise moment, set the revolving door spinning, and it spun William Anthony Deverest, correctly hatted and coated, into the lobby. There he paused, glancing involuntarily toward the magazine stand. The dark girl there, who looked up with obvious interest made him turn quickly the other way. And then he saw her!

He had insisted on getting her tray filled first and carrying it for her to the table.

Or was that the girl he had last seen breathless, mud-stained and reproachful? Why, she was beautiful! Seen from the side this way, she seemed, standing still as she was, to be poised for flight, her face uptilted, her lips parted eagerly. Then she turned toward him so that he saw her face. She was in trouble!

Paul was saying, indeed, that he "was disappointed, greatly disappointed, Miss Payson. After all, William Anthony Deverest might have found it impossible to be present on the opening night, but a whole week had gone by and he had never even looked in at the roof garden!"

Jan, dazedly trying to figure out why she should be held accountable for Mr. Deverest's—whoever he was—absence, looked away from Paul, seeking enlightment from her surroundings. Her eyes encountered the gaze of the tall young man near the magazine counter who was staring as [illegible] he knew her. And she had certainly seen him somewhere! Oh, yes, that careless chauffeur who got her into difficulties on Thanksgiving Day!

She smiled faintly and Paul, waiting for her reply, caught the smile and followed her glance. Further caustic words died in his throat and he seized Miss Howard firmly by the elbow and propelled her rapidly toward the office.

"What—what's the matter" Mary Elizabeth protested.

And Miss Howard, looking over her shoulder, departed docilely enough.

Jan didn't know why she had been spared—she only knew that they were gone, and she was grateful. She caught her breath on a deep sigh, and discovered the chauffeur beside her.

"You are Jan, aren't you?" he inquired. How tall he was! Jan raised her golden eyes for a brief instant to his interested grey ones and nodded.

"But how did you know my name?"

"It's quite a long story. I found it out when I came to ask you to dinner as a sort of apology for my clumsiness, that day. Though it's a little late, I still owe you that apology. Will you....?"

"I was on my way to buy a kitten," Jan demurred, walking toward the door. "And I haven't much time for dinner. I have to get ready for the show."

"I'm practically an expert on kittens," her escort announced firmly. He turned and walked with her, wondering a little at himself. Usually his invitations were promptly accepted. It was provoking to have this self-contained little person treat him so casually. Perhaps she was being difficult for a purpose? But her next question dismissed that thought.

"Didn't you have an appointment with someone?" she asked. "I really have the kitten all picked out."

She was trying to get rid of him! William Anthony Deverest grinned and took her elbow.

"Now, that's dangerous," he insisted. "Some of the nicest looking kittens are undesirables—heredity, or—or fleas, you know. You need me along...." But Jan had stopped and was looking at him in consternation. "What's the matter?" he interrupted himself.

"You've lost your job!" Her voice was lovely when she said it and the man had an insane impulse to let her believe it. But almost involuntarily he protested....

"Oh, no—"

"But you're not in uniform!"

"How—how do you know what I do?" he inquired cautiously.

Jan laughed and he suddenly decided she looked even more irresistible than when she was sad. "You had your chauffeur's cap with you on Thanksgiving, of course. But you weren't in uniform that day, either. You must have a pretty nice boss."

"He—he's abroad," Deverest said absently. The main thing was to keep beside her. To keep her talking. She was a real person—not giggling and coquettish—but human and interesting. Maybe, he thought wistfully, all girls were like that to chauffeurs. It was only his infernal money that made them act so silly. He led the way to the car, but Jan shook her head.

"The shop is only around the corner. My, that's a beautiful car!" she said appreciatively. "W-A-D—initials are so funny when they spell a word!"

A sudden sharp recollection of her scene with Paul flashed through her mind. She could hear again Paul's voice saying. "Of course if it was impossible for William Anthony Deverest to be there the opening night...."

"William Anthony Deverest," she repeated aloud, turning a frightened face to the man beside her.

"Y-yes," he agreed hesitantly.

"You know—?" Jan gazed at him wide-eyed. "He's your boss!"

When he did not answer, she went on bitterly. "I hate him! It's wicked —and cruel—for one person to have so much money he can make everyone else unhappy just because he's alive. I hope I never meet him."

"I hate him! It's wicked — and cruel—for one person to have so much money he can make everyone else unhappy. I hope I never meet him."

CHAPTER VI

Jan turned away so abruptly Deverest had to hurry to catch up. "He's not so bad," he said defensively. "If he knew you were in trouble...."

"He'll never know it!" the girl said fiercely, and walked on for a while in silence. Then as they reached the corner, "Here's the pet shop. Isn't that the most adorable kitten you ever saw? By the way, what's your name?"

"My—my name?" the man stammered. "Oh! Tony—Tony Williams. Say, don't hold my boss against me. That dinner date means a lot to me."

Jan, gurgling at the kitten, missed his intent pleading glance. "You can have a sandwich with me in the cafeteria," she promised, "if you like the kitten. But if you complain about a flea or two, the party's off."

She walked ahead of him through the door and, grinning, Tony followed.

There was something awfully nice, to say the very least, about Tony Williams, Jan decided that night as she was taking off the white and silver gown after her final appearance in the floor show. Sometimes he had seemed, well — almost shy, as if he wasn't used to taking a girl out to dinner. It couldn't have been that the place overwhelmed him, either. Jan could have understood it if he had shown nervousness while dining with her in, say, the Blue Room at the Devon Arms. Tony was only a chauffeur and had never, she supposed, taken dinner in a place where the waiters called the best patrons by name. So she could only account for her escort's awkwardness in the serve-yourself lunch room where they had that hasty supper, on the assumption that he was not accustomed to playing host to a girl.

Why, come to think of it, he had only stared at her when she suggested that he get plenty of nickels before they started on the rounds of the little glass cases where the foods were displayed. He simply kept looking at her until she had to tell him, "You need the nickels and dimes, you know, to put in the machines." "Yes, oh, yes, I know," he had finally spoken, as if he had just come out of a dream. They had laughed together over that. He had insisted on getting her tray filled first and carrying it for her to what they said was the only 'table with a view!' The view was the crowded street outside the big plate glass window, but Jan never glanced through it even once, so interesting she found it just to be sitting opposite Tony at a table!

"Gosh, I'm happy!" Tony had bounded up and down on the bent metal and red washable leather chair with which the management of the cafeteria provided its patrons.

"You won't be so happy if you jog this soup into my lap," Jan had told him severely. He had insisted on adding a bowl of hot soup to the ham and cheese sandwich and cup of coffee which she had selected. She had felt guilty, there at the table, watching the way Tony's eyes smiled at her. Maybe she should have let him dine with her at the Devon Arms—Paul Harris had said she might have an occasional guest, as well as all meals for herself and Dora. It was part of the arrangement he had made with her in return for her appearance in the floor show. But, and she flushed a little now at her snobbishness, she had decided on the spur of the moment that it was just as well if she didn't show up at the Devon Arms with a chauffeur. No one would know him, of course, but Paul Harris might find out. It was best to be on the safe side.

Her quick, almost unconscious decision had left her uncomfortable, however. Now as she reviewed the events of the evening, she was struck by a sudden new thought. Tony would not have liked accepting a dinner from her, even though she had explained that it cost her nothing. Why, he wouldn't have liked that at all! She drew a breath of relief, surprised to realize how heavily the whole incident had lain on her heart.

After she had crept softly into bed, careful not to wake Dora sleeping peacefully as a child in the other bed, she lay with her arms crossed above her head on the pillow, listening to the muted night sounds of the city drifting upward to the opened windows.

How good it was to lie here snug and warm between sheets that crackled with their freshness. She put her hand on the fleecy blanket and patted it, loving its comforting texture. A slight movement at the nearest window caught her attention and she glanced toward it. Snow! She sat up straight in bed. Yes, it was snowing in earnest, in a flurry of flakes that turned, even as she watched, into big blobs that stuck to the window pane until they began to melt around the edges.

Well, it was December. The time had whirled by so quickly since Thanksgiving Day—"the day when we found out what thankfulness really means"—she and Dora had decided to call it—that she had hardly noticed when December arrived. And now it was snowing. But snow and cold winds would have no power to harm her and Dora so long as they could stay in this beautiful place. Jan dived back into her pillow, smothering a little joyous gurgle that she could not quite repress.

There was a question in Dora's blue eyes as she raised them from the calendar which she had been marking on her knee.

"Only a few more days to Christmas, Jan!" she said absently, her gaze following Jan's movements as she took another evening dress from the closet and laid it beside the one that already was on the bed. "Are you going out again tonight, dear?" she asked wistfully.

Jan smiled at her sister. She smiled a great deal nowadays, and Dora thought she looked happy even when she was not smiling. Well, if it made Jan happy to go out all the time, Dora put it to herself, with this wonderful Tony Williams, she would be happy about it too.

"Tony wants me to go dancing with him after the show." A dimple which had never been noticeable in Jan's thin cheeks flashed now. She knew that she was looking better than ever before in her life. Such a lot of good food! But it was the improvement in Dora that contributed a great deal to her own well being.

Now she left the dresses and ran over to the little refrigerator which was part of the room's equipment. "Your orange juice!"She said gayly to her sister, handing her the tall frosted glass.

Dora accepted the drink and sipped it in silence for a moment.

"It's very good," she said. "Oh. Jan! Isn't it wonderful that all this should happen to us? This glorious room and all these soft, soft pillows! And my view! I can see the top of the trees in Central Park from away across the room and when I'm right close to the window I can see every single thing that's going on for blocks and blocks. Pussy-puff can too. I thought he would go through the glass yesterday in his excitement when a pigeon perched on the window sill outside. He's the best company in the world." She let her arm hang over the side of the chaise longue until her finger tips touched the soft ball of yellow fur that was Pussy-puff, curled up on a cushion close beside her.

"You do like it here, don't you, darling?" said Jan, picking up the satin coverlet that had slipped to one side.

"You know I do!" cried Dora.

"Has Paul been to see you lately?" inquired Jan with elaborate unconcern.

The delicate wild-rose color that tinted Dora's pale cheeks gave her answer before her sister said: "Well, he was here yesterday. He could only stay a few minutes."

"And wasn't he here the day before?"

"Well, yes," said Dora. "I believe he was."

"And what about the day before yesterday—and don't you expect him today?" There was laughter in Jan's voice, though her golden eyes were solemn.

"You're teasing me," Dora protested, pretending to be annoyed. "Wait and see, I'll get even with you for that. I'll—why don't you bring your Tony here sometimes, Jan? I think I could do a better job of getting even if I just knew what he looked like."

"I can tell you what he looks like," said Jan enthusiastically. "He's frightfully tall, and he has grey eyes—oh! nice grey eyes — that can be as bright as steel or as dark as—as the winter sky. He isn't like anybody I ever met before, Dora. You'd like him if you saw him. I wish I could bring him in, but you know he's just a chauffeur. I told you that he drives for that hateful William Anthony Deverest, who's going to be abroad until after Christmas."

"But I still don't see...." began Dora.

"It's a little hard to explain, darling. You see we don't really belong here ourselves, and I don't know how it is that we ever happened to get all this"—she waved a hand to indicate their luxurious surroundings — "and I'm terribly afraid of doing anything that Paul Harris might not approve of. If it were Mr. Deverest himself, that would be different. It's funny, but somehow everybody seems to think I should know William Anthony Deverest."

The Stars Say—

By GENEVIEVE KEMBLE

For Sunday, December 18

SUNDAY'S horoscope is a very interesting and intriguing one, with much of a devastating nature forecast in both the private and business associations. It spells upheaval and surprising and perplexing adventures, with probably a tinge of the romantic and dramatic. Affairs of social and emotional incitement call for new environs arranged probably by secrecy or subtlety.

Those whose birthday it is may anticipate a year of thrilling adventure, with sudden change, dramatic experiences and devastating reaction in business and in the social and sentimental life. Unpredictable events demand change.

A child born on this day may be romantic, adventurous and audacious, as well as being fond of change, thrills and the romantic. It may also love intrigue.

For Monday, December 19

MONDAY'S astrological forecast is for a lively and expansive day. At the same time, there is prospect of much conflict or adversity. There may be setbacks and hazards in finances through unwise or speculative manoeuvres. But new contracts are under benefic sway, and friends and employers should be helpful.

Those whose birthday it is are on the threshold of a year of contradictions. Much may be gained through new contracts and advantageous change of travel, but not without disappointment or some form of frustration or obstruction. Much depends on acumen, good judgment and the help of friends. Be very careful in speculation and all manner of chances or gambles.

A child born on this day may be energetic, versatile and ambitious, gaining the recognition of those in position or power. It may be assisted over difficult places and depressions by friendly co-operation.

TABERNACLE W.A.

Group No 6 of the Tabernacle Woman's Association met for their closing meeting of the year at the home of Mrs. Barr, Chatham Street, with twenty-five present.

After an inspiring devotional period and singing of Christmas carols, Jackie Barr gave a recitation. Mrs. Shorey told the story of Scrooge's Christmas Carol in condensed form and Betty Barr gave a Christmas reading entitled "Nellie's Christmas" which was much enjoyed.

The Birthday box was opened, and the receipts added to the collection and donations of the day, brought the total amount raised by the Group for the year, far in excess of 1937.

The meeting closed with the singing of "Silent Night" and Mizpah benediction.

Mrs. Barr served tasty refreshments and the members went home feeling that the work of the year had been worthwhile and with the determination to do the best possible during the coming year.

TOBACCO TAXES

Some people have a tendency to drink the country out of debt, and themselves into the grave, but from figures in the Financial Post this week there are a lot of Canadians smoking the country out of the red. The Dominion Government takes $40,000,000 a year in excise and sales tax on tobacco products and it would take the great Lake Shore mine nearly 2½ years to produce that much gold. Nearly 7,000,000,000 cigarettes are marketed in Canada during the year.—St. Catharines Standard.

Why the Weather!

By Major A. H. Thiessen
Science Service Meteorologist

Almanacs! If you have that habit it will soon be time to buy a new almanac. The first printed almanac appeared between 1450 and 1461. Almanacs generally contained tables as astronomical events, and many were also a register of ecclesiastical festivals and saints days. Early almanacs contained "prognostications" (not always of the weather), and that has continued to be the practice to the present times with many makers. The only weather predictions which can be relied upon are those issued by organized weather services of governments. To this effect there is an old Danish proverb which says: "The almanac maker makes the almanacs, but God makes the weather."

FORCES OF FRANCE READY TO FIGHT FOR GREAT BRITAIN

Foreign Minister Bonnet Makes Stirring Speech in Chamber

'NO SURRENDER' BLOC

France Unwilling to Cede One Inch of Territory to Italy

Paris, Dec. 19 (AP)—Foreign Minister Georges Bonnet told the Chamber of Deputies today that "in case of unprovoked aggression all the forces of France—on land, sea and in the air—spontaneously and immediately would be utilized for the defence of Great Britain."

During a brief review of foreign affairs Bonnet indicated that France expects Great Britain to do likewise for her.

"The foundation of our diplomatic action remains the Franco-British entente," he said. "If one of the two nations should be the object of unprovoked aggression, the other certainly would not hesitate to come to her aid.

No Surrender Bloc.

"How could it be otherwise when it is a question of two nations like France and Great Britain whose relations, following the expression of Mr. Chamberlain, 'are so close they surpass simple juridical obligations because they are founded on an identity of interests.'"

A French "no surrender" bloc organized forces to fight what it feared was a plan by Great Britain and France to turn over part or all of British and French Somaliland to Premier Mussolini.

The bloc, uniting Communists, Royalists and Independent Centrists, opposed cession of any East African colonies to Italy.

Members of the group claimed that Prime Minister Chamberlain would go to Rome with such an offer when he visits Mussolini Jan. 11-14.

Mussolini Silent.

Mussolini's silence in his Sardinia speech yesterday on the Italian campaign for territorial expansion in the Mediterranean and Red Seas failed to stifle French fears. Some observers believed his silence only meant he was aware of such offers from London and Paris despite denials from officials of both capitals.

Among thing sthat worried the "no surrender" bloc were these:

First, Chamberlain's visit.

"He goes to negotiate, not just to shake hands," the well-informed commentator Pertinax wrote, "and in negotiations these days it is the democracies which give, according to his (Prime Minister Chamberlain's) views."

Second, an editorial in the London Times Dec. 17 on Italian claims in French Somaliland declared "that there is certainly room for a new working agreement."

Similar Editorial.

French observers pointed out a somewhat similar Times editorial appeared early in the Sudetenland crisis last fall saying in effect that perhaps Sudetenland should be ceded by Czecho-Slovakia to Germany.

NEWBURGH YOUTH KILLED BY A CAR

Stepped Directly Into Path of Vehicle Two Miles West of Kingston

Kingston, December 19.—(CP)—Wilkes Peters, 26-year-old son of Mrs. Isabel Peters of Newburgh, Ont., died yesterday from injuries received when struck by an automobile on No. 2 highway two miles west of here late last night.

Police believe Peters who was walking on the highway, accidentally stepped in the path of a car allegedly driven by Bruce Irvine of Alexandria, Ont., who was driving east, Peters was rushed to hospital here but died shortly after being admitted. An inquest will be held.

AMBASSADOR HOME

Seen aboard the Queen Mary as he arrived in New York for a vacation, is Joseph P. Kennedy, United States ambassador to England. He will remain in United States until February, but declared his return was "no more important and no more urgent" than any vacation. The policy of the British government in European affairs had not brought the expected results, he said, but must continue or give way to chaos and war.

HOUSE JAMMED WITH FURNITURE

Retired Bank Employee Led Reclusive Life

Newmarket, Ont., Dec. 19 (CP)—The executors of Edgar A. Bogart's estate, after two weeks of hard work still don't know the full value of the property left by the 75-year-old retired bank employee who lived the life of a recluse.

When the executors entered Bogart's home after his recent death they found the house jammed with furniture, coins, weapons, china, clothing, newspapers and other oddities collected over a period of years. A staff of men has been attempting to catalogue the assorted objects for the last two weeks.

Each room in the house, which no one but Bogart had entered in the ten years prior to his death, was piled with his belongings to such an extent that only narrow passages from door to door were left open. Hundreds of dollars worth of furniture and clothing, bought years ago and never unwrapped or uncrated, was strewn through the house.

Pupils Practise Citizenship and Practical Living in New System

Regina, Dec. 19 (CP)—Miss Mary Gibson, teacher of the town school at Limerick, 75 miles southwest of Regina, has developed a new method in child education by having her pupils practise citizenship and practical living.

A letter of praise was sent to the teacher Saturday by Hon. J. W. Estey, Saskatchewan Minister of Education.

The pupils study citizenship and practical living through the medium of a miniature town—Scholarton.

The miniature town consists of 24 buildings, municipal hall, church, post office, bank, stores, homes and garage. Each child in grades five, six and seven is given a share in erection of the buildings, and becomes a ratepayer. A law making body is set up, following elections by the children of mayor and council after a regular municipal campaign.

Draws Up Code.

The council draws up the code of laws and appoints a health officer, constable, librarian and secretary treasurer, with meetings held weekly. Under the code each child is credited with obedience to the laws, or fined for a breach of them. Dummy money is used and the children have a personal account in the town bank.

Training in language is obtained through speeches and discussions in the elections and council meetings; operating the post office makes in-

CONFIDENCE VOTE GIVEN KING BY LIBERAL CAUCUS

Ninety Liberals Meet in Ottawa on King-Hepburn Split

MEET THIS AFTERNOON

Ottawa, Dec. 19 (CP)—The Liberal caucus this afternoon adopted a resolution expressing "undoubted confidence" in the leadership of Prime Minister Mackenzie King.

Announcement the resolution was passed came from the secret session of Ontario Liberal Senators, Members of Parliament and defeated candidates in the last general election as the caucus adjourned for luncheon at 2.05 p.m. after a session of two and a half hours.

At 3 p.m. the members will meet again to continue discussion of the state of the party and particularly the public quarrel between Mr. Mackenzie King and Premier Hepburn of Ontario.

The Resolution.

The resolution expressing confidence in the Prime Minister read:

"In view of the fact that the leadership of the Rt. Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King, leader of the Liberal Party of Canada, has been subject of criticism in the Province of Ontario we, the Ontario Liberal members of the Senate and the House of Commons, and the unsuccessful Liberal candidates in the past election, as-

CATTLE RUSTLING CHARGE IS HEARD

Charles Bright, Orillia Arrested after Year's Investigation

Cobourg, Ont., Dec. 19.—(CP)—Charles Bright, taken into custody during the week-end at his rented farm near Orillia after police investigation extending more than a year appeared in police court here today on charges of cattle rustling and was remanded a week.

Police said Bright, 38, was going under the alias of Robert Allen, when arrested yesterday. He was charged with theft of horses from two Cobourg district farmers. Officers said he also had been sought in connection with investigation of several burglaries in Darlington Township last year.

The alleged horse thefts took place last September. Police said the animals had been recovered along with two cows a suit of clothes, a set of harness, a wagon and other property alleged to have been stolen from several farms in central Ontario where Bright had worked as a farm hand.

DICTATORS CRITICIZED

London, Dec. 19 (AP)—Viscountess Astor Saturday described dictators as "lunatics at large".

Speaking in support of camps for children, the Virginia-born member of parliament said, "Britain does not expect war, but we never can tell what will happen because dictators are like lunatics at large."

VEHICLE COLLIDES WITH TRUCK ON HIGHWAY CURVE

FOUR ARE INJURED

Occupants of Car Proceeding Home after Visiting in Canfield

Canboro, Ont., Dec. 19 (CP)—A man and two women were killed when an automobile in which they were riding wavered on a highway curve and struck a heavily laden transport truck near this hamlet 20 miles south of Hamilton early today. Four other persons were injured.

The dead: Raymond Schihl, 35-year-old Fort Erie railroad worker; Mrs. Sarah Schihl, 45, wife of William Schihl, and Teresa Koabel, 17.

Mary Teresa Schihl, 16, most seriously injured, suffered a fractured skull, concussion, a fractured jaw and broken ribs. Hospital authorities at Dunnville, seven miles distant, where the injured were taken, feared she would die.

Others hurt were William Schihl, 45, brother of Raymond; William Koabel, 50, driver of the car, and Arthur Collard, a passenger in the truck. Their condition was not thought to be critical. Seven-year-old Anne Irene Schihl, seventh occupant of the motor-car, escaped unhurt.

Proceeding Easterly.

The car was said to have been proceeding east when it swerved to the left and then to the right on approaching a curve. It collided almost head-on with a truck driven by Alfred Crooks, Dunnville. The truck pulled a trailer loaded with a seven ton well drilling rig.

The occupants of the automobile were returning to their home at Stevensville, seven miles west of Fort Erie, after visiting friends at Canfield, near Canboro. The crash occurred before the home of Rev. T. Pryce, Baptist minister of Canboro, who aided other Canboro residents in pulling the victims from the wreckage.

Raymond Schihl apparently was killed instantly. Mrs. Schihl died in the rear seat of the car before she could be removed from the wreckage while Miss Koabel died in the Pryce residence.

Edmonton, Dec. 19 (CP)—Carrying 3,000 pounds of food for Christmas dinners and a cook to prepare it for residents of Port Radium, an airplane piloted by Bob Randall was winging northward today to the Great Bear Lake mining town.

Included in the provisions were 500 pounds of turkeys, 200 pounds of other meats, several hundred younds of vegetables, fruits, nuts, and other Christmas delicacies.

KILLED SELF IN REMORSE

Bucharest, Dec. 19 (CP-Havas)—Colonel Vulturescue, Chief of Staff of the Second Rumanion Army Corps, killed himself Saturday, authorities said in remorse over having caused a serious accident to a dancing companion.

Dancing Saturday night with a young society women, Mme. Iona Lahovary, in a night club, he accidentally set fire to Mme Lahovary's cellophane dress.

'Tragic' Says Premier If Germans Mistake British Love of Peace

Says Feeling Grows No Progress Unless Germans Come Into Partnership

OF MUTUAL BENEFIT

Munich Worth While as Alternative was War Prime Minister Says

By J. F. SANDERSON

London, Dec. 19 (CP)—Leaders of the German nation will be making a "tragic blunder" if they mistake British love of peace and willingness to compromise for general weakness, Prime Minister Chamberlain told the House of Commons today.

The Prime Minister reviewed his foreign policy in a speech featured by firmness and plain language not contained in several of his reviews made recently.

Concerning Germany, Mr. Chamberlain said there is a conviction that unless these strong virile people can be "induced into partnership with others to improve the general lot there will be neither peace nor progress in Europe in the things that make life worth living."

Still Waiting For Sign.

But apparently that spirit on the part of the British nation has not been enough to impress Germany.

"I am still waiting for a sign," Mr. Chamberlain declared "from those who speak for the German people that they share this desire and that they are prepared to make a contribution to peace which would help them as much as it would help us."

The Prime Minister spoke in a debate provoked by a motion of the Labor Party attacking the government's foreign policy. He told the House that if he had to live over the past 18 months he would not change his foreign policy one iota.

'Alternative Was War'.

Even if the policy failed to bring lasting peace to Europe "I would still say it was right to have tried it because the alternative was war. I certainly would not like to take that responsibility on my shoulders unless faced by the madness of others."

In a passing reference to the Dominions the Prime Minister said they had been fully informed of all aspects of the government's foreign policy "and we have been rewarded by a general absence of criticism from that part."

Touching on the Anglo-French relationship the Prime Minister referred to recent mutual defence declarations and said they were more significant than formal treaties because they represented the intentions of governments rather than mere words in a document.

Spanish Issue.

Mr. Chamberlain reiterated the government's intention to refuse belligerent rights to General Franco unless the British plan for the withdrawal of volunteers from both sides is accepted. It is true, the Prime Minister said, that Italy has sent troops to the Spanish insurgents, but since October they had not exceeded 200 men. Then they were only replacements and there had been no increase in the Italian effectives. In his judgment this was not a breach of Premier Mussolini's pledges, on which the Anglo-Italian treaty was made effective.

Deny Suggestion of Cession.

Once again Mr. Chamberlain declined to commit himself on the policies he will advocate when he sees Premier Mussolini in Rome in January. He deprecated reports he would hand over British territories or rights and said they looked to him like attempts "to poison beforehand the atmosphere of our discussions".

The general purpose of the Rome conversations would be to improve Anglo-Italian relations and understanding through personal contacts and mutual confidence. He said it was an "insult" to suggest that he will "betray any cause or abandon any vital principles or sacrifice any important interests either of this country or of our friends."

He denied reports he intended to cede British Somaliland to Italy. He said "no such suggestion" had been made by Italy.

Hugh Dalton, moving the censure motion for Labor, said it was a motion of no-confidence in Mr. Chamberlain "personally". He said the Munich agreement "has unsettled all Europe".

Sir Archibald Sinclair, Liberal leader, declared Chancellor Hitler now is about to move on Memel and the Ukraine and that "the prime minister is still being duped by Mussolini".

ASSOCIATED PRESS IN NEW QUARTERS

Moved Into Rockefeller Centre Without A Hitch

New York, Dec. 19.—(CP)—The general offices of The Associated Press, largest news gathering organization in the world, were moved yesterday to the new 15 storey Associated Press Building in Rockefeller Centre.

So delicately timed and so speedily executed was the change-over that the moving of the A.P.'s "nerve centre" was carried out without interruption in the vast flow of news. To make this possible, it was necessary to have the 285,000 miles of A.P. leased wire operating from both the old "Home" at 383 Madison Avenue and the new quarters at 50 Rockefeller Plaza for a period of two hours.

It was the same system of duplicate wires that was used last Friday when The Canadian Press—New York Bureau moved from Madison Avenue to The A.P. Building without interruption in the flow of world news to newspaper members of The C.P.

In the case of The A.P. a new wirephoto net work was set up, ready for use in case of emergency. Teletypes clicked at the old offices and they clicked in synchronized unison at the new. Reporters were stationed in the bare room at the old building and likewise in the new.

Acceptance of Dictators' Medals Challenged by Secretary Ickes

Cleveland, Dec. 19—(AP)—Henry Ford, Colonel Charles A. Lindbergh, and other Americans who accept medals from dictators had a challenge today from Interior Secretary H. Ickes to explain why their United States birthright is not forfeit.

Ickes speaking last night at the annual Hanukkah banquet of the Cleveland Zionist Society, asked, "How can any American, who calls himself a Christian or who pretends to believe in the enlightened principles that constitute the warp and woof of our American life, accept a decoration at the hand of a brutal dictator who, with that same hand, is robbing and torturing thousands of fellow human beings?

"Perhaps Henry Ford and Colonel Charles Lindbergh will be willing to answer the question. Nor are these the only two free citizens of a free country who obsequiously have accepted tokens of contemptuous distinction at a time when the bestower of them counts that day lost when he can commit no new crime against humanity."

Ford in an authorized statement last November 30, said: "My acceptance of a medal from the German people does not, as some people seem to think, involve any sympathy on my part with Nazism. Those who have known me for many years will realize that anything that breeds hate is repulsive to me."

O. S. D. PUPILS TO HOLD A PAGEANT

At the Ontario School for the Deaf the Christmas festivities are being planned. Tomorrow afternoon at 2.30 a short pageant is being given to which the public is invited.

On Wednesday and Thursday mornings two hundred children will leave for their homes, the one hundred pupils who will remain in the school for the holidays will be given a jolly Christmas with a tree, a Christmas dinner, with all the trimmings and holidays planned to delight the heart of every girl and boy.

On January 4th, classes will be resumed at the school.

STEAM LAUNDRY OFFICE RANSACKED

Robbers entered the office of the Belleville Steam Laundry, situated on Coleman Street, some time last night and ransacked the office furniture and safe. Money was doubtlessly the object of the marauders as nothing was found to have been stolen. All cash had been removed from the company safe on Saturday, the safe door being left unlocked. The robbers searched the safe throughly, however, strewing papers about the office as they conducted a thorough search of the entire premises. Entrance was made through a side door, police were informed by the proprietors upon their opening of the premises today.

CHIMNEY BLAZE IN GROCERY STORE

Firemen took time out from their toy-repairing duties on Saturday when overheated pipes in the building that houses Blue's grocery store on Station Street gave them a busy fifteen minutes.

The blaze that threatened to get out of control, was readily extinguished with little or no damage resulting.

HARMONICA BAND TO ENTERTAIN KINSMEN

Belleville's latest musical sensation, a harmonica band, composed of youthful musicians, headed by Jackie Marsh, amateur singing star, will feature the Kinsmen's banquet tonight at the Queens Hotel where a large number of underprivileged children of the city will be the guests of the clubmen at a turkey dinner.

A chalk talk by John Stephenson, rapidly-rising young artist of the city, and other novelties will provide a variable program for the youngsters while toy and gifts will round ut the evening.

THREE WOMEN GIVEN REPRIMAND FOR THEFT ATTEMPTS

Shoplifting is taking its annual Christmas toll of Front Street stores, managers reported today. While some losses have been incurred by children, the majority of the stolen stock is being removed by young and middle-aged women one department store official stated.

Three red-faced young ladies hurried from a store on Saturday after being discovered in the act of removing merchandise from counters and taken to the manager's office where they were sternly reprimanded and let go.

WRECKING OF OLD KYLE HOUSE STARTS

Fourteen men, under contractor Howes of Picton, commenced work this morning on the demolition of the Kyle House building, Front Street upon which location a modern gasoline service station is to be built. First interior stripping was commenced on Saturday.

IDLE MEN PLEAD FOR SOME WORK

"Tell Santa Claus to bring us a few odd jobs for Christmas", one of Belleville's unemployed stated today. A new all-time low for scarcity of these jobs that help to keep the wolf from the door has been reached this season, according to Superintendent W. D. Ross of the local Employment Office." Scarcity of snow is partly the reason," he said, "while the usual cleaning and other odd jobs have been noticeably conspicuous by their absence."

SLIPPERY ROADS CAUSE OF CRASHES

Several serious motor accidents occurred throughout the district over the week-end, but no injuries to persons resulted. In all cases the reason for the accident was attributed directly to the icy, slippery conditions of the roads, police stated.

A pedestrian narrowly escaped serious injury, while walking along the west side of the bay bridge road shortly after midnight last night. Burton Thompson, R. R. No. 7, Belleville, was proceeding southerly while returning home. Mr. Thompson informed police he had been momentarily blinded by the strong lights of another motor car. Suddenly Mr. Thompson saw a pedestrian loom up in front of his motor car. The driver swerved his vehicle sharply to the left, avoided striking the man, but crashed into the guard rail. One post was broken off, while considerable damage resulted to the vehicle. The name of the pedestrian was not available, police added.

Shortly before 5.00 a.m. today a motor car driven by Thomas Bentley, 200 Dundas Street, crashed into the side of the premises of the Round Spot, an eating establishment situated at the corner of Dundas St. and Foster Avenue. Mr. Bentley told police he drove into the premises for the purpose of procuring coffee but the slippery condition of the driveway had resulted in his vehicle crashing into the side of the building. The fact the motor car did not completely demolish the front of the building was little less than miraculous. The building was badly damaged, however.

A truck driven by Donald Hyche, 96 Cannifton Road, collided with a motor car on Pinnacle Street, on Saturday. Fender damage resulted and damages were settled upon the arrival of police. The car was coming out from the east curb when the larger truck skidded slightly on the icy pavement.

When Fred Light, Trenton, emerged from out of a Front Street gangway in his automobile on Saturday, the vehicle was struck in the rear by a south bound motor car driven by Thomas McAuley, 213 George Street. Here only fender damage resulted and the matter was amicably settled between the parties concerned.

An automobile driven by Chief Wm. Lynch of the Belleville Fire Department, was damaged about the fenders after being struck by another motor car on the Foxboro road last night. Police stated today the second vehicle skidded in an icy rut an collided with Chief Lynch's car.

FINED AND JAILED ON THEFT CHARGE

Lester Coul Given Three Months and Two More if in Default

Appearing for sentence after being convicted of the theft of a number of chickens, Lester Coul, Cooper, Ont. was sentenced to serve three months in the common jail when he was arraigned before Magistrate E. J. Butler K.C., in today's local police court. In addition to the jail sentence Coul was orderered to pay a $25.00 fine plus costs, amounting to $22.10 and also to make restitution of $8.00 for the chickens killed. If Coul fails to comply with the payment of the costs an additional 2 months' jail sentence will be imposed in default thereof, His Worship ordered.

When Coul appeared for sentence today, after being convicted last Friday, Crown Attorney B. C. Donnan K.C., quoted from the Canadian Criminal Code the maximum sentence which could be imposed and asked the court to be severe in its findings.

"People who raised poultry are vulnerable to this type of crime. They can't be expected to keep a 24 hour watch over their poultry and the court is there only medium of protection" stated Mr. Donnan as he urged a severe punishment.

Frank Cushing, local barrister, appearing on behalf of the accused man, asked leniency be shown. "This offence followed a drinking party. The chickens killed and taken were not stolen for profit and as my client has been in jail since December 7th I would urge leniency" concluded Mr. Cushing.

The three months jail term, plus the additional fine of $25.00 and costs followed.

POLICE COURT

Henry Brauner, 28 year old Deseronto farmhand, appeared before Magistrate E. J. Butler, K.C., in today's local police court charged with breaking and entering the garage of Edward Levine and committing the indictable offence of theft.

Brauner was not asked to plead and the case was enlarged when the accused intimated he desired the advice of counsel which necessitated an enlargement for one week. "Have you a lawyer?" asked Crown Attorney B. C. Donnan, K.C. Upon being advised Brauner desired the advice of a lawyer the case was enlarged.

Brauner is charged with the theft of a quantity of cigarettes, cigars and sundries from Mr. Levine's garage.

When Alton Williams, 17 and Charles Carter, 27 both of Harold, appeared for sentence, after being convicted of the theft of two turkeys in previous court, additional charges of theft were read against the accused men again today. Answering to charges of breaking and entering a private dwelling house the pair pleaded guilty as charged and were remanded in custody for one week for sentence.

Obituary

MRS. GEORGE KEILTY

(Stoco)

Mrs. George Keilty of Stoco, passed away this Monday morning Dec. 19th., at the residence of her brother, Mr. Michael Kennedy at Lonsdale in Tyendinaga Township, where she had resided during her illness of three months' duration.

The late Mrs. Keilty, who was in her 47th year, was born in Tyendinaga Township. Prior to her marriage she was Miss Teresa Kennedy, daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Michael Kennedy. For some time she resided in the township where she was born and for the past twenty years she made her home at Stoco in Hungerford Township. In the community she was held in high esteem by many friends to whom her passing has brought sincere regret. In religion she was a faithful member of St. Edmund's Roman Catholic Church at Stoco.

Surviving to mourn her loss are her husband, Mr. George Keilty; five sisters, Mrs. James F. Murphy, Tyendinaga; Miss Lucy Kennedy, Tyendinaga; Mrs. N. J. Williams, Tyendinaga; Miss Loretta Kennedy, Tyendinaga and Mrs. Frank McAuliffe, Lonsdale; two brothers, Mr. Richard Kennedy, Marysville, and Mr. Michael Kennedy, Tyendinaga.

The body of the late Mrs. Keilty will rest at the residence of her brother, Mr. Michael Kennedy at Lonsdale, Tyendinaga Township, until Tuesday and later at her former residence at Stoco. The funeral announcement will be made later.

MRS. JANE GAY

(Campbellford)

His first charge was at Hampton, followed by a charge at Exeter and several in the Bay of Quinte Conference. He left the active ministry after serving at Oakwood, eight miles west of here, because of failing health. He is survived by five daughters, Miss Nell M. Brown of Lindsay, Miss Frances Brown of Windsor, Mrs. F. Barrett of Woodbridge, Mrs. D. M. Eagle of Windsor and Miss Helen L. Brown of New York, and one son, Harry C., of Lindsay.

Band Concert Nets $20 For Toy Fund

Appreciation of the fine response of the public to their appeal for funds through the medium of the efforts of the Belleville Municipal Band and assisting artists last night,. was voiced today by Deputy-Fire Chief Gerald Vance, and members of the Belleville Fire Department.

"The fund was enriched by over twenty dollars, and that will go a long way towards bringing Christmas Cheer to needy families and children" Deputy Vance stated today.

The concert, held in the City Hall Auditorium was enjoyed by a large crowd who generously applauded the fine program given by bandsmen and vocalists. Outstanding were the fine selections given by Harry Moorman and his vocal octette, with their rendition of "Silent Night" standing out in an offering that left nothing to be desired.

In keeping with the Christmas spirit was the fine trombone solo "The Holy City" given by Bandsman Reg. Wardle, while Leo Riggs, whose piano wizardry is well known, again delighted his audience with a fine performance. His Worship Mayor Bone officiated as chairman.

PAGING SANTA CLAUS

By

Jane Corby

"It's getting late, dear," Dora reminded her sister, glancing at the clock. "You have a rehearsal, haven't you?"

"Oh, for goodness sake!" cried Jan. "I wanted to try on that black dress and the blue one to see which you think would look better tonight. But I've got to fly, we're rehearsing that special Jingle Bells number that goes into the show the week before Christmas, and Zambrini gets on edge if anybody is a minute late when he's fixing up a new number."

Jan dropped a kiss on her sister's hair and almost literally flew across the room and out of the door. She arrived breathless at the rehearsal room. All the rest of the girls were there in the shorts they usually wore for practice and that Zambrini had not yet arrived. Jan breathed easier and took her place a little apart from the others, admiring as she always did their lively grace. Over in the corner, a strikingly pretty blond girl was going through a series of intricate exercises which involved repeatedly to the floor, her loose fair hair cascading in a golden shower every time she flung her head forward.

A sudden hush fell on the room and even she looked toward the door, Jan knew that Zambrini had arrived. He bustled into the middle of the group and barked a sharp command. Instantly the girls took their positions and the rehearsal got under way. For the next half hour the room resounded to the steady tapping of many light feet, to the repetitious notes of a single piano and occasionally an irritable burst of explanation or reproof from Zambrini himself. Awaiting her cue nervously, Jan stood close by until Zambrini turned on her suddenly and told her to go off somewhere and sit down.

"For you—later is time enough," he told her. "These girls, I must get them off my mind first." Jan obediently withdrew.

Zambrini, when he had dismissed the chorus and turned his attention to her, had no fault to find with Jan's rendition of the cute Jingle Bells song which she had been assigned. She was drawing a deep breath of relief after the song was over when the orchestra leader looked at her sharply.

"Mr. Harris very displasead," he observed deliberately. "He say to me—'What's wrong with the show, Zambrini? Why we no get big society parties, lots of crowd?' I tell him it's my business to put on a good show; it's not my business to bring in customers."

"I should think not," said Jan uncertainly, "that's all any of us can do—put on as good a show as possible."

Zambrini shook his head. "Mr. Harris—maybe he's wrong," he continued as if Jan had not spoken. "But Mr. Harris, he still the boss. He thinks we should have more customers. Maybe he thinks we should bring them in ourselves."

"Why—" began Jan.

"You know this Mr. Demares'?" said Zambrini. "The girls gossip—they say you know him. Well, why does not Mr. Demares' come to see the show? He like it, he bring his friends. He has plenty friends. The show a big success then. I pleased, you pleased, Mr. Harris pleased."

Jan had listener, bewildered, to this sudden attack. What could Zambrini mean? What did everybody mean? Linking her constantly with this unknown William Anthony Deverest! She stared at Zambrini for a moment, noting the anxious expression in the little round dark eyes. Then she impulsively laid her hand on his arm.

But as she walked to the elevator her step was slow. She could see Paul—she could demand an explanation from him. But that was just what she had been avoiding, even dreading, during the weeks that had just passed. She knew that Paul assumed at least an acquaintance with the elusive society man, and she feared the outburst that would follow should she announce that she had never even seen him. But how was she going to keep up this farce any longer? How wcould she go on pretending that she was personally acquainted with one of the city's wealthiest men, when she might be called upon to produce him at any moment?

Slowly as she walked, she arrived at Paul Harris' office at last and her sudden wild hope that he would not be there was dashed by his invitation to enter. She stood before his desk her eyes darkened with worry.

"Paul, I've been talking to Zambrini. He—he said something about your being disappointed in the way the show was pulling."

Paul stared at her a minute and then said crisply: "Sit down, Miss Payson. I've been wanting to have a talk with you for quite a while and I think this is as good a time as any. You've been around here long enough to know that I don't usually do things without a reason. You are a fair dancer and your voice is good. But there are a hundred other girls who are just as talented, or perhaps more so. Yet I picked you without a trial from among the hundreds of girls who would have considered it an honor to be a star in the Devon Arms' Christmas show. Why did I do it? Because I like the color of your eyes? Or because I always see to it that my employes—and their sisters—have one of the best suites in the hotel?" Paul's teeth gleamed at his humor, but the smile vanished quickly. "Why do you suppose I did it, Miss Payson."

"I—I don't know, Paul."

"Well, I'll tell you. I did it because of your friendship with one of the best known men in town—William Anthony Deverest. I've seen it happen before—a girl in the show knows a man like him, he brings a lot of his friends in to see her; they bring their friends and," he threw up his hands in a gesture, "there you are."

"But—"

"But what happens to me?" Paul said. "I hire the girl, I put her in the show and she never asks her boy friends to come in even once. He stays away; his friends stay away; everybody stays away."

Paul threw down the paper cutter with which he had been toying and walked over to the window in disgust. Jan dared raise her eyes finally and studied his slim back in its faultlessly tailored morning coat. She was trying, in the space of a few seconds, to make a decision that would most certainly affect not only her own life, but Dora's.

She was seeing again her sister's face as she had told her an hour before of her joy in the hotel room and in the new luxuries they enjoyed. The dark, richly furnished room in which she was sitting vanished completely and she could see again the miserable, crowded space on the court that had been all the home she and Dora had had. If she denied knowing Deverest they would be condemned to return to that same squalid atmosphere.

She could not do it! At whatever cost to herself, she must encourage Paul to believe this fairy story a little while longer.

"I'm sorry, Paul," she said hesitantly, "Mr.—Mr. Deverest hasn't been feeling very well."

It sounded lame, even to herself, but Paul accepted it and turned to her with new eagerness. "Then you'll see that he comes in?"

"Why, yes. At least I'll try."

Paul beamed with delight and escorted her to the door with a flourish. At another time she would have been amused at his sudden transition to the perfect maitred' hotel, but now she was to miserable to see anything funny about it. She went back to her room and tried on her dresses and talked about them to Dora, as if nothing had happened. But all the time her mind was revolving round and round the impossible task she had set herself.

The day went on with more rehearsal, a little shopping, a consultation with Mary Elizabeth Howard, a visit to the hairdresser. Jan moved through the program without falteirng, but she never for an instant stopped asking herself that haunting question: What in the world will I do?

By the time the show was over and she was dressing to meet Tony she had arrived at only one clear decision. She would tell him the whole story and perhaps he would think of some way in which they could manage to satisfy Paul.

CHAPTER VIII

"Well!"

Tony's expression was a tribute to the success of the blue satin evening dress. His eyes evidently saw nothing wrong with the willowy vision of loveliness that stood before him, and Jan smiled for the first time that night.

"I can return the compliment," she said, looking at his perfectly cut tuxedo and his general air of having been well scrubbed just a few minutes before.

"Oh, we're stepping out tonight," he said, offering her his arm. "I have the car outside and we're going over to the little dance place across the river. Ever been there?"

Jan shook her head and fell in step beside him, her heart heavy again. The only thing that troubled her about Tony was his constant effort to live up to what was evidently his master's social position. As she took her place in the gleaming car she resented again the fact that everything she was forced to do was only an imitation of the real thing.

"But, Tony, can you afford this?"

As he turned a startled face to her she colored and added, "I mean I would be just as satisfied to—to go to a movie or something."

"Why, you funny little thing." His hand touched hers briefly and reassuringly and then pressed a button and started the car purring softly. "Don't you worry about me and don't you worry about us taking this car, either. In spite of the way you feel about him, my boss is fairly decent and he wouldn't mind this sort of thing at all."

It was the opening she had been waiting for and Jan forced herself to seize it. In halting phrases she told him something of the life she and Dora had led at Mrs. Mallord's. She described Paul's sudden interest in her and her bewilderment as to the cause of it.

As they sped through the traffic with the lights of the Jersey shore reflected in the dark water below them, the man beside her never took his eyes from the road and scarcely interrupted, save for a sympathetic exclamation.

But as she reached the point in her narrative where Paul had referred to William Anthony Deverest, she felt him stiffen with new interest. She made herself go on, giving him a complete picture of all that had happened to her that day. When her voice finally died away, she sat huddled in one corner, feeling again the utter hopelessness of the situation.

She made herself go on, giving him a complete picture of all that had happened to her that day. When her voice finally died away, she sat huddled in one corner, feeding again the utter hopelessness of the situation.

"So you've got to produce William Anthony in person, eh?"

"Oh, Tony, I know that's impossible. But if there was some other way—maybe I could meet somebody else—" she floundered and stopped.

"No, that wouldn't be as good. If they want Deverest, they should have him."

Jan sighed. "Well, I guess Dora and I will just have to forget all about it. I can get a job somewhere else."

"But why," Tony demanded. "You know my boss isn't like a lot of those playboys—he's always avoided publicity like poison. Why, many's the time I've gone to a banquet or a dinner and said I was he. I got away with it, too."

"Tony, you didn't!" Jan could scarcely believe her ears.

"Sure I did. And I'll do it again. Your Mr. Harris will never know the difference." For some inexplicable reason Tony chuckled to himself.

Jan made one last feeble protest. "Are you sure Mr. Deverest wouldn't mind?"

Tony stopped for a red light and took that opportunity to look around at her solemnly. "He wouldn't mind—on my word of honor. In fact, I think he'd be delighted and—amused."

There had been a hundred things to see to before Tony could appear at the Devon Arms. Jan had had a talk with Paul Harris and made it clear to him that there must be no publicity about the appearance of Mr. Deverest. "He absolutely forbids it," she told the hotel manager. Then, to make sure that he would do as she asked, she told thim that Mr. Deverest insisted that he would appear again if so much as one reporter recognized him.

Paul Harris seemed impressed. "I understand—I understand, Miss Payson," he assured her, settling his tie that was already as correct as a necktie could be.

Oh, dear, thought Jan, he is positively beside himself with joy. Suppose he ever finds out that "Mr. Deverest" he's so excited about is only Tony Williams, the Deverest chauffeur. She was half tempted to give up the whole scheme, but when she was back in her room, making up her mind for the twentieth time whether or not to go on with it, Dora interrupted her thoughts....

"Jan, you know something?"

"Yes, dear," said Jan absently, her mind full of the William Anthony Deverest problem.

"I just know I am going to be entirely well again," said Dora, her blue eyes very solemn, "and it's all due, every bit of it, to this beautiful place. Well, not just to this place alone, of course," she added. "That doctor friend of Tony Williams' has had a lot to do with it, I guess. Wasn't it the strangest thing that he should know a famous doctor like that and get him to come to see me? He's really the friend of William Anthony Deverest, Tony's boss, you said, didn't you? Oh, Jan! Do you think we can stay here always?"

"If I have anything to do with it, we can," said Jan grimly.

Jan hoped that the fatal night when Tony was to show up at the Devon Arms would never arrive. But it did. The hours between the time Tony had deposited her at the door of the hotel after a ride in the park and the moment when she had to step out on the dance floor and begin her song, seemed to fly faster than usual. Her fingers had been shaking as she fastened the all white costume she wore. How in the world was she ever to get through her song? If Tony was at the table agreed upon she would die, she knew, and if he wasn't there she would die, too, even more suddenly!

For a moment, as the spot light caught and held her, she was dazzled and could see nobody. But as the song went on and the other girls took up the chorus, the light shifted, and she could see Tony at the ringside table. In fact, Tony's was the only table she could see. Fearfully she appraised him, then caught her breath on a sigh of relief. Silly of her to have worried about him! A chauffeur to a man like William Anthony Deverest naturally was accustomed to the ways of smart night life.

It was because she was staring at him so hard that Jan did not see a girl who was approaching his table until she was suddenly at his side, laughing down at him. Tony pushed back his chair and rose instantly, catching both the hands the girl extended to him in his big brown ones. A wide diamond bracelet flashed on the girl's wrist—the silver fox cape slung over one shoulder hung halfway to the floor.

"She must be somebody," Jan thought, aghast. "It must be some society girl who knows Mr. Deverest. Probably she's asking Tony where he is—and the next thing it will get to Paul Harris that it's only William Anthony Deverest's chauffeurs about whom he's been falling all over himself!"

CHAPTER IX

It was with an effort that Jan took the solo part again as the voices of the other girls came to a stop. She felt as if she could not make a sound. Her throat was constricted with terror, and she was surprised to hear herself singing the mournful notes of the "blues" song that was Zambrini's special pride. It was like a release from prison when she finally got away from the spot light and could relax behind the scenes. She stood leaning against a chair, wondering how long it would be before Paul Harris would know. The orchestra leader, coming up behind her, made her jump, so far away from her surroundings were her thoughts.

"Why you stay back here?" inquired Zambrini solemnly. "Go out see Mr. Deverest. Mr. Harris like that. Go on—go on.... out now." He urged her hastily toward the entrance to the supper room. Mechanically Jan obeyed. This was what their plan had been. She might as well go through with it.

Before Jan was halfway across the room to Tony's table he was on his feet and coming toward her. "You were gorgeous," he whispered, pulling Jan's hand through his arm. He settled her in a chair at the table and sat down in his own, hitching it around so that it would be closer to hers.

"I've ordered supper for you," he said briskly, "we don't have to waste any time over that."

"Oh, Tony," said Jan with a little catch in her voice, "will you lose your job?"

"Why should I?"

"That girl— that girl, half buried in silver fox—won't she tell who you are?"

"You mean Marcia? Did you see her stop here?" said Tony comfortably. "That's Marcia Mayfield, very much Social Register, just out this year. She knows—my boss. Just stopped to ask me when he'll be back in town."

"But won't she tell somebody, maybe Paul Harris, who you are?"

"Oh, no, not Marcia! She's too dizzy, wouldn't waste time gossiping to hotel managers. That girl has enough on her hands trying to marry money her first season. You can forget her. We have just time for once around the floor before the waiter comes. Please....it's heavenly dancing with you," he coaxed. The soft strains of one of Zambrini's famous rhumbas—his nearness as his arm encircled her slim waist, his dark head bent above her—Jan never even thought of refusing.

"Jan!"

Dora's face wore a stricken look. Jan had just gone into the bathroom and set the shower going—now she ran back to the sitting room to see what had caused Dora's cry of distress.

Dora was holding the morning paper in her hand. The daily paper was one of Paul Harris' kindnesses to the sick girl.

"What's the matter?" cried Jan. "You look as if you had seen a ghost!"

"Read it," said Dora, thrusting the paper toward Jan. It was folded back at a little item that seemed unimportant enough.

"Boys arrested for causing disturbance at Y.M.C.A." Jan skipped over the details quickly until she came to list of boys at the bottom of the paragraph. Among the names she found "Jack Mallord". She raised her eyes and met Dora's. Her sister looked so frightened she hastened to reassure her.

"It says here that the boys were allowed to go with a reprimand," she said gently. "It says here that Jack was one of a crowd of boys who persisted in getting into the swimming pool at the "Y" although they are not members, and making so much noise and rough-housing generally that nobody else could enjoy the pool. You know that isn't right, Dora."

"I know. But Jack never had a chance. It's natural that he would want to have a little fun," Dora defended him. "I guess he doesn't know any other way of having fun except racketing around. How could he, living in that awful place?"

"Tell you what I'll do, Dora," Jan said, "I'll try to find time to run around to Mrs. Mallord's after rehearsal and see how things are going. I might make her a little present, just a few dollars. But, gosh, wasn't she the hateful woman!"

Jan was just ready to leave for rehearsal when someone knocked at the door. She had forgotten that it was the day for Dr. Curtis to call.

When Jan had gone Dr. Curtis sat talking to Dora and writing out a few changes in her diet. Suddenly he stopped anl looked up at Dora.

"You are very fortunate in having a sister like Jan," he remarked, as Dora told Jan afterwards "like a bolt from a clear sky."

"You know, Jan, the way he looks after you when you got out of the room, and the way he—sort of—watches you....when you are talking...."

"What in the world are you trying to say?" demanded Jan. She was standing in the middle of the room brushing her hair.

"Nothing," said Dora hastily.

"I should hope not," mumbled Jan from the depths of her hair, but she went into the bedroom as she flung it back from her face. Out of Dora's sight she stood still a moment pressing her hands against her hot cheeks. Dr. Curtis! Dora must be mistaken. The doctor was kind—Jan thought he must be the kindest man in the world—but wasn't it because he was simply interested in Dora's case? Dora was such a darling, and she had read so many romantic stories that she was always trying to figure out a real life romance for Jan.

Jan put on her hat and picked up her bag and gloves. She took her heavy coat from the closet and flung it over her arm and she went through the sitting room. "I won't be back for dinner, darling," said Jan. "You won't be lonesome, will you?"

"Paul—Mr. Harris—" Dora colored faintly as she spoke, "said that he would come up and have dinner with me tonight."

"Oh, he did, did he!" Jan tweaked one of Dora's curls gently, but neglected to mention that she herself was on her way down to see Paul Harris that very minute.

As she went down in the elevator she tried to plan what she would say to the hotel manager. Plainly, now that Deverest had appeared once at the show, Paul expected him to drop in with a party regularly. But though Tony himself would have been willing, Jan was set against the idea. Tony had a good job and it was simply criminal to risk it just for the sake of pleasing Paul Harris. She wasn't going to permit him to impersonate his boss again.

CHAPTER X

Paul Harris was as nearly effusive as was possible for a man of his habitual restraint to be when he saw Jan in the doorway.

"Come in, come in," he invited. Then as Jan obeyed, "Off to see—somebody?"

"I'm going to see Mr. Deverest off," Jan said, trying to appear casual.

"He's not going away again" exclaimed Paul.

"Yes, he is." This was harder than she had expected. There was a brief but chilling silence. Jan forced herself to meet the suddenly alert gaze that the manager turned on her. There was disbelief in his penetrating stare which changed, as Jan watched him in fascinated distress, to a sort of icy anger. But when he spoke his voice was controlled as ever.

"Will Mr. Deverest be gone long?" Paul inquired.

"Indefinitely," said Jan. She might as well get this thing settled once and for all.

"You wouldn't by any chance have had a quarrel with Mr. Deverest?" Paul began.

"Well, it wasn't exactly a quarrel," said Jan hastily. It was sort of—of disagreement."

"Perhaps there is a new —what the columnists call 'heart throb?"

Jan colored at his tone. "I don't know," she said shortly. "Really, Mr. Harris...."

"Come, come, Miss Payson." Paul was suddenly the practical man of the world. "I don't have to explain to you again that your value to the show is chiefly as a drawing card for Mr. Deverest and his friends. I could have hired a girl who could sing and dance as well, perhaps better than you, at less salary than I am paying you. I need never have mentioned supplying her with a room in this hotel, much less a whole suite."

"But Dora—I thought you wanted to get Dora away from that dreadful room where we used to live...." faltered Jan.

"That's beside the point," said Paul sharply. "It is true that I have a certain—sympathy—for your sister and—er—a certain desire to be of help to her. But I never allow sentiment to interfere with business and when I brought you to this hotel it was, I assure you, a business arrangement on my part. I was making an investment in the hope — and apparently mistaken belief—that I would realize on that investment. I felt sure that Mr. Deverest would be a frequent visitor. and that his wide circle of friends would join him more often than not for an after theatre party."

Jan hoped she would not cry. She took a firmer grip on the edge of the desk, staring down at the bright blue blotter which covered the top.

"What do you want me to do now?" she asked in a hushed tone.

Paul was silent. When he finally spoke, she felt the icy fingers that clutched her heart beginning slowly to relax.

She and Dora would stay on in the suite they now occupied. Although they thought it so regal, Jan learned with astonishment that it was by no means one of the desirable suites in the hotel. Its location, the shape of the rooms and its proximity to the elevator made it a renting problem to the hotel manager.

The wardrobe Mary Elizabeth Howard had already provided for her would see Jan through the season, the manager went on. They would also take their meals as before. And in return, Jan was to receive a nominal salary while continuing her work in the floor show.

Jan, stammering a little, managed to thank Mr. Harris and escaped to the street where Tony Williams was waiting, the car drawn up to the curb.

Disturbed and upset as she was, Jan did not see for a minute the white box he held out to her. Almost without noticing what she was doing, she undid the string and lifted the cover. Three magnificent white orchids lay carefully disposed on a bed of tissue. Jan stared down at them, aghast. White orchids! The most expensive flower that could be bought.

Suddenly she hated them for what they represented — for the money they had cost, money that might have meant the difference between life and death to someone —to Dora and herself, indeed, just a short while ago. An unreasoned wave of anger swept over her and when her vision cleared the orchids were lying in the street, crushed under the wheels of a passing taxi. Without comment, Tony urged her into the car, a firm hand on her arm, and then took his own place behind the wheel.

"I thought you liked flowers." Tony's face, in the light from the dashboard, looked a little hurt.

"Yes, I like flowers," said Jan. "I like lots of those things— like beautiful cars, such as this—gorgeous jewels—grand houses—but I have always had to do without them, and as long as I have to do without all the rest of these things, I might just as well do without the orchids, too!"

"Jan," Tony demanded, "what's the matter with you tonight?" Jan said nothing. "You always took the flowers I sent you before."

"It's just silly for a chauffeur, even a chauffeur to a rich man, to spend his money on orchids for a girl like me, who needs other things so much more than she'll even need hothouse flowers." Jan suddenly choked and broke off, fumbling in the pocket of her coat for her handkerchief.... Then Jan managed to tell him, a little incoherently, about her interview with Paul Harris.

She explained that she would still keep her job at the hotel and live there, but that Paul was paying her only a tiny allowance for her work. It wasn't so much the money, she told him, but she had been hoping to save up enough for an operation for Dora. Dr. Curtis had not decided yet that an operation would help her sister, but he had hinted that there was just a possibility of a cure by the surgical route.

"But he can't stop paying you," Tony protested.

"He is really being fair in his own way, Tony. It is only that hotel managers must be pretty hard-boiled. Paul can't afford to let sentiment 'interfere with business,'" Jan quoted bitterly.

CHAPTER XI

"There is Jack Mallord, too, Tony," Jan began after a few minutes. "Dora and I had been planning to give him a real Christmas this year. He's never had anything a little boy likes. I don't think he ever even believed in Santa Claus. If he did he must have been sadly disappointed."

Tony listened with growing interest as Jan outlined the trouble Jack had been in when he and a group of boys broke into the Y.M.C.A. and went swimming in the pool. She was not looking at him as she spoke softly, and did not notice how the man's jaw tightened and his eyes narrowed at her vivid description of Jack's home life and his companions.

"I'd like to see Jack," Tony said, bringing the car to an abrupt halt, "where does he live?"

"Would you really like to go there?" asked Jan doubtfully.

"I think we ought to see what's going on," said Tony. "Sometimes it helps a kid to talk things over with a man who understands his problems."

Jan, vaguely distrustful of the experiment, directed him through the narrow streets that led to her former rooming house. She was still more hesitant when a crowd of boys gathered around the car as they stopped in front of the door. Although they stood respectfully enough they commented knowingly on its make—price—speed—engine—and chomium trimmings.

"Gee, that's Jan Payson!" she heard a voice from the rear of the group say with awe.

"Jack!" she called, as she stepped to the curb. Importantly Jack Mallord shouldered a couple of boys out of his way and sidled forward.

"Jack, is your mother home?" The boy grinned, and made some unintelligible sound that Jan took for an affirmative.

"Well, you tell your mother that I've brought a friend to see her and we want to talk to her and you."

"Aw....gee!" Jack protested, his freckled face reflecting his anguish. "You can ankle in there yourself. She ain't doin' nuttin' now. An' I wanna look at de bus. Lemme blow de horn just once, mister —huh?"

Jan smiled as Jack and his companions crowded around with alacrity—until Tony was lost to view. She was as utterly forgotten in the suddenly created man's world as if she had never existed. She turned and climbed the brown stone steps with a warm feeling at her heart.

Mrs. Mallord, graciously forgetting the troublesome times when Jan and her sister lived in the apartment upstairs, was delighted to see her visitor. She hastily wiped off a chair and admired Jan's Mary Elizabeth Howard outfit with extravagant but sincere praise.

"Sure, and it's grand to see you looking so well, Miss Payson, and how is your dear sweet sister?"

Jan told her the latest news about Dr. Curtis, and then went on to explain, growing slightly hesitant in the face of Mrs. Mallord's undoubted independence, that she had brought Tony over to talk to Jack.

"Tony is so interested in boys, Mrs. Mallord," she told her, "and he is thinking of trying to form a boys' club, or something like that." Jan reminded herself that she must explain this to Tony.

"It's a fine thing to have a smart young man talking to the boys," Mrs. Mallord agreed, to Jan's relief, "but you mustn't be thinking, Miss Payson, that because Jackie got into that little scrape he's a bad boy. A finer boy never lived, though it is my own I'm talking of."

Jan hastened to assure her that Jack would be doing Tony a favor in accepting anything her young man might do. With this view of the matter Mrs. Mallord was more receptive to the idea, and she went back to her original plaint that being in trouble with the law took so much time she had missed her uncle's funeral.

"I just got a letter from my sister-in-law the other day," she said with evident enjoyment. "It was a fine funeral, Miss Payson. She tells me she never saw the like of it for flowers. The first funeral I've missed in twenty-five years," she said dolefully.

Jan, her purpose accomplished, took Mrs. Mallord out to meet Tony. She found him just driving back, the expensive car jammed with dirty, gamin faces that were strangely wistful and frankly-awed by the perfection of the machine in which they rode. They were a subdued group as they tumbled out of the car and stood in an unmoving circle about it, their eyes fastened fixedly on Tony. He looked pleased and happy and, Jan thought, almost as young as the boys around him.

She introduced Tony and Mrs. Mallord and was delighted to see that her usually truculent landlady was instantly won over by the grace of Tony's manners and his instinctive aptitude for saying the right thing.

"You have a fine boy there, Mrs. Mallord. He and I are going to the hockey game tomorrow night if you will let me take him."

Mrs. Mallord since she did not have to defend her offspring, began apologizing for him. She went on to explain Jackie's goodness of heart as an excuse for his evident lack of polish, and this led to relating how it was that Jackie had had trouble with the law, and the funeral she had missed attending. Jan, worried for fear she would be late, tried to interfere, but Tony seemed strangely interested in the recital, and asked for all sorts of details such as the deceased uncle's name and where he had lived.

"Well, I didn't mean to let you in for all that," Jan said with a little laugh when they finally drove away, "but when Mrs. Mallord starts, it's like a steam roller...."

"I enjoyed it."

That was all Tony said. Jan would have been surprised, and Tony was a little surprised at himized the departed uncle's name self, to find that he had memorand address, so that he could see his lawyer in the morning and arrange if possible for a posthumous legacy for Mrs. Mallord and Jack!

THIS BUSIEST OF WEEKS

The busiest week of the year is here, a week crowded with so much business, such handling and buying of gifts, such patience on the part of clerks, such overloading of the arms with parcels, so much work in the homes "doing up" gifts, so many Christmas trees, so much of everything, including the Christmas market which expands beyond the proportions of all other seasons in the effort to make Christmas and Yule the merriest of seasons.

There are few persons who will take life easy these next five days, everyone will have an unusual desire to keep as busy as can be. Activity is in the air that is breathed.

At this time the world gives the most magnificent demonstration of the power of ideal and imagination and thought, which compels the entire population to think along one line and on one subject. And it is not dictatorship, because everyone delights to think in the spirit of the season.

This week finds pupils winding up the work of the first part of the school year in a fervor of interest, mothers busying themselves making preparations for the tasty foods that are to be stored in the pantries and larders during the next few days, and with brightening up the homes with decorations, inquisitive children who are relentless question-boxes, and parents, sons and daughters at work in the world of business or in industry putting the finishing touches on the season's work which will spread joy across the continent and world from pole to pole. Then there are the laden express cars and trucks, the crowded coaches moving relatives it may be thousands of miles to the great high festival of the year.

And Santa Claus standing ready with his reindeer for their annual world visit.

OUTLOOK IN ASIA

Montreal Gazette sees all the signs of a war without end in China and says:

"It has dragged on into a second winter and, not withstanding Japan's great military achievements; in spite of the fact that within less than two years' campaigning, her forces have overcome China's organized military defence, she is still very far from successfully completing the task she set herself to accomplish quickly. This was to bring China to her knees. At least nine-tenths of the Chinese railway system is in Japanese hands. With one or two exceptions the principal ports on the Chinese coast from Tientsin to Canton have been seized by the invaders, whose warships control some 600 miles of the Yangtse. The richest territories in China have been devastated, industry has been paralyzed. Upwards of 1,000,000 lives have been lost and at least 30,000,000 Chinese people have been rendered destitute and homeless. Notwithstanding all this, China will not acknowledge defeat. Her accredited leaders reaffirm that she is interested in peace only on honorable terms, and such peace terms as Japan has deigned so far to offer, China finds it impossible to accept.

"How far China, though she has lost virtually everything which goes to the making of a modern republic, is from yielding, is made apparent in the new "political programme" announced—and published yesterday—by Marshal Chiang Kai-shek, an intrepid leader who continues to foster and direct the spirit of resistance in his people. Arousing the masses, the generalissimo said at a conference of officers at military headquarters in Central China, is now more important than battles. Accordingly, the policy he has decided to carry out, after purging the government of every defeatist element where it appears, embraces organization of farm unions and mass education and mobilization of guerilla armies. These armies will relentlessly direct guerilla attacks on Japanese forces throughout occupied territories. Japan, says Chiang Kai-shek shall be forced to learn that it is impossible to conquer and paralyze a vast country in which lives one-fifth of the human race."

NAZIS' YULETIDE

The Germans in public must celebrate Yuletide, not Christmas; Yule is the old winter solstice feast of the northern pagans and the Germans must observe that. "Our Germanic followers celebrated Yule, which is older than Christ and which Christendom borrowed from the German prototype," runs one of the German instructions. German girls are to sing no Christmas carols and religious observance is confined to churches, and must not be introduced into community celebrations. Christmas must not play a part in the schools, but ancient pagan legends are to be acted in drama.

Now outwardly the Germans are to capture the ancient spirit of the pagans.

How poor the German Nazi spirit is, is indicated in this, that what may be allowed the individual in church and in private life, is considered not "fit" for community life. As a matter of fact the German Nazi cannot eliminate Christmas, as probably they would do if they could invade the churches and the sanctity of the homes. They have not banned Christmas trees, which are as popular as ever.

Bishop Haeckel, who has charge of the church foreign affairs department, declares that "the message of the Gospel must always stand in the midst of strife. After one year of war perils avoided, it behooves Christians of all the world to kneel by the manger and render thanks, but also to pray for strength to continue peace work already begun."

There is hope in this. It points clearly to the fact that even the Nazis cannot wipe out Christmas and its message.

Yule lives in records and traditions but it probably would not even be remembered if it had not been for the church which converted the pagan Germans to Christianity.

BIGGEST STORY OF THE WEEK ends it all with a revolver shot. Big Shot in business world turns out to be swindler with record of crime and imprisonment behind him. Son of a poor Italian immigrant, this man's life story surpasses any lurid fiction which could be written. After more or less petty crime which led him to prison, he changed his name and bought into an old and honorable firm with a million dollars—leaving it short eighteen million. He rode high, accepted as a shrewd financier and big business man, owned a sea-going yacht, rode high socially, and wrote a glowing autobiography of himself for Who's Who, starring as a righteous, sober and upright business man in the high brackets of finance. Justice caught up with him at last and he decided the jig was up, and blew out his brains.

CALLING ALL CLANS! At last it can be told that learned professors have linked the Cohens and the Kelleys with the Mackenzies and the MacGregors and the McNichols and the MacKechnies and all the other Macs, Cohens and Modens. Listen to this discovery made by a Dresden professor and reported on editorially by the Hamilton Spectator:

> "The Scots are Jews! And lest the Cohens and Cowans unite to smite the writer hip and thigh, he must explain that the opening sentence is the title of a book of Nazi education, dedicated to whip-wielding Aryan Julius Streicher by an admiring German professor, with compliments for his "tireless fight against Jewry."
> "Can the Herr Professor be trying to set Julius upon auld Scotia's sons? Past experiences have proved unfortunate to Germans who opposed the countrymen of the 51st Division.
> "Yet it is no more dangerous to attack the sons o' the thistle than the sons of Judah, for history shows no example where a Gentile has persecuted Jewry—or Israel (which we are said to be)—and has prospered either personally or nationally.
> "The professor is, it appears, converted in an opposite sense to the theory of Anglo-Celtic Israel. To-day the desert buries Nineveh and Babylon, and the sand blows over the courts of Antiochus.
> "And Jew and Scot shake hands, for at least the professor has denied both an ersatz Aryan ancestry.
> "The Dresden savant explains that such folk as the Mackenzies, Grants, MacGregors, Bruces, Wallaces, Campbells, MacNicols and others of the race are only the progeny of a lot of obstinate Jews shipped to the Hebrides by Fuehrer Titus after the sack of Jerusalem. He says that the Isle of Lewis is really the Isle of Levy, because the Germans manage to mispronounce its real Gaelic name. The Hebrides, he says, means the Hebrew Isles, and, furthermore, the Scottish characteristics, which, he alleges, are those of duplicity, avarice, clannishness, as well as their indecent dress, mark them as Jewish without doubt.
> "The German writer infers, then, why it is so hard for later comers to auld Scotia to make a living in Aberdeen.
> "Irish genealogies, which are claimed by many Highland families, trace descent to Enoch and Noah. Which establishes also the connection between the Cohens and Kellys.

LOOKING BACKWARD

20 YEARS AGO

December 19th., 1918.

The British Chemical Company at Trenton, which suspended operations at the close of the war, has returned to the town of Trenton the bonus granted to the company amounting to $10,000.00. The management of the company considered that the plant had not operated long enough to justify the retention of the bonus.

Mr. T. E. Ketcheson has returned to the city after spending some time in Western Canada.

Mr. Thomas Montgomery, Reeve of Rawdon Township and Warden of the County of Hastings, was a visitor in the city today.

The Belleville Hockey Club has decided that there is not room in Belleville for two junior teams and the O.H.A. has been notified to this effect. This means that the Ontarios of this city will not be admitted and the Belleville Club will drop out of Group 4 and take the place allotted to the Ontarios in Section B of Group 2 with Kingston and Picton. The following players are registered with the Association and are eligible under the age rule and do not require new birth certificates: Belleville, A. R. Holway, W. H. Smith, Allan R. Coon, J. Hulin, C. C. Beach, H. A. Smith, W. T. Canning, B. Gerow and G. V. Weir.

30 YEARS AGO

December 19th., 1908.

Mr. A. Matthews has returned to the city after spending some time in Calgary, Alberta.

Mrs. L. G. Coleman of this city is visiting her father, Judge Davidson in Montreal.

At the last meeting of Derry Lodge No. 30, True Blues, the following officers were elected: John Wenger, W.M.; E. W. Fenn, D.M.; Charles Hanna, Sect-Treas.; William Cole, F.S.; Frank Creeper, R.S.; D. H. Boyle, Chaplain; N. Kiser, Conductor; W. H. Kent, Director; F. Pizzone, I.G.; Trustees, C. R. Cole, W. H. Cronk and W. Smith; Caretaker, N. Smith; Committee, F. Harvey, W. Clazie, J. Irvine, J. McGlastrom and William Thompson.

At the annual meeting of the Belleville Branch of the Bible Society, the Rev. Robert Wallace presided and the following officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, Rev. Robert Wallace; First Vice President, S. A. Gardner; Second Vice President, W. B. Deacon; Treasurer, Rev. A. L. Geen; Secretary, H. C. Hunt; Executive Committee, the postors of the city churches and the following: W. P. Hudson, S. Russell, John Elliott, J. W. London, C. M. Reid, William McKeown, Thomas Stewart, J. E. Walmsley and Rev. A. Martin.

A turkey weighing 22 pounds brought $3.50 on the market on Saturday.

The closing exercises at Miss Martin's private school on Turnbull Street, will take place on the evening of Dec. 21st.

THE DIAL TELEPHONE

Now that the question of the automatic versus the manual telephone is being discussed by the utilities commission of Port Arthur, it is interesting to look back to the curious way in which the dial system came into being. It might be supposed that a system that has gained recognition as the most efficient and prompt method of handling telephonic communication would have been the result of long study by experts and of experiments by trained engineers. While it is true that experts and engineers have contributed to the perfecting of the automatic dial telephone, it is remarkable that the idea that it might be possible to make connections automatically without the intervention of an intermediary in the person of a human being, as is the case with the manual instruments, originated with a man who was neither an expert on telephones nor an electrical engineer.

It was a business man, who found that he had difficulty in getting perfect service from the humanly operated telephones, A. B. Strowger, who conceived the notion that some method could be devised by which the wires that were necessary to establish a connection could be brought into contact with one another by mechanical means and thus the possibility of error would be greatly minimized. Mr. Strowger took a round collar box, the lid of which could be revolved upon the body of the box, and, thrusting pins through the top and bottom, invented a way in which these pins could be connected by the revolution of the top in any series of unions that was desired. Thus the crude notion of the dial system came into being. Mr. Strowger placed his idea in front of the experts who, he believed, could turn the theory into a practical operating system, and this laid the foundation for the present complicated, but efficient, automatic telephone exchanges.

It required a great deal of research and experimenting to develop the system to the point where it was capable of handling hundreds of thousands of telephones without human intervention. The first device invented was the connector, which was merely intended to make the connections on a single switchboard. Multiple switchboards in an exchange required a further device and the selector was invented, which picked out the switchboard on which the number required was located and brought into play the connectors which joined the circuit. Finally, as the automatic phone superseded the manual phone and big cities had several exchanges, situated at a distance from one another, a third device, called a director, directed the call to the exchange required and the selectors and connectors did the rest.

Such was the development of the automatic telephone exchange, developed directly from the brainstorm of an angry man who was annoyed with the service that his central was providing. Those who dial their numbers today might well think of the rows of pins in a round collar box, which A. B. Strowger used to demonstrate the feasibility of his contrivance.

Incidentally, Canada holds second place in the world for the per capita number of telephones, having one instrument for every 7.1 persons, the United States leading with one for every 6.1 persons. New Zealand comes third and Australia sixth, with Denmark and Sweden coming between. — Fort William Times-Journal.

YOUTH'S PROBLEM

The transient unemployed is today a cancerous sore in Canada. Thousands of men are drifting from city to city. Youths in their 'teens and early twenties are becoming drifters: there is nothing more tragic than to see these young men becoming wanderers on the face of the earth. It is a reflection on democracy.. In the dictatorship countries they are at least put to work in labor camps or in the army. It is for that reason youth is behind Hitler and Mussolini.—London Free Press.

Horn Tooting Ended in Rome

Mussolini lost his temper on the afternoon of December 14, 1934. It was a lucky thing, because he not only silenced the nerve-wracking clamor of motorcar horns in Italian cities, but incidentally discovered a way to reduce motorcar accidents. The incident in Rome may yet have its effect on motorists in America, writes Jerome Beatty in "Public Safety," publication of the U.S. National Safety Council.

On that momentous day Mussolini was deep in matters of State. Through his open windows poured the inimitable uproar of an Italian street—horns barking resentfully or blaring in full, rich triumph at every crisis. The uproar "got" Il Duce. He rang a bell.

"There shall be," he declared, "no more automobile horns blown in Rome."

Later he explained that he meant only that he would like a little less noise. But the edict was in effect. For the first week, a policeman would stop a tooting driver and explain "the silent circulation of automobiles." Thereafter the law was enforced. Citizens began to enjoy a silence they never had believed possible. Tourists are fined $2.50 per toot, Italians more, depending on the toot's volume. Some offenders lose their licences for a month.

"I was in Rome for two weeks and never heard a single honk," Beatty writes. Impulsive drivers who can't trust themselves have switches on their horns, and when in Rome turn off the current. The improvement is incredible. Moreover, in all Italian cities now, night tooting is forbidden. In most, a tiny honk is permitted in an emergency. Taxis are allowed only bulb horns, which squeak a faint, pleading note.

For three years Italy watched the experiment. To make the cities quiet was fine, but not if accident rates went up. Miraculously, they went down. Today Italy is one of the few countries where accidents are decreasing. From 1935 to 1936 Italy reduced accidents in which people were killed or injured from 39,997 to 34,905. Rome followed the same marked trend in those years—5,259 to 4,389.

Not perfect, no, but moving in the right direction, while American figures mount yearly. After a thorough investigation, the Royal Automobile Club now states officially that "silent circulation" is there to stay, that it has cut the accident rate.

Havana forbids horns between midnight and five in the morning. Bombay prohibits the sounding of horns on stationary vehicles—a singularly wise idea. Bucharest outlaws horns at all times. The habit is spreading around the world; yet in the United States, New York alone has made a feeble gesture towards it. Commissioner Valentine announced that his men had issued 20,163 summonses and 292,500 warnings for promiscuous noise-making while the anti-noise drive was on in 1937. But the drive didn't "take."

The greatest obstacle is the mistaken belief that the use of the horn is an aid to efficient driving. Listen to Dr. Miller McClintock, director of the Yale University Bureau for Street Traffic Research: "Many of the best drivers I know," he says, "don't use their horns more than half a dozen times a year. If you go blasting your way along the road, you identify yourself as a second-class driver. The essence of good driving to foresee difficulties far enough ahead so that you prepare for them calmly and evade them smoothly. In passing another moving car you may be justified in blowing, but many times if you feel you have to give a warning signal you shouldn't pass at all."

That Body of Yours

Cause and Cure of Mucous Colitis

Now that it is known that some individuals find that certain foods are hard to digest or that they irritate the stomach or large intestine, what is called the smooth, bland, or non-irritating diet is often prescribed As this diet often fails to irritate or stimulate the lining of the lower bowel these individuals often suffer with constipation. To correct the constipation they may eat some bulky or stimulating food—raw fruits with their roughage. This roughage stimulates the bowel so much that it causes the bowel to grasp the wastes too severely, thus causing spasm. Naturally, if spasm occurs, little or no waste can pass along, and so constipation, gas distress, and pain result.

The irritation and spasm may cause some inflammation of the lining of the large bowel or colon—colitis. This is called mucous colitis is considered mucous is usually formed. It is not true colitis. And the underlying cause of mucous colitis is now known to be the nervous or emotional make-up of the individual. It is really a vicious circle in that the emotional upsets cause the constipation, gas formation, and pain, and then the constipation, gas formation and pain in turn cause embarrassment and distress of mind. The cure, then, is to have the individual acquire calmness of mind and spirit.

In speaking of mucous colitis patients, Dr. Walter Alvarez, in the Mayo Clinics, says that one can reassure them and get them to try to discover what brings on an attack of soreness. Often it is emotional strain or excitement or the neglect of constipation, or the eating of certain foods to which the individual is sensitive, or the coming of a cold, or the taking of a laxative.

"Sometimes all one needs to do with these people is to get them to see that their troubles are largely due to their unhappiness and the constant strain of a frustrated or disappointed life. Often again, one can give them great relief by teaching them to relieve constipation by a daily enema of physiologic saline solution (2 teaspoons of table salt to a quart of water) In other cases, one can work what is almost a cure by removing one or more irritating foods from their diet."

A SCHOLARLY BIRD

A certain advertisement setting forth the virtues and accomplishments of a certain African grey parrot, for which a good home (and incidentally sixteen guineas) was required, has opened up a subject which may be of interest not only to orthinologists but to philologists.

This particular bird is described by its owner as being a female, only four years old but already the pearl of her sex. She answers (or at any rate reacts) to the name of Mae West; and her vocabularly is said to include all the well-known catch-phrases which are associated with the pneumatic and scintillating star. "How'm I doin', boys?" the knowing bird, head on one side, inquires; and issues, no doubt, an impartial invitation to any male visitor who may happen to drop in—be he vicar, electrician, window-cleaner, piano-tuner, or bailiff—to "come up and see me some time." It is safe to assume, too, that she has all the other Hollywood catch-phrases on the tip of her beak, from "Sez you!" and "Oh yeah!" to "So what?" and "Be your age!"

But the point is that one day she will be her age. All parrots are long-lived; and the African grey has been known to knock up a cool century and a half. In a hundred and forty-six years from now — unless the scientists speed up their efforts considerably in the meanwhile—we shall all be quite dead—the would-be vendor of the bird, her prospective purchaser, even (alas) the real Mae West herself. But her namesake, the parrot, though she may by then be a little hard of hearing and convinced that all the young people mumble, will still be clinging tenaciously to her perch and issuing husky invitations in a Ninon de l'Enclos voice.

Will her hearers understand? We of the present day like to think of Mae West's phrases as being immortal. Will their immortality prove to be a purely relative affair, like the permanence of a permanent wave? Will they, to those hygienically clad, eugenically begotten denizens of that brave new world, sound as unintelligible as are to us the topical jokes in the robuster prose passages of Shakespeare?

And here is the corollary. When we are introduced, as we sometimes are, to a very old parrot, and its remarks seem a little obscure, are we, in our turn, listening to the ephemeral catch-phrases of the late eighteenth century? What a line of inquiry for the scholarly minded! Let us hope that the bird-fanciers and the word-fanciers will lose no time in getting together about it.—London Times.

NEW CANADIAN BALLROOM DANCE CREATED

Seeking a Canadian equivalent of "The Lambeth Walk," Cecil Da Costa, prominent Toronto dance instructor, and Harold Sutton, newspaperman and composer, merged their talents to create the new Canadian novelty ballroom dance, "The Injun." Mr. Sutton composed the popular song, "Red Man Blues," while Mr. Da Costa, after studying Canadian Indian tribal dances, created the intricate steps of "The Injun." Mr. Da Costa is shown, LEFT, teaching the new dance to an enthusiastic pair of dancers.

C. G. I. T. TAKE PART IN CANDLE LIGHTING SERVICE

CONTRIBUTE GIFTS

Over one hundred Canadian Girls in Training representing the groups of Tabernacle, St. Thomas, Bridge Street, Holloway, and Christ Churches took part in an impressive candle lighting service held in Tabernacle Church yesterday afternoon.

The service was under the auspices of the Girls' Council of which Miss Elaine Cook is president, and Miss Helen Scott, sponsor. Evergreen boughs formed arches at the chancel of the church where white gifts to be distributed among the needy were heaped against a white background.

Mrs. M. P. Duff presided at the organ, and a choir made up of the different groups led in carol singing. Miss Cook was in charge of the service, welcoming the visitors who showed by their presence a keen interest in C.G.I.T. work. As the congregation joined in the Processional hymn the members of the C.G.I.T. filed in, attractive in their crisp uniforms of blue and white. After they had taken their places at the front of the church, Miss Cook read from the Scripture the story of the first Christmas and led in prayer.

The carol singing by the girls was beautifully rendered, the "First Noel" with descant, being especially well done. A legend of Christmas was told by Miss Marion Fisher.

Lighting the Christmas candle which symbolizes the great love which gave to the world a Saviour, Christ, the Light of the world, Miss Cook asked each girl to light her candle from the never-failing light that has shone down the ages. The lights in the church were lowered and the radiance from the candles made a brilliant glow in the semi-darkness. As the recessional hymn was sung, the girls walked slowly out, two by two, still with their burning tapers to carry their light out into the world.

SIBERIAN WINDS

Some of the coldest temperatures, 25 to 30 degrees below zero, were reported from the Carpathian Mountain districts of eastern Czecho-Slovakia. In Prague it was 17 below.

The bitter cold was especially unwelcome in Czecho-Slovakia. Because the loss of the rich Sudetenland coalfields to Germany has resulted in a coal shortage.

No Snow in Paris.

In Paris yesterday a low of 14 degrees was registered, but there was no snow. Cafe terraces lighted braziers to keep their customers warm.

Berlin reported 22-degree weather while ice-breakers off the north German coast attempted to keep the Baltic free of ice jams.

Ferries and swinging bridges in the Netherlands were frozen into inaction and many roads were impassable due to ice. Because of the strong east wind, water was so low between the mainland and the Frisian Islands that no ships could cross.

Delayed By Blizzard.

Lifeboats aided distressed ships off the British coast. Five men were saved from a sinking French schooner near Land's End, Britain's westernmost point.

Two men on a Hull trawler were rescued after the ship sprang a leak. A wireless message from the Netherlands Steamship Alderamin reported one seaman was lost overboard during the storm.

The cold spell gave promise that the usual wet and muddy Christmas of Western Europe might give way to traditional picture-postcard snow and holly weather.

TRENTON

ALFRED WILLIAMS GIVEN TWO YEARS

Convicted of Assaulting Police Officer in Discharge of Duty

Trenton, Dec. 19.—(Special)—A special meeting of the town council, held in the municipal offices late last week, resulted in the consideration by council of a scheme to extend water mains along West Street, up to the edge of the property of the Central Bridge Co., thus offsetting any further danger of another disastrous fire similar to the one which recently destroyed the plant. On that occasion, it may be remembered firemen found the nearest hydrant almost a mile distant, and not until extra hose arrived from Belleville could they began to function effectively. This extension is said to involve an installation cost of about $2,600, while council are also ready to order a considerable amount of new hose.

Given Two Years

Much local interest centred round the trial on Friday of Alfred Williams on charges of assault against police officers, and his sentence of two years in Kingston penitentiary astonished some and apparently satisfied others.

Pleading for his client, Attorney Jacob Goodman of Belleville, pointed out to Magistrate Butler at the conclusion of the hearing of the evidence, that the accused had been in custody for two months during which time he was examined in the Ontario mental hospital at Kingston and pronounced sane, and suggested that local police officers were certainly "out to get" Williams and bore him a deep-seated grudge of long-standing He suggested that he be released on suspended sentence at the same time announcing that he had made five trips to Trenton and was withdrawing from the case. Magistrate Butler, however, took a different view of the matter and stated that while Williams denied even struggling to resist arrest a number of witnesses gave evidence exactly the opposite. He refused to credit the implication that police were "down on" Williams, and said that in his opinion police officers had a difficult enough job at best without such cases arising in the courts. He followed this up with his sentence.

Carefully Questioned

Crown Attorney B. C. Donnan, K.C., questioned Williams carefully on a number of points brought out by three witnesses in previous evidence, and when he found that he denied absolutely each statement, caused a further charge of giving false evidence, in effect perjury, to be issued against him, and said that before Williams was sent to Kingston he would have to face that further charge to show him something of what it meant to make a statement under oath, which had no truthful foundation. Mrs. Williams, brought along to testify for her husband, was obviously in terror of him and spoke so low, that she could barely be heard. When the Crown said "You are afraid of your husband aren't you, Mrs. Williams?" she would not answer, and it became apparent that she was afraid of the effect of any statement that she might make. The only other case of the day came early when a Carrying Place resident paid a fine and costs of $17.65 following a minor accident a few days previously from which a charge of reckless driving arose.

Change Takes Place

Official change over of commanding officers was made at the Air Station this week with Wing Commander C. M. McEwen, M.C., D.F.C., formerly of Ottawa taking over command from Wing Commander A. A. L. Cuffe who goes to the group office at Toronto. Wing Commander McEwen took charge in Thursday with his predecessor leaving at once for Toronto. The new commanding officer is a man of wide aviation experience, and is well known and much respected in the service. He was a war-time ace with a reported thirty enemy planes to his credit, and he comes here from Ottawa highly recommended. At a dinner given in the officers' mess in his honor a few evenings before he officially took the command he was greeted by his officers and by Group Captain Godfrey, former O.C., here, a visitor for the occasion and by Wing Commander Cuffe. Guest speaker of the evening was W. A. Fraser, M.P., of Trenton.

Officers of the R.C.A.F. staged a jolly dance in their mess on Friday evening of this week.

FORCES OF FRANCE

The Sudeten Article was disowned by the Foreign Office but at the Munich Conference the Sudeten regions were ceded by Czechoslovakia and provision made for further territorial concessions to Poland and Hungary.

Third, Premier Daladier's government's insistence that contrary to custom there should be no foreign policy debate when the budget for that ministry is discussed in parliament today. Opposition members asked if that meant parliament would have territorial cessions to approve when such debate finally takes place.

Does for Both

Sarcastically, opposition deputies commented that since "France's foreign policy is governed from London" today's debate in the British House of Commons "does for both countries." Communists moreover expressed fears that government Spain might also become involved in negotiations to find a solution for Italy's ambitions in the Mediterranean.

Pending debate on the Daladier Government's foreign policy next month. Foreign Minister Bonnet said he would confine himself to repeating previous statements on foreign policy that:—

1. French-British relations never have been closer than at present.
2. The Franco-German friendship accord was signed to promote European peace and settle "misunderstanding" between Paris and Berlin.
3. His oft-repeated statement "France never will cede an inch of territory" with an explanation of diplomatic action taken following Italian demonstrations demanding Tunisia, Corsica, and Nice.
4. France will hold to the non-intervention accord designed to isolate the Spanish Civil War.

"We believe that the war would end soon if foreign states left the Spanish alone, face to face," he said.

Police Guard Consulate

Djibouti, French Somaliland, Dec. 19—(AP)—Police guared the Italian consulate today as columns of French and native inhabitants marched through the streets protesting their loyalty to France in the face of the Italian press campaign demanding control of this Red Sea port.

Both Arab and Somali leaders sent declarations of loyalty to the Governor of French Somaliland.

Many such declarations thus far presented have referred to "the complete lack of liberty" in Italian-conquered Ethiopia.

TRUSSES
ANYONE CAN SELL THEM

But they should be qualified to diagnose the case and decide upon the proper type of Truss to suit the condition.

And again, be qualified to fit the Truss correctly.

It is a decided mistake to condemn the Steel Truss, claiming they hurt. THEY DO NOT HURT if the correct type is made and correctly fitted.

We cannot advise the use of Webbing Trusses with soft pads and leg straps, unless it be for bed purposes. If a person prefers an elastic webbing truss with a soft pad he will find this obtainable anywhere, even in Drygoods stores, and it certainly cannot be claimed as a special type of truss.

In its 72 years as makers of Trusses, Artificial Limbs, Belts, etc., Authors & Cox Ltd. have acquired skilled knowledge and it is because of their wide and successful experience in the treatment of Hernia and kindred troubles with Trusses that they make a public appeal leading toward intelligent and correct treatment and understanding.

REV. C. OLMSTEAD GUEST PREACHER

Sacred Pageant Presented at Close of the Service

Rev. C. T. Olmstead of Berea, Ohio who was guest preacher at Victoria Ave. Baptist Church on Sunday based his evening text on Christ's parable of the prodigal son.

Rev. Mr. Olmstead stated, that if we came to the realization of our shortcomings and asked God's forgiveness with a humble heart He would not only forgive us but shower upon us even greater blessings than we deserved. Thus did the father of the parable, when he welcomed back his errant son.

"Our dealings with our neighbors would be more successful if we were ready to admit our mistakes," stated Mr. Olmstead "for then our neighbors would likely want to share the blame, better understanding would result and everybody would be happy."

"Give love," said the preacher "and an abundance of love will come flowing back to you. Christmas is a time when love is exemplified. We have a Merry Christmas, not by feasting nor by fasting but by loving. That is why Christ came: to show people how to love."

Sacred Pageant Presented

"Star Gleams", a musical Christmas pageant, was presented after the evening service, under the direction of Miss Mildred Lloyd.

A modern maiden has been so blinded by the material form of Christmas, that she has failed to remember the Christ-Child and the purpose of H's coming. There is revealed to her the gleam of the Christmas Star, beautifully told by scenes depicting the shepherds watching their sheep on the hills near Bethlehem, the angels appearing to them, the wise men bringing their precious gifts and finally the manger scene where all bow down and pay homage to the King of Kings.

The large cast included the following: Modern Maiden — May Hobson; Christmas Star — Della Anderson; Christmas Spirits—Mrs. Archie Abbott, Nellie Hales, Jennie Grant, Jean Stephenson, Nora Hales, Helen Wilson, Violet Hobson, Helen Thompson; Shepherds—Bert Orr, Bert Girling, E. Burn, Howard Trusdale, Jr; Angels — Katherine Hogle, Anna Hogle, Muriel Jobson, Edith Looker, Jean Thompson, Ruth Hobson; Wise Men—Ted Russell, Archie Abbott, Wilfred Hales; Madonna — Edna Jobson.

Lyrics included in the pageant were: "Beautiful Christmas Star", "Glory to God", "Peace and Goodwill", "We Come From Lands Afar", "Treasures Bring", "Star Gleams." Miss Phyllis May, well-known Belleville Soprano, directed the musical sequences and Mrs. Chas. Franklin ably assisted at the organ, Mr. Gordon Bray was responsible for the very effective lighting, assisted by Messrs. E. A. Hogle and Bert Orr.

Police Blotter

Activities kept the local police department quite busied over the week end, several arrests having been necessary while numerous investigations kept the department active.

Harry Yorke, employee at the Walker Hardware store, reported the theft of two coats on Saturday. Mr. Yorke had taken off his suit coat and overcoat together and placed them in the rear of the store. Later both garments were missing.

Brighton police reported the theft of a 1931 Hudson sedan bearing Ontario markers number 59W83 while Port Hope police reported a 1935 Ford sedan missing. This car carried Ontario licence plates number 32V5.

teresting instruction in letter writing and mail handling; handling the imaginary money gives practical instruction in banking and arithmetic.

Health Habits Studied.

Health habits can come up for discussion through appointment of the health officer and other instruction can be applied through similar channels. Operation of the town gives practical lessons in taxation and assessments.

"If such an enterprise is to be a success," says Miss Gibson, who developed the scheme, "the work and play must be fair. There must never be overcrowding and new ideas should be introduced gradually. Elections are held every month to enable each scholar to become an officer. A fine classroom spirit prevails."

"In all probability Scholarton represents one of the most successful efforts yet made to work out an activity program suitable for public school grades," School Inspector P. B. Murphy comments. "Education in this room is a process of living, rather than a preparation for, a future life."

Weddings

GILROY—NOYES

A quiet wedding was solemnized at the home of Mr. and Mrs. George Noyes at two-thirty, Friday, December 16, when their daughter Alma Kelo, became the bride of Mr. Clayton Edgar Gilroy, son of Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Gilroy.

The bride was dressed in twilight blue chiffon with shoulder bouquet of roses and was attended by Mrs. Arthur Gilroy. The groom was attended by his brother, Mr. Arthur Gilroy. Mr. F. R. Peer officiated.

Immediately after the wedding, a reception was held in the home of the bride's parents, after which the happy couple left on a motor trip to the States via the Thousand Island Bridge, the bride wearing a wine crepe dress with navy coat and hat and accessories. Upon their return they will reside at 246 Ann Street.

Auxiliary Plans Christmas for Hospital Patients

Tomorrow afternoon members of the Hospital Auxiliary of Belleville General Hospital are meeting to get ready gifts for the indigent patients at the Hospital and are making stockings to be filled with presents. This is just one of the countless activities in which this organization takes part and for which funds are needed.

In order to raise a sum to carry on their work, the Auxiliary is making extensive plans for a delightful holiday dance, to be held in the Collegiate on Wednesday, December 28th. Invitations are not being issued for this affair. Bridge tables can be arranged by telephoning Mrs. Imlah or the general convener, Mrs. A. H. Ketcheson. The dance tickets include bridge and refreshments, while the bridge tickets include refreshments.

Mrs. Margaret Rhynas, president of the Hospital Association of Ontario, has written the following verses about the community hospital:

THE HOSPITAL

All through the night God's candlelight keeps burning,
His servants ministering to each suffering bed.
God walks the halls and gives a kindly healing, and soothes the brow of every restless head.
It matters not if you are prince or pauper,
He stands beside you in your hours
of pain.
An army of white nurses do His bidding
And you are helped to regain health again.
Let us all ask blessings upon this house of healing,
For the doctors and all the nurses too, who stand on guard their faithful watches keeping, the long nights thru.

—Margaret Rhynas.

Capt. Knudsen Speaks for A. Y. P. A.

The regular meeting of Christ Church A.Y.P.A. was held in the Parish Hall on Wednesday last at 8.00 p.m. After general business was completed, the President Mr. W. Jackson introduced Capt. Knudsen as speaker for the evening. The Captain began by giving a thorough lecture on "navigating" which was greatly enjoyed by all. After this portion of his talk was over, the captain sat down lit his pipe and proceeded to narrate tales of some of his trips throughout the world. This was an unexpected pleasure for all and the members sat quiet, entirely under the spell, which he had cast over all. When time for departure came he was pounded with questions and found it difficult to leave. The Rev. G. G. Wright thanked the speaker and the meeting closed with prayers.

GOOD MANNERS

Your Christmas and You

Decorations For Your Home

Certain places in your home can be dramatically high-lighted with Christmas decorations—your door, a mantelpiece, the shelf over the mantelpiece, windows, shelves, or niches in a bookcase or in a cupboard, side-light brackets, occasional tables. With a minimum of cost for bright and appropriate decorations, these places can be made to greet your family and your guests with the season's message of hospitality.

Nothing is lovelier on the outside of an entrance-door, I think, than a Christmas wreath, preferably of generous size. It may be of holly or other traditional greens, or of a modern note, a combination of frosted blue and white flat leaves, or of only glistening white leaves. You may prefer a swag of greens (real or artificial) across the top of the door, with long ends of the greens framing the sides. If your door is white or there is planting on the sides of the door, this will be especially effective.

The stores are filled this year with enchanting Christmas angels, made of clear white Cellophane, and these are lovely to use on the shelf above the mantelpiece. Santa finds an especially appropriate place on the mantel shelf—miniature Christmas trees, too. If there is a mirror above the mantel shelf, don't miss this opportunity to place a row of candles in front of it, to capture the lovely double reflection.

Full sprigs of holly and mistletoe, pine cones, small artificial Christmas trees in bright red pots, branches of pine or evergreen are inevitably decorative and appropriate in many places. A few sprigs of holly or branches of evergreen may be put in a vase or two on side-tables, sprigs of mistletoe attached to side-light brackets. And you will find a variety of types of large, extra-hard candles, white or red, in shallow, star-shaped containers that will shed their lovely light during the holiday week.

Tomorrow — Your Christmas Table

Christmas Card for a Man

Dear Mrs. Beeckman

Will you kindly offer your advice regarding the following:

1—Are Christmas greetings cards of white backgrounds (with, of course, Christmas designs) the only kind suitable for men, or may men use colored cards and colored envelopes?

Are odd sizes of cards regarded as good taste for men to send?

2—When in a restaurant, does a young men ascertain what his companion wishes, and then order for both of them, or is it better form to allow the young lady to give her order directly to the waiter? If such is correct, who should give the order first?

Mac

1—Men's Christmas cards, like their letter-paper, should, to be appropriate, be of generous size and should definitely incline toward the conventional. A large, white card, heavy, and plain in texture, with some interesting, simple, bold design shows best taste. Colored cards, colored or lined envelopes aren't appropriate.

2—The man is the host and, as the menu with the girl, perhaps such, should take the responsibility of giving the orders for his companion and himself. He talks over makes suggestins of specialties of the particular restaurant in which they are dining, finds out what his companion wishes to order, and then gives both orders to the waiter. Incidentally, to complete the graciousness, he should, in giving the orders, mention first his guest's order.

Advice to the Lovelorn

Simmons College of Boston, Massachusetts, is the latest institution of learning to give a series of lectures on marriage. These will be open to juniors and seniors and will include home management and child training.

Factors which keep marriages from going stale and help to make them increasingly satisfying will be discussed by Professor Alexander McGoun of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. In a spirit of what is sauce for the goose is likewise sauce for the gander, on the day following each lecture at Simmons, Professor McGoun will conduct a similar series for the young men who are students at Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

Massachusetts should prove to be the ideal spot for mating, with a distinct falling off in the number of applications or divorce.

Well over thirty years ago, when this column was inaugurated any discussion of marriage problems or preparation for marriage was received as pleasantry, intended for the entertainment of readers. But now one by one the college have fallen in line, and have advised students about this most serious step. Churches have followed colleges in giving these marriage courses, realizing that as the home thrives so thrives the nation.

Certainly, it requires no special degree of wisdom to appreciate fully that a country composed of disorganized home units cannot long remain a strong country.

To prevent youngsters from bolting into marriage with no idea of the responsibility marriage promises entail, various colleges and high schools have taken the question in hand. The lectures at Simmons for instance, will carry no credits and will be entirely aside from the regular curriculum. This course, which resulted from urgent demand by organizations representing sixteen hundred students, will be open only to juniors and seniors because of the necessity of restricting attendance.

It's a hopeful sign that more students desired to enroll in these courses than lecture-hall space permitted. It's heartening to know that they want to do the right thing even if they trip up emotionally and fail.

Preparation for marriage

Problems of conduct

Personal growth and attractiveness.

Relations with family and friends

Development of the student interests on philosophy of life.

Health and hygiene, the physiological and psychological factors involved in the Marriage relationship.

Marriage as it relates to convention.

Different educational or social backgrounds.

The organization of family life with discussions of the problem of group relationships and those involved in the careers of either or both partners.

Child training.

The problem of postponement of marriage.

If mismating involved only husbands and wives, that's enough of a tragedy, but the havoc that divorce works on the children of such marriages is incalculable. Bandied from one set of parents to another by the whimsies of divorce, such children become anti-social. And it is no wonder that the Dean of one of America's greatest universities objects seriously to accepting students whose parents have been divorced.

W. C. T. U.

There was a very special meeting of the W.C.T.U. at the home of Mrs. J. Shortt, 124 Victoria Ave., on Thursday p.m.

Mrs. Farnsworth had charge of the meeting and discussed some very important items of business.

Mrs. Shortt presided at the piano while a medley of Christmas carols was sung.

Miss Reeves read the Scripture lesson and Mrs. Lott led in prayer.

A very appropriate solo "He was not willing that any should perish" was sung by Miss Elsie Forman.

The purpose of this meeting was that all interested in the Temperance cause might have the opportunity of hearing Miss Duff Provincial representative and a golden opportunity it was. Her friendly personality at the moment one meets her is an assurance that 'If you have a trouble it is also her trouble". It is this which makes her work in the temperance cause invaluable among children and young people. One caught not that note of antagonism that might be expected on the subject of liquor discussed by a Christian woman, but rather a burning desire to save character, to present truth to those who have not fallen and to restore those who have fallen.

Bible teaching in the schools and prayer, she spoke of as the strong weapons against the spread of alcoholism. It is a happy thought also that Miss Duff's spirit was very contagious among the large number present.

Not Too Soon For Xmas Buying

By ELEANOR ROSS

IT'S NONE too soon to be on the prowl for Christmas presents, especially gifts that are intended for your nearest and dearest.

The wise shopper avoids bargains, no matter how good they are, and concentrates on something that will be either a luxurious necessity or sheer luxury. An early search will reveal some splendid articles, whether for personal use or for the home

We can't think of any home that would not be improved or beautified by those new glow lights done as flowers under glass. These electric flowers come in small pots and make marvelous table decorations, but they are just as lovely when the pot is placed in a floor flower stand to fill up that difficult corner. At present these are obtainable in tulip or iris or field flowers, but we would like to see one in orchids.

Gifts for Men

For men there are some grand gifts, starting with a tantalus done on modern lines. The frame is fashioned of chromium stirrups mounted on a wood base, and the bottles are thick cut crystal. A plain metal bar across the top holds the necessary lock and key.

If you want to give a country-house or suburban place a gift, what about seeking out a studio and having some signs made They might be an amusing idea for a "drive slowly" sign for a curved drive, a name plate that is illuminated after dark, an extra smart mail box or a gay gate sign. The smartest signs are of aluminum or chromium, with a high polish so that the light strikes them.

A present that will be appreciated whenever the weather is cold is a towel rack within which there is a heater filament. This means nice warm towels, a winter boon if there ever was one! Then there is the electric blanket, that marvel of marvels, now obtainable in crib-size as well. What a present for a baby!

Notions for Kitchen

For the kitchen there are scores of grand notions. With the growing vogue for glass utensils, there are delightful tea kettles of glass, clear and shining, and canister sets also of glass. Now we peeping Tomasinas can see what each canister holds and how much, as well as keeping tabs on the tea water as it boils. The kettles are done on sleek, modern, functional lines, and have a chromium band and handle.

Saucepans and frying pans of glass with detachable handles are new and lovely. With handles removed, they become serving dishes, thus saving time and trouble.

New toasters and electric coffee makers there are in abundance, and they make marvelous gifts. Then there are all sorts of trays—bed trays, standing trays and table trays. Mirrors are popular, too, ranging from the much-decorated baroque to the sleek, modern mirror, with chromium bandings or cork frame.

Wool, Satin Combined in Chic Frock

Wool, satin combination

By VERA WINSTON

THE COMBINATION of dull wool and gleaming satin is a very popular and attractive one, and here we find it used for a gem of a little daytime frock. The woolen is in a very fine, tight weave. The vestee and sash are of satin with a very lustrous surface. The dress is simply cut but is very smart, the detail being unobtrusive. The wool revers turn back to disclose the draped section, which is rather puffy at the neck. The skirt has just the barest fulness in front. The sleeves have a slight puff at the shoulders and are just to below the elbow, a favored length.

How the Quints Are Punished

Recently I heard "habit" defined as "a way of thinking or doing something that is hard to change because we have done the same way so many times before.'"

That just about hits the nail on the head so far as what I am trying to impress on you. mothers is concerned. Take, for instance, you adults who have learned your own particular job well. Now try and adapt yourself to some other job and see how difficult it is. You will find that it hurts you mentally and physically to break the old habits and learn new ones. Remember that good or bad habits aren't inherited; they are formed in us from day to day.

You must always set an example to your child and try never to be anything less than he thinks you should be.

For instance, in the Quint nursery the nurses eat at the same table as the children do. They all eat the same things, too, although the adults do get somewhat larger helpings. The point is that the children see that the food put before them is what the nurses eat and that proves to them that it is the proper food to eat. If the nurses want something extra that the Quints mustn't have, they have to wait until the children are away and can't see.

I don't have to tell any parent how imitative the child is, They like to do what others do, and they aren't old enough to know what is right and what is wrong. Remember, example is much better than preaching when it comes to training children. That is why we try to do only the correct things before the Quints each day.

When they do right, we praise them; we encourage them to do it again and again until it is a habit.

We quietly take every chance to tell the babies what we want them to do. Don't be a pest and overdo it, for that is worse than not doing it at all. But do it quietly and unobstrustively. It has much more effect that way.

The Quints are never roughly treated or whipped. We reason with them. But if all our arguments are useless, the child is put in the detention room. This is a quiet, well-lighted room where they are entirely alone with themselves. This happens very rarely with our five, and it always has results. Being by itself is usually enough for a child, particularly if it realizes that it has hurt its mother or father with disobedience.

All children must have some sort of punishment one time or another, and that is the way we punish the Quints, for they are as far from being 'little angels" as your child is. In fact, if we notice them being too angelic, we investigate to see what mischief is afoot.

Parents shouldn't worry too much if a child doesn't conform with height-weight-age tables. Children are different types just as adults are. A lot depends on race and on the weight of the parents. But if your child is fed regularly, if he eats the nourishing food he should, and still doesn't gain weight, check up to see that he isn't overtired at mealtime, or that he is getting all the sleep he should. Call in your doctor, for he may find some infection like bad tonsils or teeth that is holding him back. Normal, healthy children gain weight steadily as long as they eat the things they should.

Wrinkles Come Later Now

By HELEN FOLLETT

LIFE HAS been pretty tough for a lot of women these last lean years. Yet, few feminine faces show signs of wear and tear. Wrinkles come later than they did in the yore times when grannie was a girl. There are reasons for this happy state.

Women know more about food values. They have a greater interest in outdoor life and they're not afraid of sunlight. They're more active, have wider interests. It is when existence is slow and dreary that Mister Time starts making maps on faces.

The human hide thrives on oil, and as every woman has a jar of cold cream in the house and plies it faithfully, complexions get proper care.

On the very day you spot your first wrinkle, madame, prepare for a viliant fight. Don't bear with it. Plant to take life more restfully. Don't indulge in emotional sprees; they are fatal to appearance. Every night wash your phiz carefully and thoroughly, rinse with warm water, tap in a massage cream. Let it stay on overnight. No, silly, it will not grow fuzzers. That's just a beauty superstition.

DOROTHY LAMOUR
Care now insures her against wrinkles later

When the square-faced woman sleeks her hair back flat at the sides and piles it in a square effect at the top of her head, she has selected the worst possible style of coiffure. Let the tresses be soft and a bit full at the sides—a few small rolls can be cleverly arranged—and swept upward with a rounded line, and the squareness of her countenance will be disguised.

Getting a new hairdress is a problem. Regard the coiffure front, sides and back and pay special attention to your nose. The right lines are all important. The mirror and good judgment will create a design that is flattering.

An Adventure in Shadowland

Legless Table Isn't a Table

By MAX TRELL

THE CHILDREN always were glad when Ed came to the house. So were Knarf and Hanid, the shadows of the children (children, of course, always have shadows and shadows, of course, always have names). Both the children and their shadows liked Ed very much. He was a tall, strong man. He always wore rough clothes because he was a carpenter and there was hardly a day when he didn't have lots of work to do.

He came to the house the other morning and went right into the playroom. "Hooray!" cried the children. "Ed's going to fix the little table that got broken!"

The children took Ed over to the table.

"You see," they said, "the leg fell off."

Short Legs Better?

"I think it would look better with shorter legs," Knarf said, trying to make his voice sound loud. "And, if you ask me, I'd like it best without any legs at all."

But Ed didn't ask him.

"I don't know why he doesn't listen to me," Knarf said sadly to his shadow-sister, Hanid. "No one listens to me—not even my master. And I stay with him all the time."

"Children aren't supposed to pay much attention to their shadows," Hanid replied. "But tell me, Knarf—why do you think the table would be better with shorter legs?"

"Because," said Knarf, "it's not a regular table—it's a children's table. And children's legs aren't as long as regular legs. So it ought to have shorter legs."

No Legs At All?

"Well, perhaps you're right about that. But then you said that it would be best of all if it didn't have any legs. What made you say that?"

"Oh!" said the shadow-boy with a smile. "I was thinking of you and me. The best kind of table for us is a table that sits right on the floor."

Knarf had scarcely finished saying this when Ed suddenly remarked: "Do you know what I think? I think the legs on this table are too high. A children's table ought to have little legs like little children."

"Yes!" cried Knarf. "That's what I said! Do it! Do it!"

And Ed did it. And everyone in the house thought it was the loveliest children's table that anyone ever had seen.

Matrimony Viewed by Spinsters

By GARRY C. MYERS, Ph.D.

PARENTS who have lived a fairly happy married life will rather heartily agree with the following discussion by three unmarried specialists in their book on the growth and development of the young child. These young women are Winifred Rand, Mary E. Sweeny and E. Lee Vincent, all of a prominent school in Detroit. Under these able experts have studied specialists in parent education from all parts of the world.

Since these authors look at the problem as scientific observers in a wholly objective manner, their remarks challenge our thoughtful consideration. To quote:

"Marriages which are successful do not end in divorce, for divorce is an acknowledgment of failure. Anything that is done to make marriage a success will therefore reduce the number of divorces. It is interesting to note that the usual attitude of any one starting upon a life career is that he is determined to make a success of it. Failure in it is likely to be considered something of a disgrace, and one hesitates to acknowledge failure in a career until one has made a mighty effort to achieve success.

Attitude Not Same

"One does not find the same attitude prevalent toward the career of marriage. Groves says, 'It has become characteristic of our time not only to enter marriage under the spell of pleasure motives, but also to retreat from it just as soon as it ceases to advance happiness.' This attitude toward marriage is the inevitable result of the claim on the part of the individual for a right to happiness, without a realization of the individual's responsibility to attain that happiness through his own striving toward a goal.

"There is today little, if any, feeling of disgrace when one has failed in marriage. The divorce after all is not the disgrace it used to be considered. One may call that a frank acknowledgment of failure. The disgrace lies rather in the fact that two grown people who, in this age, are supposed to have received at last a fair amount of education, have entered upon marriage without preparation or without having developed within them an attitude toward marriage which would insure a chance, at least, of success.

"Marriage is such a personal affair, so dependent for success on the adjustment sexually, emotionally, intellectually, and, one may say, practically (for everyday living together assumes a very practical and ofttimes humdrum aspect), that it is no easy matter to attain success. Certainly success will not be obtained without definitely striving for it."

Punch Bowl Brews for Young

By ALICE LYNN BARRY

FEW THINGS give a teen-aged such a thrill as being able to serve hot punch from a real punch bowl at her very own party. Obviously, adult potions of this sort are out of place at a party for youngsters, but here are any number of brews that the tactful hostess can make that have all the glamor and aroma of a real punch without any of its drawbacks.

The recipes given here are sufficiently exotic to meet the approval of the high school fraternity, but not even the strictest parent would object to serving them. So now that holiday party time is here with a bang, prepare a spicy bowl or a Wassail punch, if the crowd is big; if the company is limited to about six, try the spiced hot punch.

Here's How

Spicy bowl to the tune of four quarts is made with a gallon sweet cider, one and one-half pounds brown sugar, six inches of stick cinnamon, one blade mace, one tablespoon each whole cloves, whole allspice, one-half teaspoon salt and two tablespoons crystalized ginger. Mix all in large saucepan and let simmer for 10 minutes. Strain and add grapefruit juice from two 10-ounce cans and also one-half cup orange juice. Reheat but do not boil. Serve steaming hot.

Wassail punch requires two quarts sweet cider, two cups orange juice, one cup lemon juice, juice from two cans sliced pineapple, one four-inch stick cinnamon, one teaspoon whole cloves, sugar or honey as desired. Simmer the ingredients for 10 minutes. Strain and serve hot.

Another One!

Spiced hot punch calls for one quart of water, one three-inch stick of cinnamon, one teaspoon each whole cloves and whole allspice, two cups pineapple syrup, eggs and honey. Boil together the water and spices for five minutes, then strain. Add honey to taste. Stir in syrup drained from canned pineapple and reheat. Beat eggs well, allowing one-half egg to each glass of punch to be served. Pour hot punch over beaten eggs, stirring well. Serve at once. It makes about one and one-quarter to one and one-half quarts.

Marriage Meddlers

Adele Garrison

A Sequel to
'Married Comrades'

SYNOPSIS: Unbeknown to his father, Noel Veritzen has left the Graham farmhouse, where he had been instructed to stay as a protector-companion for the Princess Olina, of Transvania, and has taken a suite in a New York hotel for a secret meeting with his wife, Mary. Mary, followed by detectives, thought to be in the employ of Noel's parent, Philip Veritzen, is staying at another hotel with her Aunt Madge Graham, who is coaching Mary for a leading role in Madge's play, being produced by the elder Veritzen. After spending an afternoon with her two brothers, Hank and Bill, Mary is now preparing to keep her secret rendezvous with Noel, a meeting which they know would infuriate Philip Veritzen if he were cognizant of it. She tells Madge that she is going to pack her "most ravishing house things" for her reunion with her husband.

AS MARY turned from me, laughing, with the remark that she was going to "pack her most ravishing house things" for her trip with me to Noel's hotel, I sent a caution after her.

"Don't pack too many!" I adjured her. "Remember, we'll only have one small fitted bag apiece, and the small brief case with your work. On second thought, I'm not going to take a typewriter. I can have one sent in if I need it, and we mustn't be conspicuous with too much luggage."

"Right you are, darling," she agreed, "and I'll be the soul of discretion. You know, I probably am the best packer in this and adjoining cities, always excepting you. I think you can set more things in less space than anybody I ever saw. Did you ever think of taking up valet service for a living if the playwriting should peter out, and Uncle Dicky's illustrating should follow the smoke out of the chimney?"

Get Packing Done

"Get along with you and your blarney," I told her, laughing. "I have packing to do myself, and I'll be so puffed up that I'll probably have things spilling all over the place."

"Sez you," she mocked, and then I went out of the room to my own, and packed everything necessary for the three-day sojourn at Noel's hotel.

Mary finished her packing at almost the same moment as I did, and we met in the living room all ready for the trip, even to hats on our heads and motor coats in readiness for snatching up.

"Let's congratulate each other, shall we?" Mary caroled when we had set our luggage down near the door.

We bowed solemnly to each other and then giggled a bit hysterically in the manner of people facing some unknown stressful problem.

"So far, so good," I said, and Mary interrupted me quickly.

"What's next?" she queried, and then answered her own question.

Plans for Getaway

"The preparations for our successful getaway," I suppose," she said, and I nodded.

"And the story we shall give the desk accounting for our absence," I added.

Her eyes were suddenly alarmed.

"Surely you're not going to tell them now that we're going anywhere," she said.

"Indeed no," I told her. "We're going to take them by surprise in a few minutes by our unexpected exit. But first, we must fix up our story, and then make our getaway."

I crossed the room to Miss Whitlock's door and knocked upon it. The nurse answered promptly, and the smile of greeting I gave her was a grateful one for the aura of competence with which to my eyes she was invested.

"Will you come into the living room, please, for a council of war?" I asked her.

Prepare for Council

"With pleasure," she responded, and waiting only for me to precede her, she crossed the room with apparently unhurried but really rapid steps, and came to a halt beside my arm chair, to the side of which as if for support, Mary had drawn a chair.

"Please sit down," I said, and she obediently drew a chair to the other side of me, and to the front, as Mary's was, so that we formed a sort of semi-circle, and could look at each other easily.

"How soon can you be ready to leave the hotel?" I said.

She looked at me as if startled out of her usual professional composure.

"Do you mean for good?" she asked.

"It does sound like a conge, doesn't it?" Mary queried with good-natured mockery. "But I don't think 'Auntie Madge means for good. She just wants to send you as a sort of shock troop over the wall. Ain't so, Auntie Madge? Am I a deedoocer, like our gifted Katie, or ain't I a deedoocer?"

Stirling

Stirling.—The annual meeting of the Woman's Missionary Society of St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church was held on Tuesday afternoon at the home of Mrs. M. Tompkins. After the opening hymn and Scripture lesson read by Mrs. B. Hoard, Rev. W. H. V. Walker led in prayer. The reports of the year's work were given by the various officers, and Mrs. Foster read the allocation for the 1939 bale. After the singing of another hymn, Mrs. W. L. Anderson gave an interesting reading: "How Junice Became a Missionary." Miss Gena Spry gave the topic on "Keeping the Christmas Spirit Throughout the Year." At Christmas time people show more kindness and generosity. Rev. Mr. Walker gave a splendid talk on "Loyalty to Christ and the Church" and "Sharing the Load With Others." Mrs. Harper Rollins gave the Glad Tidings prayer. The meeting was closed with a hymn, and all repeating the Lord's Prayer. The officers for 1939 are:

The second chapter of the Study Book was then taken by Mrs. E. Munro and Mrs. W. J. Scott. Mrs. E. G. Bailey took charge of the worship period, using all Christmas hymns. The theme for the year is: All people to work and make Canada Christian After singing "Joy to the World" this interesting meeting was brought to a close.

St. Paul's Mission Band

The meeting of St. Paul's United Church Mission Band was held in the Sunday School rooms on Wednesday, December 14th. The opening hymn was followed by the Lord's Prayer in unison. Mrs. Roy Woodbeck took charge of the meeting and the secretary's report was read and approved, followed by roll call. Joan Pedley read the Scripture lesson taken from Matthew 2nd, 1 to 12. Money from World Friends was collected from seven of the thirteen subscribers. Collection amounting $1.53 was taken by Clinton Woodbeck and Douglas Luery. Each year there is a pin and certificate given to the one who attends Mission Band regularly. Vernon Woodbeck who attended the meeting gave it to Clinton Woodbeck who attended next. Joan Pedley gave a piano selection, which was followed by an interesting story entitled "The Little Christmas Tree" by Muriel Gibson. A duet by Joan and Edna Munro was followed by a recitation by Douglas Luery, "Three Little Dogs." After the closing hymn and the benediction each member was treated to a large bag of candies. Mission Band will be held on every second Wednesday of each month. The officers for the coming year are: President, Helen Hick; Vice-Presidents, Joan Pedley and Vernon Woodbeck; Pianist, Marion Tullich; Assistant, Marjorie Phillips; Birthday Secretary, Joan Munro; World Friends' Secretary, Bobby Hulin; Treasurer, June Woodbeck; Secretary, Shirley Francis; Lookout Committee, Eileen Bradshaw and Vernon Woodbeck.

IVANHOE W. I.

Mrs. Chester Sills entertained the members of Ivanhoe Branch W. I. for their December meeting. The attendance was particularly gratifying, being 61 and four visitors.

The meeting opened in the usual manner. After hearing the minutes of the November meeting read, the president, Mrs. T. Fleming conducted the business. A donation was sent to Stirling community Christmas Tree fund. In response to the roll call, a donation for some one in need, a large clothes basket of gifts were donated. One parcel contained a quilt top. Plans were made to quilt two quilts early in January, 1939.

Mrs. J. McInroy delighted the ladies with a very pleasing solo. Mrs. A. Hagerman gave a paper on Home Economics which stressed the importance of home-making. Mrs. W. Shaw told the story of Christmas. The guest speaker was Dr. R. Beattie of Madoc who took for the subject of his address, "Feed Your Bodies To Protect Your Health." This was an excellent address. Interesting 'Current Events' were read by Mrs. E. L. Sarles.

The hostess gave a demonstration of tea biscuits. The biscuits were made in the living room where about sixty women watched, and later when they were cooked a delicate brown and served with homemade raspberry jam, about sixty ladies enjoyed eating them.

At 4 p.m. the meeting adjourned and a social period was enjoyed during which afternoon tea was served. The assistant hostesses were, Mesdames G. Cook, E. Searles, J. Hagerman and F. Wilson.

As a result a ne worganization was formed to be known as the Brant County and District Tobacco Growers Association. Allan Duke was elected President.

TEST OF ALERTNESS

That distinguished man of letters, Dr. William Lyon Phelps of Yale University, has some interesting things to say about being alive and vital in this dizzy old world of ours.

Newspapers are a test of alertness and if you can find something on every page of your newspaper that interests you, then you are enormously alive and vital, he told an audience of Chicago business and professional men.

There is one good editorial every day, he says, and this is high praise indeed from an authority of his standing in the world of literature. The world is infinitely worse than it was 30 years ago "but it is far more exciting," he says.

Failure, disaster, sin, loss, crime and destruction race through the columns of the first page of a newspaper "because they are the exception to the more generally prevalent virtue of honesty, decency and tranquility."

Victory is on the sports page. "That is why clergymen and college professors always look at these pages first. Clergymen eat up stories about boxing because of the dominant note of triumph and victory," he added.

Infrequently is the silk hat of literature tipped in the direction of the Fourth Estate. Appreciative, the old fedora comes off, to return that greeting.—Sydney Post Record.

BATTLESHIP'S SODA BARS

Something like a revolution in the habits of the British soldier and sailor is clearly taking place. For some time past evidence has been accumulating of the increased appeal of temperance among "other ranks." Not so long ago it was announced that all battleships in His Majesty's Navy were to be fitted with soda fountains where able-bodied seamen could slave their thirst with sundaes and banana splits. The institutions are reported to be popular and well patronized, while the alternative attractions of "grog" are declining. Now comes news that the modern British soldier, in India as elsewhere, is drinking less beer.—Times of India.

CANADA IN SHANGHAI

Canadian readers will note there is a Canadian Chamber of Commerce in Shanghai; and that is has joined like organizations representing seven other countries there in lodging protests with their governments against the plans to make China a closed area to non-Japanese foreign commerce. Canada is no longer a hermit nation. The war in the far-off Orient is something of direct and practical concern to us.—Edmonton Bulletin.

SUGGESTIONS FOR LAST MINUTE CHRISTMAS SHOPPERS

Here are a few suggestions for you last-minute Christmas shoppers. For the difficult husband, brother or father we suggest something personal, as the dressing gown shown here. It is made of imported velvet. Any girl would be thrilled with the lounging ensemble modelled by Helen Wood, the actress. Intended for the boudoir, the tailored pyjamas are of satin and a becoming powder blue. A useful trinket for a casual acquaintance or a dear friend is the cigarette lighter pictured. It is a compact as well. The case is attractively enamelled in black.

Second Straight Shutout For Frankie Brimsek of Boston And His Fifth For Season

Bruins Defeat Detroit 2-0 While Hawks Swamp Rangers

LEAFS DEFEATED

'Amerks in Tie for Second Place by 5-2 Win Over Canadiens

(By Robert Clarke, Canadian Press Staff Writer).

The rarest thing that can happen in the National Hockey League these days is to have the red light blink behind goalie Frankie Brimsek's cage are becoming slightly have been vague murmurings that goal judges working behind Brimsey's cage are becoming slightly bored with inactivity.

Undoubtedly it would be wide of the truth to lay the remarkable success of the Bruins at Brimsek's door completely, for the Boston team is functioning perfectly as a unit. But there is no gain-saying the fact that the main cog in the unit seems to be Brimsek, a rookie just 23 years old and playing only his second season of professional hockey.

Brought up as the regular net-minder for Bruins only a little more than two weeks ago, when Tiny Thompson was sold to Detroit Red Wings, the silent Brimsek has scored five shutouts in the seven games he has goaled since. Six of the games were victories while one was a loss. The loss was one of the two Bruins have suffered this season in 14 games.

Second Straight Shutout

Brimsek gained his second straight shutout last night as Bruins downed the Wings 2-0 at Detroit. At the same time, Chicago Black Hawks whipped New York Rangers 5-0 at Chicago to give Mike Karakas his fourth shutout and New York Americans defeated Montreal Canadiens 5-2. In the only Saturday game, the Rangers came through with a 3-2 victory at Toronto over the Maple Leafs.

The Boston victory over Detroit came on goals scored by defenceman Dit Clapper in the 12th minute of the final period and a last-minute goal by Milt Schmidt. Schmidt's goal really was a gift, however, as the Wings had taken out Thompson with a half-minute to go and put on a forward. Schmidt wafted a long shot that found the Detroit net.

Rangers Smothered

The Black Hawks, who showed signs of slipping after a great spurt at the start of the season, smothered the Rangers on goals by Phil Besler, Mush March, Joffre Desilets, Paul Thompson and Bob Gracie. Besler's goal was his first in the N.H.L. It also was the first goal of the season for Gracie, one of the best marksmen last year with the now disbanded Montreal Maroons.

Rangers, however, managed to remain in a second place tie with Americans six points behind the pace-setting Bruins through their Saturday victory over the Maple Leafs. A second-period goal by Cecil Dillon gave them their victory margin with Dutch Hiller and Alex Shibicky getting the other tallies. Gordon Drillon, league-leading scorer last year but just back in action after a long lay-off this season because of an injury, scored the first Toronto goal, while Murph Chamberlain got the other.

Even For Two Periods

Canadiens and Americans battled evenly through two periods but the New Yorkers finally handed the Flying Frenchmen their third straight defeat with a three-goal rally in the last period that was featured by Art Jackson's two goals.

Nels Stewart, Sweeney Schriner and Hooley Smith each had a goal for the Americans while rookie Bill Summerhill and Toe Blake counted for the Canadiens. The Flying Frenchmen and the Wings are deadlocked with nine points for sixth place in the standing, but the Detroiters have a game in hand.

PERFECT PUTTER IS DISCOVERED

Not Likely Powers That be Will Allow it to be Used

London, Dec. 19 (AP)—Archie Compston has found a man with "the perfect putter."

He is Professor A. M. Low, whose putter is fitted with a delicate red light. When you swing the putter back or forward off the perfect pendulum line, on goes the red light.

Not even Professor Low hopes that the Royal and Ancient Implements Committee will permit the club to be used in competition, but he does contend that it will be invaluable for practice putting.

The Professor has also invented a trick pair of spectacles which elongates the ball so that, properly focused, it reaches the hole.

CLEVELAND TEAM WINS 4 IN ROW

Victories Sent Team in Tie for Section Honors With Bears

Cleveland Barons were slow in getting up steam, but underway now they apparently are not making any stops.

The Barons, who have not been beaten since Dec. 3 when they lost 4-2 to Syracuse Stars, made it four victories in a row when they took the measure of Philadelphia Ramblers and Providence in International-American League games during the week-end. The victories sent the Barons into a first place section tie with the Hershey Bears.

Best Bears could do during the week end was a 1-1 tie with Springfield Indians Saturday. On the same night Pittsburgh Hornets defeated New Haven Eagles 3-2 while Cleveland walloped Ramblers 5-3. Last night the Bears lost 3-0 to New Haven, the Barons topped Providence 4-1 and Ramblers tied Syracuse 4-4.

The barons defeated the Reds on two goals by Bob Blake, one each by Lorne Duguid and Phil Hergesheimer. The lone Providence tally went to Starr. The game against Ramblers went into overtime with the Barons scoring three in the extra period. Baron scorers were Earl Bartholome with two, and Bob Blake, Hergesheimer and Harry Currie with one each. Allen scored two for Ramblers with Barton getting the other.

BOUT BETWEEN LOU NOVA AND BAER MOOTED

Only Heavyweight Outside of Louis Capable for Californian

NOVA ANXIOUS

Tells Jacobs He Can Beat Clowning Kid from Out West

New York, Dec. 19—(AP)— Sad but true, the heavyweight boxing situation once more is in the large, playful paws of Maxmilian Baer.

Max is the only heavyweight, outside of champion Joe Louis, capable of making a good match for Lou Nova. Nova became the division's man of destiny Friday night when he whipped Tommy Farr.

If Lou beats Baer he will have cleaned up the field with the exception of the barrel-built Tony Galento, and can move into a title bout with the best record of any challenger.

Should Baer win, Mike Jacobs' oratory and the silent but strong pull of a large wad of greenbacks will bring Baer and Louis together again. Nor is this too distant a possibility. Baer has beaten better men than Nova.

Lou is especially anxious to meet Baer. Before leaving for his home in California and Christmas dinner with his wife he pleaded with Jacobs, "get Baer for me, I'm ready for him."

"Yeah, I know I haven't fought a hitter like him, but I'd make him miss," he continued. "I'd fight him like Louis did. Let him laugh and clown around. I'd keep jabbing him and I'd keep piling up points. I can beat him."

So Mike wired Ancil Hoffman, Baer's manager. There has been no answer yet.

NO NIGHT BALL FOR THE YANKS

Giants Also Refuse to Play Under Mazdas in National

New York, Dec. 19—(AP)— In this town which prides itself that everything does or can happen under its many mazdas, night baseball has encountered two stubborn holdouts.

New York Yankees of the American League and New York Giants of the National League, emphasizing that each arrived at the decision independently, let it be known today they will not play under the lights next season.

The action of the Yankees, coming within a few days of the American League meeting which approved night ball, was a surprise because manager Joe McCarthy had never expressed any opposition to it.

On the other hand Bill Terry had never left his Giants glow after dark and Major Domo Leland Stanford MacPhail of Brooklyn Dodgers already anticipated a continuance of this policy by giving Cincinnati two dates next season to fill the Giants' gap.

SCHUMACHER RINK COSTLY BUILDING

Schumacher, Dec. 19 (CP) — The new $200,000 McIntyre Community Building was jammed to capacity when hockey was introduced officially here Saturday night before sport executives from various parts of Ontario.

To mark the occasion, the Lake Shore Blue Devils of Kirkland Lake met six teams from the Porcupine district for periods of ten minutes each and won 10-0. Teams from Hollinger, McIntyre, Coniarum, Buffalo-Ankerite, Dome and Pamour Mines supplied the opposition. Dome held the Blue Devils scoreless.

The new building, patterned after the Maple Leaf Gardens in Toronto, seats approximately 2,000 persons. Among those attending the opening were James Douglas of Brantford, president of the Ontario Hockey Association; Alvin Schlegel of Preston, past president of the O.H.A.; W. A. Hewitt, secretary of the O.H.A. and C.A.H.A., and P. J. Mulqueen, chairman of the Ontario Athletic Commission.

Sports Roundup

(By Drew Middleton, Associated Press Sports Writer).

New York, Dec. 19 (AP)—Tommy Farr still is in the beak-busting business....He claimed a week ago he'd retire if Lou Nova beat him... But now he's thinking of touring South America, meeting all comers ....Reason: "He didn't beat me bad enough."....Joe Louis followed his observation that Nova looked "mighty good" by wondering whether the Californian always cocked his left...."Looks like a good, sharp hitter might find a hole there," the champion opined.. Qualified statisticians insist Sam Snead's money winnings this season—just short of $20,000—do not constitute a new one-year record for a pro golfer....They say Sarazan won more than $21,000 in 1930, the year Eugene hauled down $10,000 for first prize in the Agua Caliente Open.

Arn Herber, the Green Bay Packers' back, opened a men's clothing store at West De Pere, Wis., just before the football season started... Understand he sold his coach, Curly Lambeau, a straight jacket just after the second Giant game..Don Budge claims his running backhand, his most unorthodox but also one of his strongest shots, is a holdover from his days as an indoor baseball player....."I was a left and I used to take a little run at the ball before I swung," said J. Donald.... "this is practically the same effect as the backhand."

Much moaning about town over the Giants' infield...."That Myatt at third base ran halfway across the diamond to throw last year," said one of the abler experts .... "With Bonura on first he'll have to run all the way across and hand the ball to him"....Dick Metz, the handsome Chicago golf pro who recently completed a "short," is flirting with an offer to make a full length screen drama.

Between the Lines

Ken J. Colling

It was with a degree of considerable satisfaction we learned that the B.C.I. & V.S. may return to C.O.S.S.A. senior Interscholastic sports in 1940. "I hope to be able to have our inter-form athletic activities solidly cemented into the school athletic activities before another year rolls around. Once I have these inter-form sports successfully operating within themselves, I will be able to direct my full attention upon school basketball, football and hockey in the C.O.S.S.A." revealed Athletic Instructor George Laughlin over the week end.

There was a time when the Collegiate dominated senior interscholastic sports throughout the Bay of Quinte zone, which prompted Mr. Laughlin to withdraw the B.C.I. from district interscholastic sports in the general interest of the games played and for the benefit of the smaller secondary schools. For the past two years Mr. Laughlin has been introducing a system of inter-form sports at the Collegiate, whereby more students are afforded the opportunity of competing in team sports. Once this system has been firmly rooted in the school's curriculum, Mr. Laughlin will once again return to the Provincial interscholastic sports arena.

In the menatime the Albert College will carry the local banner into the Interscholastic sports realm again this season, Coach Pete Beach entering senior squads in the basketball and hockey groups of the C.O.S.S.A. In the district Interscholastic cage loops Albert College will be grouped with Napanee, Trenton and Picton collegiates, but in the hockey set-up it looks as though the "tri-color" will again be forced to accept a bye into the Bay of Quinte group playdowns in the C.O.S.S.A. "Although we would like to procure a berth in the Trent Valley group, it appears as though we are out on the well known limb again and will have to be satisfied with whatever exhibition games of hockey we can secure before the Provincial playdowns swing into action," bemoaned Skipper Beach. If Albert could secure a berth in the Trent Valley group they would be willing to use the Madoc arena as their home ice, if that would prove any inducement to the "northerners."

The cream of Canada's badminton celebrities gave a splendid exhibition of that popular indoor winter sport at the Armouries on Saturday night when Rod Phalen, Jack Sibbald, Horton Smith and Dave Robertson demonstrated to the local Badminton Club the fine points of the game. Their dexterity in playing net birds was little less than bordering the sensational. Jack Purcell, world's professional badminton champion, could not make the trip to Belleville this year as he is now touring the U.S.A. giving exhibitions. Incidentally Belleville badminton fans no doubt saw the next world's professional badminton champion in action here on Saturday night, as Jack Purcell personally is grooming the abovementioned quartette of Queen's City players in hopes of having one of them replace him as the champion when Purcell hits the skids. Incidentally Sibbald and Phalen are Canadian amateur doubles champions today. The visitors materially assisted in the stimulation of the game by playing mixed doubles, taking Miss Dorothy Davison and Mrs. Spurston as partners aside from their personal exhibitions of singles and doubles.

We are in receipt of the annual "National Hockey Guide" manual, a pocket-sized, concise publication of all professional and amateur hockey rules, records, schedules and a practical who's who in the speed and fancy skating world. This highly valued Guide is published by James C. Hendy, who for years has placed on the market a "National Hockey Guide" book, which today is recognized as the authority of ice hockey. After glancing over its pages we can heartily endorse Mr. Hendy's 1939 publication to all lovers of the great winter pastime of hockey. The records and statistics alone are worth the small price charged for this fine publication now on sale. Mr. Hendy also recomments "Red" Rutton's recently published 196-page book "Hockey."

Do you remember when Ernie Schaaf defeated Max Baer in a 10-round heavyweight fight at New York eight years ago tonight. Three years later—Feb. 10, 1933—Schaaf took a terrific beating from giant Primo Carnera and was carried to his corner while 20,000 fans yelled "fake." He died in hospital four days later.

There's no stopping the rampaging Boston Bruins and Goalie Frank Brimsek these days, the latter chalking up his fifth shutout in the last six games, as the Boston sextette turned back Detroit 2-0 last night. Chicago and the Americans were the other squads to make noticeable gains, while the Rangers split. Judging from the showing of the Maple Leafs on Saturday night Connie Smythe had better send out an S.O.S. for some players who can score occasionally.

HODGE PODGE — Big doings when they opened their $200,000 Arena at McIntyre Mines over the week end.....Toronto sports writers blame loose refereeing for the downfall of their pets. Is there never any credit to another team winning in "Toronto the good,".. Bill Schuster, youthful infielder, was procured by Toronto from Pittsburg recently....Dan Howley needs additional strength yet, however.....Rev. Father Martin, organizer of the Canadian-American Baseball League, was again named league prexy as these diamond moguls met at Utica over the week end.

Gentlemen:

During the 30 years we have been in business in Woodstock, we have tried all of the many forms of advertising. It has been our experience that regular space in our own local daily newspaper is by long odds the best medium

When we take on a new line of nationally-advertised merchandise, we insist on the manufacturer using space where results are certain, that is in our local newspaper, the "SENTINEL-REVIEW."

The fact that we used 47,260 lines in the Sentinel-Review last year is evidence that we "practise what we preach." Results have proven this investment paid a very satisfactory profit. As a matter of fact, we were so well pleased with results that we intend increasing the amount of space this year.

Yours very truly.

ALASKAN HIGHWAYS

Premier Pattullo's announcement that the United States Government is prepared to advance money to British Columbia for the construction of the Alaska Highway without interest is a statement which the people of this province were unready to receive.

The Alaska Highway is a great undertaking that will add tremendously to our tourist resources. We cannot deny that fact. But the Alaska Highway is a project absolutely essential to the safety and protection of the United States, from the standpoint of continental solidarity, and it must be considered first and foremost, from that standpoint.

Where the Highway is a luxury to us, it is an utter necessity to the United States. Therefore it is reasonable to suppose that the United States should bear a major part in the burden of its financing.

Premier Pattullo's statement, therefore, has not only been expected but awaited.

An early start on this project, favorable in conditions to British Columbia, will give meat and substance to the treaties which have just been concluded at Washington with the purport of adding to the close economic connection between the English-speaking peoples.—Vancouver Sun.

Stuffed Celery—Spread crisp stalks of celery with a mixture of three sardines well mixed with one package cream cheese, one teaspoon onion juice and one tablespoon minced pimento or stuffed olive. Press a sardine on top of each and sprinkle with finely-minced parsley.

Nut and Date Pudding—One cup dates (each date cut into about three pieces), one cup walnuts (chopped not too fine), two eggs (beaten separately), one cup brown sugar, one tablespoon flour, one teaspoon baking powder and one teaspoon vanilla are needed. Beat yolk of eggs, add brown sugar; add baking powder to flour and dust over dates and nuts. Then add to egg mixture, using little of egg whites, beaten stiff, if too dry to mix. Lastly, fold in whites of eggs beaten. Bake in moderate oven, putting dish containing pudding in pan of hot water. Bake about 45 minutes.

FRY—In loving memory of a dear son and brother, Henry Jas. Fry (Harry), who passed away Dec. 19th., 1928, in his 24th year, also his infant son, Wm. Leonard, born July 4, 1928, died August 28, 1929.

We loved you in life,
We love you yet,
You are ours to remember,
When all others forget.

Sadly missed by Mother and Father, sisters Hilda and Bessie, brothers Bill and Percy. d19-1t

Human Interest Stuff

Men were not in the habit of walking into the Daily News office around 12:30 and asking for a job. In the first place 1 o'clock was the dead line, and everybody was trying to get his copy in. In the second place Big Mathews, the editor, was always up to his elbows in work.

When the door of the news room was pushed open no one stopped pounding his typewriter. But when a sudden breeze sent all the copy swirling to the floor, and a meek little voice said something that no one could hear, there was then a unanimous silence.

The man that stood by the door was short and thin, with a hungry, pinched look. The threadbare spots on his faded blue suit showed up, and his shoes were the kind that would have a hole in the bottom.

Pop Warren, the head desk man, looked at him and shoved his thumb in the direction of the circulation department down the hall.

"You'll have to see Hawkes if you want to sell papers," he said briskly.

The man turned a brick red from the tip of his ears to the place where his collar began.

"I don't intend to sell papers," with an embarrassed look at the staring group. 'I wanted to see the editor."

"He's in there." Pop Warren jerked his head in the direction of the door that led to the editorial sanctum.

Next morning at 7:30 the stranger took possession of a typewriter in the corner. He was given the police court and East avenue beat, left vacant two days before by Jim Craig, who had been fired for balling up an assault and battery case.

Outside of finding out that his name was Saunders, no one advanced far toward an intimate acquaintance with the new man.

Sunday stuff was due in on Friday morning, and it was around noon when Saunders came in to write his story. His fingers flew at the keys. He wrote without apt apparent effort until he had three sheets full. He didn't even re-read his copy, but simply walked over to the desk and laid it before "Pop" Warren. As he turned, there was a glimpse of his face. White as paper he was, and shaking so he could hardly struggle into his coat.

Frankie Lynn, the sports writer, happened to be in the room, and walked over to Saunders.

"Come on, man," he offered decently enough. "Have a cup of coffee with me. It'll do you good."

Saunders shook his head and looked at him with the expression of a sleep walker. "I—I can't," he stammered. "I've got to go back to the hospital."

The Sunday edition was off the press at around 11 o'clock Saturday night, and, as usual, most of the news room crowd hung about for the weekly game of poker, and to see the edition.

"Pop" Warren was the first to spot Saunders' story. He read it through twice, and when he looked up it was with an unusually thoughtful expression.

"That's the best human interest stuff we've ever had," he pronounced solemnly.

Monday morning, Big Mathews, the editor, came into the newsroom.

"Where's that man Saunders?" he questioned, abruptly.

"Hasn't—" Pop Warren began, when the door opened and Saunders walked in.

They all stared. It was Saunders, and yet it was not the beaten, discouraged old man who had written that story on Friday morning. He was stiff and straight, in spite of his faded blue suit with the worn spots. Ten years were gone from him.

"Well, Saunders," said the editor, "that was a mighty good story you wrote for Sunday.

"Yes," agreed Saunders. "It was a good story. If it hadn't been I wouldn't be here this morning." He hesitated for a moment. "I guess I owe you fellows an apology," he said, "so I'll tell you the story, though there isn't much to it."

He leaned against the desk and looked out the window. "Only that the girl I was to marry came to this city and tried to be a successful artist. She wouldn't tell me where she was because of a foolish quarrel we'd had." There was a reminiscent smile. "Of course I gave up my job on the home newspaper and came to the city to look for her."

Saunders told his story with plain words, but there was dramatic evidence of heartbreaking fear through it.

"Friday I happened to come along the East avenue waterfront just as the police were pulling a girl out of the river."

"The girl you'd been looking for," nodded "Pop" Warren, absorbed in the story.

"Yes. She had failed, and she was very proud. So I wrote that story for the Sunday edition and sent it to her at the hospital."

"She'd have the heart of a stone if she refused you after that," commented Big Mathews.

Saunders smiled. "She didn't," he said. "In fact, we were married this morning, and we're leaving for home tonight. That's what I came to tell you," he added.

Tripping Feet

WNU Service
McClure Newspaper Syndicate
By CLAUDIA MAY FERRIN

Alzena Stokes was proud of her record as a dancer. Light of foot and apt in rhythm, she was sought as a partner by many whose social rating set the pace of the countryside. Among these were the Norths, a family boasting three young people, with easy money to keep the trio moving forward.

It was a privilege unusual to dance with Willard North. He was a splendid fellow on his feet, presumably because so much leisure and hilarity since boyhood had given him little else to think about. Alzena experienced a thrill of delight every time he requested a number.

The outstanding difficulty was of a peculiar nature. There were more women than men in that locality, three to one. If a half-dozen young fellows from a near-by village chanced to drive across country to one of the parties, the anxieties of the hostess were lightened ten-fold. Some of the girls were sufficiently accommodating to dance two by two; but the love-lorn pined, and the lonely ones lost interest, so that often the quota was not present.

"Do you know," began Willard one day, when Alzena accosted him with an invitation. "Do you know just how much you girls hamper the success of these parties you attempt to have? Why, in the cities there are professional entertainers, men and women who are supposed to be better dancers than any guest of the evening. Or some who can do trick steps or fancy turns, such as the amateur couldn't dream out in a week. You ought to try a few steps by yourself, for instance."

"I — do — something — unusual?" The young lady could not find words for her sense of amazement. "Why, I'd be chased off the premises." Then a moment's thinking helped to a solution. "I know one who might do all that—and not be criticized."

"The chaps will flock in from three or four villages—see if they don't. Now, learn all you can from this young lady. Don't be so shy of criticism."

Alzena decided to lose no time. She had met the dancer at an affair at one of the near-by towns, where she visited often. She was sure her friend could find Minna Merlin—in time, possibly, for the coming social. A letter brought the plan. She sent word to the musicians to be prepared in an especial manner. She awaited the mails, and as impatiently hoped for a word with Willard North. Secretly, she wished the response by mail to be first.

The hostess next on the list was one of the thrifty sort. She offered to clear her "summer kitchen" — an out-of-date, worked-over cottage that once had been the farmhouse, displaced now by a more pretentious dwelling alongside. Two large rooms made up the ground floor, with similar arrangements above—to serve as dressing-rooms. Alzena was sure there would be plenty of space for some very good dancing and for the games of the evening. She sent word in every direction, inviting her friends — and their friends — to witness this new venture.

It was easy to see that Willard North was pleased. So were the chaps he brought with him. Minna Merlin danced, almost every number, with a few display-bits of an original type. The maidens of the community were fired with jealousy, declaring every one, that she could do just as well, with a little practice. Alzena watched the steps, too. Every youth present stood ready to bow low to the stranger, therefore it was worth while to take notice. Finally Alzena and Minna tripped off a few stunts they had practiced during the days of anxious planning. It was proved that Alzena's reputation as a neighborhood favorite had not been dimmed.

But the innovation led to a near-catastrophe, after all. Willard North became intensely interested urging another party, charity or social, or a weekly appropriation of the town dance-hall. He went across country to Minna Merlin's native burg; he wished to know the lady better. Alzena Stokes realized she had started something that might not end soon.

Miss Stokes, however, kept practicing carefully the steps and stunts that Minna had taught her. The idea had accomplished the purpose intended; the young people flocked together eagerly enough, at the next call. The girls smiled the brighter—and oftener; the chaps seemed just as happy. Yet, when Willard brought Minna, there began a buzz of whispers that led more and more to a definite pairing off.

Alzena stood alone, as a consequence. She had lost Willard North as a dance partner, merely by attempting to please him. Twice within the four or five hours of hilarity, it chanced, he caught her for a waltz or a two-step.

"Never mind the trouble you've started." He returned her jokes with abandon. "I shall do my best to bring different fellows every time, in the hope that you, too, may become lost—like Miss Merlin."

HOW MENTAL FUNCTIONS ARE LOCALIZED IN BRAIN

By LOGAN CLENDENING, M.D.

IN THE closing years of the eighteenth century, in the ancient city of Vienna, a doctor of imposing appearance and an air of confidence and profundity began to give public lectures to announce that he could tell anyone's fortune by examining the bumps on his skull. His name was Franz Joseph Gall and the system which he elaborated was called phrenology.

Like many false systems before and since, it was instantly popular. Gall lectured on the continent and many eminent men in medicine and science espoused his cause. By 1832 there were 39 phrenological societies in England, and several journals were devoted to the subject. It was proposed to use the system in selecting members of Parliament, and one enthusiast suggested that a child's head could be molded mechanically so as to suppress the evil and bring out the good.

Everyone has seen phrenological charts, showing the skull partitioned off, with various human traits designated as if on the surface of the brain beneath. There is optimism right at the very top, where it should be, and wit up in front over the eyes. If you bulge there you should prepare to be witty. (It is really very easy; if you get the reputation, all you have to do is say, "Pass the mustard", and the table roars.)

Knowledge is Useful in Surgery

Mapped Them Wrong

There was, of course, this much to Gall's idea—that the mental functions are pretty well distributed into separate parts of the brain. But not as Gall mapped them out. Long after Gall some really scientific workers, such as David Ferrier determined in what parts of the brain are localized its functions.

They differ from phrenology, the quack science. Where Gall put Constancy, Aggression, and Caution (at the back of the brain) is really the visual centre, where the images received by the eye are translated into mental concepts. The eye sees a yellow blotch and the occipital lobe says to the frontal lobe, where the intellectual processes are localized, "That is a tuberose begonia."

Hearing Centre

The centre for impressions of hearing is at the side just about over the ear. You hear a sound and your auditory centre telegraphs to your frontal lobe, "That is an automobile horn." And then your consciousness telegraphs to the motor centre "Jump." But if the messages were not delivered with any more promptness than the modern telegraph companies practice, we would all be killed by automobiles.

The use to which this knowledge of localization is put can easily be understood when we consider the modern science of brain surgery. Brain tumors grow in a certain localized spot, and the symptoms depend on what part of the brain they are pressing on. This can be decided in the light of our knowledge of brain localization and an opening made in the skull over this area and the tumor removed.

Can Get Along

To the question of how much of the brain we can get along without, the answer is, a surprisingly good deal. We can get along without any intellect at all. The American crow bar case, in which a crow bar was driven by a dynamite charge through a man's frontal lobe, proved that. Though this is the centre of the intellect, he lived for years, carrying on very well. The frog with all its brain removed will hop, swim, croak and adjust itself to every stimulation, but will sit like a mummy and, though surrounded by food, will not eat.

AT THE CAPITOL

"Dracula and Frankenstein"

"Dracula" and "Frankenstein" which thrilled movie-goers seven years ago when they were top flight money-makers, are stalking the screen again at the Capitol Theatre.

This time they are together. Breaking box-office records from New York to San Francisco, they may outgross, as a double dose of horror, the figures they rolled up separately.

"Dracula," from Bram Stoker's novel, is a fantastic story of a human vampire who lived hundreds of years by drinking human blood. Bela Lugosi plays the part of the Vampire, wears a maniacal expression, and flits in and out of windows like a bat.

Boris Karloff, as the monster Frankenstein, has a square skull and immobile expression, looking for all the world like the worst nightmare you've ever had.

It isn't a show for the weak-hearted or the weak-minded. But if you like your entertainment steeped in mystery, horrifying characters, heart-chilling drama and atmosphere together with everything else that goes to make a real horror show, then don't miss "Dracula" and "Frankenstein."

AT THE McCARTHY

"CRASHING HOLLYWOOD"

The picture is concerned with an unsolved bank robbery and in humorous dramatic fashion the plot unfolds in a setting of Hollywood and the film studios.

The action starts when Lee Tracy, an author, forms a writing partnership with Paul Guilfoyle and his wife Lee Patrick. Though Tracy does not know it, Guilfoyle is a reformed convict who poses as a criminologist and offers to furnish authentic material for stories.

The first story Guilfoyle suggests proves to be the inside facts on the robbery, for which he has just served time. Other members of the gang that participated are still at large and the loot has never been recovered. When the picture is released, police and mobsters descend on the studio to find out where the information behind the scenario came from, and Tracy is suspected of having taken part in the robbery. This gets him into particular trouble with Joan Woodbury, centre of the film's romantic interest.

Edgar Kennedy and an excellent cast of funmakers provide plenty of laughs in the comedy featurette presentation entitled "Beaux and Errors" also an all-star cast of entertainers in an exceptionally fine musical-comedy revue, that is sure to please all, entitled "Picketing for Love", and an interesting traveltalk entitled "California Missions", is well worth seeing in addition to the splendid presentation at the McCarthy Theatre now.

CITY OF BELLEVILLE

Sidewalk Snow Cleaning Notice

Under the provisions of City By-Law No. 1126 all citizens are compelled to either remove the snow and ice from the sidewalks in front of their properties or keep the snow and ice covered with sand, ashes or other suitable substance so that same may be rendered free as possible from danger to pedestrians.

We urgently request that all citizens co-operate with us to the utmost in an effort to render conditions for pedestrian traffic less hazardous

Free sand is available and will be delivered to your address, if you will telephone 1953J in the mornings, or make your request to our workmen if they are passing your door with the sand truck.

"Submarine Patrol"

Twentieth Century-Fox's "Submarine Patrol" opened at the Belle Theatre before three large audiences. Which is to say that one of the best pictures of the year has come to town. It is genuine proof of the industry's current slogan, "Motion Pictures are Your Best Entertainment", and by now the word must be spreading. The picture deserves it.

Here is an amazing drama of the strangest, most ill-assorted crew that ever manned a fighting ship—the civilian odds and ends aboard one of the Navy's flimsy cockleshells of the "Splinter Fleet". The film is amazing both for the tale it tells and the fact that it has never been told before.

The awe-inspiring glory that attends the big super-dreadnaughts and the fast, sleek destroyers and cruisers has all but obscured that branch of the service that saw some of the most perilous and exciting action of the war.

The men who joined the "Splinter Fleet" were not fighters by any means. They were land-loving softies—butchers, bakers and candle stick-makers who were looking for a soft berth and found time to conduct their businesses on the side as their ships lay moored in the Brooklyn Navy Yard. How they were plunged headlong into the thick of it, crossing seas raging with wind and wave and shot and shell, and were taught by danger to stand and deliver—to become heroes—is the thrilling, dramatic theme of 'Submarine Patrol'.

The genius of John Ford, Award-winning director who made "The Informer", "Wee Willie Winkie" and "The Hurricane", was never more apparent. The film opens with a gay note, the lackadaisical, undisciplined men providing some of the rarest comedy the screen can boast. Richard Greene, as rich young Perry Townsend, III, signs up for the Fleet and meets, on the way, beautiful Nancy Kelly, a most promising newcomer for whom a most brilliant future is predicted. Their brave romance is as powerful as the dramatic theme of the film.

Then there are the boys. Boisterous all, Slim Summerville, Warren Hymer, Douglas Fowley, J. Farrell MacDonald and Maxie Rosenbloom are having a grand time in this man's War.

But things change quickly. Preston Foster is assigned command and things begin to hum. The craft puts to sea and the thrills, and trial by danger, begin. Here are, indeed, some of the most powerful sequences ever filmed. Sea battles, human drama, troubled romance, heroism and valor—together they make 'Submarine Patrol' unforgettable.

George Bancroft John Carradine, Joan Valerie and Henry Armetta are also included in the fine cast. Darryl F. Zanuck was in charge of production, with Gene Markey associate producer. Rian James, Darrell Ware and Jack Yellen wrote the screen play from the book of Ray Milholland.

"Submarine Patrol" is one of the Movie Quiz $250,000 contest pictures.

The popular Belle newsreel, Mickey Mouse in Walt Disney's newest comedy color cartoon "Mickey's Parrot" and "What Every Boy Should Know" a novel and very funny film will also be exhibited.

The Stars Say—

For Tuesday, December 20
By GENEVIEVE KEMBLE

A DAY of excellent promise for enduring good fortune and stability of the affairs is promised for this day by the mutual as well as the lunar aspects. This program for expansion, achievement and prosperity, following a lull or crystallization, may result from the intervention of an elderly friend or the recognition of sound judgment and industry by a large institution. Investments or stagnant securities may take a spurt, or it may be due to political or public honors.

If It Is Your Birthday

Those whose birthday it is may be congratulated on the advent of a year of great promise for advancement, expanding interests, a stabilizing of the fortunes and the solid recognition and financial support of those in prestige and power. It is a period of reaping for past diligence, sagacity and responsibility, with investments increasing and perhaps public rewards for service. It is a time for pushing to such objectives.

A child born on this day may be diligent, dependable, versatile and ambitious, and its merits and sound judgment may win it affluence and public place.

Little Benny's Note Book

Pop was smoking and thinking in his private chair and I said, Hay pop?

Where have I heard that name before? pop said.

Meaning what, and I said, Do you like to be surprised at Chrissmas or do you like to know what you're going to get?

I like to be surprised, because I know what I am going to get the rest of the year, so if I'm sufficiently surprised at Chrissmas my worse fears aren't realised, pop said, and I said, Well I know a swell surprise to buy you, and I wont even give you a hint if you dont want me to.

No hints, I beg you, pop said, and I said, The only thing is, it costs a doller and I've gone and spent all my Chrissmas present money on things for ma and Gladdis and Nora and Cousin Artie and a few of the fellows, so holey smokes, pop.

To phrase it diplomatically, you'd like me to advance you the doller, for wich I would have your unwritten I. O. U., pop said, and I said, Well jimminy crickits, pop, I thought I'd have enough left over, but you know how it is with money.

Only too well, pop said. New you're sure you wouldn't think of surprising me before Chrissmas? he said, and I said, No sir, and he said, Good, because I've been a family man for many and many a Chrissmas and this little transaction doesn't surprise me a mite.

And he gave me a doller out of his pocketbook and I'm going to buy his present with it tomorrow, being a thing to fasten on the inside of a closet door and hang your shoes on it by their heels.

TORONTO STOCKS

Toronto, December 19 — Junior Oils held sway on Toronto Stock market today. Trading was fairly active, showing turnover of 658,000 shares.

While the Penny Oils opened higher, medium-price issues, including Home, Okalta and Calgary Edmonton, posted minor losses. They churned about freely and were still down slightly at early afternoon.

International Nickel and Sherritt ruled slightly higher and Noranda and Waite posted minor losses. Changes in the Golds were held down to a few cents. McLeod-Cockshutt Sylvanite and Hard Rock were off moderately and the Penny issues were stronger.

Steel, Utility, Liquor and Food May .... 61½ 61¼ 61⅝ losses.

WALL STREET CLOSE

New York, Dec. 19 (AP)—Selected stocks trailed the aircrafts on a brisk upswing in today's early market proceedings, but gains running to two points or more were substantially reduced or cancelled near the final hour.

A number of new highs for the year were registered for aviation favorites. Steels held fairly well in the face of an estimated drop of 5.9 points in this week's mill operations. Rails and specialties were in demand while coppers, oils and utilities shuffled over a narrow range.

Dealings, fast in the forenoon, slowed later as profit taking cut down top marks. Transfers were at the rate of about 1,200,000 shares.

RUMOR IS DENIED OF PONTIFF'S SETBACK

Vatican City, Dec. 19 (AP)—Unusual exertion undergone by Pope Pius yesterday caused circulation today to rumors, which were quickly and authoritatively denied, that he had suffered a setback in the cardiac condition from which he suffers.

A Vatican News Service and other reliable sources said the 81-year-old Pontiff today felt better than on most days since the set-back he suffered Nov. 25 which for a time caused anxiety concerning his recovery.

Premier's Secretary Replies to Mayor

Due to the pressure of affairs connected with his pending visit to Australia, Premier Mitchell F. Hepburn, Minister of Ontario for Ontario has been unable to answer personally the volume of mail that is raily received recently, Mayor Jamieson Bone was informed by the Premier's private secretary, Roy Elmhirst in a communication received this morning.

Mayor Bone had written Premier Hepburn recommending that Mr Horton, Oeputy Minister of Welfare for the Province, be assigned to visit the British Isles and make a complete inspection and report on the manner in which social service work was being undertaken by the government of Britain in order that Ontario might adopt legislation on the same lines.

"Premier Hepburn has asked me to thank you for your letter, and to say he concurs entirely in the high opinion you have expressed of Mr. Horton, and will give consideration to the proposal you have advanced," Mr. Elmhirst wrote.

FIRE LOSS IS $5,000

Acton, Ont., Dec. 19.—(CP)—Three business places were destroyed by fire here early today. Damage was estimated at $5,000.

The fire apparently started in Bad's Hamburger store and gutted also Massey's butcher shop and Martin's barber shop before firemen brought it under control.

Cheese From Cook's Factory Received High Grade During Season

Cook's cheese factory, of Marmora of which Hugh Moloney is president and Roy Colby, cheesemaker, is believed to have established a county record for cheesemaking this season through the fact that every cheese graded from the factory received a Number 1 Grade. This was stated an exceptionally high record by J. L. Irwin, Dominion dairy grader, of the local office.

"We're just checking up to see if it is a county record," it was stated by the office.

The factory received a total of 52,162.8 pounds of milk during the past season, which made 45,516 pounds of cheese. Receipts from sale of cheese totalled $6,349.39. Eleven decimal four pounds of milk on the average were required to make one pound of cheese. Average price of cheese per pound during the season was 13.9 cents.

CONFIDENCE VOTE

sembled in caucus, desiring that our attitude be made known to Mr. King and the public, have passed the following resolution:

"Resolved that we acknowledge the courageous public service that the Prime Minister has rendered in the interest of the unity and welfare of all sections and classes of the nation during his long and successful leadership of the party, and that, at this time, when democratic institutions which have been won at great sacrifice are so gravely imperilled, and when our national unity and security sorely need the wisdom and statesmanship displayed by Mr. King throughout his public career, we declare our unbounded confidence in his leadership and, unreservedly, pledge our loyalty, devotion and support for the future."

A committee of seven which left the caucus room at one p.m. finished its deliberations and returned at 1.05 p.m. It was presumed the committee drafted a declaration on some point for submission to the caucus.

Members of the Committee were: Charles Cameron, M.P., Hastings South; Senator A. C. Hardy, Leeds; Frederick G. Sanderson, Deputy Speaker of the House, Perth; A. J. Duffus, M.P., Peterborough West; Norman McLarty, M.P., Essex West; J. A. Bradette, M.P., Cochrane; and J. C. McRuer, a candidate in Toronto last election.

SMALL LOAN PLAN PROVES ITS VALUE, BANKER STATES

Report of Annual Meeting of Canadian Bank of Commerce Points Out How Needs of Small Borrowers Are Met by Institution

More than 108,000 individual loans totalling in excess of $15,000,000 have been made by the Canadian Bank of Commerce in little more than two years under the Personal Loan Department plan. This statement was one of the most important points brought out in the annual report of the bank to the bank's shareholders by the General Manager A. E. Arscott, a few days ago. This response on the part of the public in taking advantage of the opportunity under the budget saving plan indicates its importance to the people at large. The large total which it reaches shows how necessary such a loan plan is and how attractive it has proven.

But the small borrowers are not confined to those who borrow under the personal loan plan, which is supplementary to the ordinary banking practice. There are also small loans of the usual banking type, which are available at the branches. "In the past eleven months in addition to personal loans, there were more than 106,000 borrowers who obtained regular banking accommodation from the branches in amounts of less than $500, the aggregate sum so advanced being $16,168,000", the general manager points out.

Public Confidence in Banks

This is the answer of Mr. Arscott to the claim made with great frequency "that banks do not lend money as they should." He pointed out that "banks are able to give give valuable service not only to the depositors, but to the borrowers of this country as well, solely because they have demonstrated that they deserve public confidence."

The small borrower is an essential factor in the welfare of the economic life of Canada and the report shows that the needs of this type, who are borrowers worthy of credit are being met by the banks of Canada.

Mining

President Logan in the course of his address, made reference to the widespread benefits of mining to the Dominion. "Mining has led the way in the transformation of Canadian economy. In the last decade the production of our mines had an aggregate value of $2,900,000,000, an amount not far short of the present net direct debt to the Dominion Government."

Real Estate Burden

The question which has been attracting attention of late, the burden on real estate calls forth the comment of President Logan who says, "Real estate owners are justly complaining of the excessive burden pressing upon them, for they have had to provide over one-third of all taxes collected in Canada, which aggregate over $700,000,000 per annum. In some instances property owners have been on for as much as 90 per cent of the municipal levies. Real estate, indeed, has had to bear increasing taxation for purposes which were never visualized when it was selected as a major source of revenue.....It is clear therefore that unfair taxation in this for has depressed construction and employment in building trades and that until some measure of relief to the real estate taxpayer is devised, we cannot expect a major resumption of building." Mr. Logan indicates that "as no single government has been responsible for imposing all the inequitable and excessive taxes which are now drained upon the public, no one legislative body can remove these handicaps to our progress."

Reference in the report is also made to the farm purchasing power which though no greater than a year ago mainly because of low prices for agricultural products and the large amount of unmerchantable grain, is much better distributed as a result of the largest crop yields since 1932. The grain outturn alone in the Prairie Provinces is 650,000,000 bushels as compared with 370,000,000 in 1937.

OBITUARY

MRS. EMMA WALZER

(Rochester N. Y.)

Stirling, Dec. 19 (Special) — Much sympathy is extended to Mrs. Alfred Livingston, Stirling, who on Sunday received the sad news of the passing of her mother, Mrs. Emma Walzer who died on Sunday at her home in Rochester, N. Y. in her seventy-fourth year after a lengthy illness. Born at Cape Vincent, deceased had spent the greater part of her life as a resident of Rochester, where she was held in high esteem by a host of friends who mourn her passing. The funeral service will be conducted at her late residence in Rochester on Wednesday, December Twenty-first. Predeceased by her husband some years ago the late Mrs. Walzer is mourned by five sons and seven daughters, Mr. John Walzer; Mr. Norman Walzer; Mr. Byron Walzer; Mr. Owen Walzer; and Thos. Walzer; all of Rochester. The daughters are Mrs. A. Verhag, Rochester; Mrs. M. Kelly, Rochester; Mrs. F. Smith; Mrs. E. Bidwell; Mrs. G. Bach; Mrs. C. Gruner, all of Richester N. Y. and Mrs. Alfred Livingston of Stirling, Ontario. There are also five sisters and two brothers.

"Lately there has been a decided rush on the part of many residents of the city to the local welfare office, all seeking to be put on the relief rolls," commented Mayor Jamieson Bone this morning.

"Many of them believe themselves unfairly treated because they are found ineligible for relief, and have tried various means to have their own case given particular attention. They blame Miss Lynch and myself mainly for not getting all they want.

"There are certain rules laid down by the government in the matter of relief and no municipality can get around them. If a person is eligible, that is all there is to it—if they're not eligible, then they certainly can't be put on the rolls.

"Miss Lynch is doing good work for the City of Belleville, and she has a very difficult job. Belleville is being saved a lot of money by her, simply through the fact that she refuses to be swayed in her impartiality. If a person cannot get on the relief rolls, then it is not her fault, she is simply interpreting the hard and fast rules as given by the government.

"Relief," added the Mayor, "is something we will always have with us, unless the complexion of things changes greatly. It is something that will have to be completely overhauled. No municipality, no government can keep this up."

Difficult Operation Saves Boy's Life

In one of the most difficult operations of its kind yet performed in Canada, surgeons of the Kingston General Hospital, Kingston, on Monday morning removed a nail from the lung of Gerald Hunt 13-year old son of Alton Hunt, Bloomfield, Prince Edward County.

The child was brought to Kingston on November 13th by his father after he had swallowed the shingle nail while playing with a pea shooter at his Bloomfield home. Since then he had been kept in absolute privacy at the hospital, while X-rays experts traced the daily course of the nail through the upper section of the lung. This morning the nail had moved to its most favorable position in the body for its removal by a bronchoscope. The delicate operation was performed by Dr. F. A. Cays, specialist of Kingston.

Orders have been issued that the boy must be kept quiet for the next forty-eight hours, after which he will be removed from the hospital to his Bloomfield home.

CHRISTMAS SLIDES AT BRIDGE ST. CHURCH

Jerusalem, Bethlehem and other famous places of the Holy Land, together with familiar Biblical figures connected with the birth of Christ, as seen through the eyes of the famous artist, Tissot, drew the admiration of a large congregation at Bridge Street United Church last night through the medium of the screen.

"The Nazarene", Colonel Todd's famous picture completed an ensemble of highly educational and instructive pictures that stood out with their clarity of detail and accuracy of fact.

Places famous in Biblical history such as the Church of the Nativity, the famous Cave, the Church of the Annunciation, site of the workshop of Joseph, Jerusalem from the Mount of Olives, and other colorful pictures, rounded out a display that was enjoyed to the full by the congregation.

Favorite Christmas hymns were sung by the congregation during the service. The Rev. Dr. James Semple officiated.

HILL DANGEROUS FOR SLEIGH RIDING

Derby Hill, as North Front St., has become more familiarly known recently, may provide excellent opportunities for the sport, but is not the safest place in the city for sleigh riding, complain motorists using that thoroughfare. Several near accidents on the hill were reported over the week end, and traffic was forced to proceed slowly to avoid hitting any of the several children using the ice-glazed hill as a toboggan slide.

HOME FOR THE AGED VISITED BY CHAPTER

Old Folks at the Belleville Home for the Aged were gladdened yesterday when members of St. Julien Chapter I.O.D.E. and their husbands visited them. The guests brought Christmas stockings and an extra gift for all. After the presentation, favourite Christmas hymns were sung, followed by Bible reading and prayer, which brought to a close a very happy time for residents and visitors. Mrs. G. P. Stewart, former chairman of the Home Board representing the chairman, Mrs. A. E. Purdy, thanked the Chapter for their thoughtfulness.

NINETEEN GUILTY OF GAMBLING

Each of Those Pleading Guilty Fined $3.00 and $9.50 Costs

Muffled tones emanated from behind closed doors which sounded something like "seven, seven, come eleven" when suddenly a sinister silence fell upon the gathering and very quietly police informed nineteen local men they were under under arrest on charges of gambling. Today in Magistrate E.J. Butler's police court the young men appeared charged with being "found in" a common gaming house. All pleaded guilty and a fine of $3.00 and $9.50 costs was imposed in each case The operator of the establishment asked a week's remand when confronted with a charge of keeping a common gaming house.

Quietly and without ceremony local police organized a raid upon alleged local gambling houses shortly after 2.00 a.m. Sunday morning. Trying to get the dice "hot" nineteen manipulators of the "African dominoes" found police in their midst before any knowledge or suspicions of a raid were in evidence. The door leading into the gambling room had been left unlocked allowing Sergeant Arthur Booth and his cordon of police to enter the premises without being heard. After the nineteen men were taken to the police station for identification police continued their drive on alleged gambling places and entered another such place where they were confronted with a man who was nonchalantly sweeping the floor without concern.

'I guess we're a little late" remarked Sergeant Booth as he glanced at a number of empty chairs.

"Yes it is great weather we're having," was the reply received as the officers smilingly left the premises.

when PENNIES count — The "Ontario Intelligencer" is The Ideal 'Shopping Guide' —

How to get the most out of every penny is mighty important to folks who are just starting out. An error in buying judgment that would be considered trivial by anyone else, might be tragic for them. They can't afford to make mistakes . . . they can't run the risk of "gold bricks". Every penny counts. Every penny has to do DOUBLE-DUTY. It's interesting to know (and we can't deny that we're a bit proud!) that The Ontario Intelligencer is making it possible for people like these to get more for their pennies. For the pages of The Ontario Intelligencer are a "Shopping Guide" to values. Every day advertisers offer definite savings on the things all of us need. Of course, if you are already an Ontario Intelligencer reader, you are well aware of this fact.

60 ARAB REBELS KILLED SUNDAY

Coming Holiday Season May be Marked by Terror

Jerusalem, Dec. 19 (CP-Havas)—Assassination of an Arab moderate leader and the death of 62 Arabs in armed clashes today aroused concern that the coming holiday season might be marked by terror.

Men believed to be followers of the exiled Grand Mufti of Jerusalem, head of the extremist faction, shot and killed Sheik Said Al Khatib, a priest of the Mosque of Omar in the old city of Jerusalem Sunday morning.

The killing of the sheik, a well known moderate, was linked with the exiled Grand Mufti's campaign to wipe out Arab opposition in the Holy Land. Another Mosque official, Sheik Mahmoud Ansari, was killed early last week and Sheik Abdul Rahman El Khatib, a relative of the priest slain yesterday, was shot fatally a month ago.

Sixty Arabs Killed.

At least sixty Arab rebels were killed Sunday when British troops and Royal Air Force units battled for three hours with a large band near Beni Naim, eight miles south of Hebron. A British aviator and a trooper were wounded in the engagement.

The clash took place while Royal Arab factions held mass meetings in the Hebron region. When 3,000 Arab moderates headed by Fakhri Bey Nashashibi, Mayor of Bethlehem, assembled for a pro-British rally in the village of Yatta, the Supreme Arab Committee countered with a huge gathering attended by more than 10,000 at Beni Naim.

Troops killed one Arab and wounded two others in raids on rebel hideouts in Samari. In Northern Palestine, near Lake Tiberius, a British detachment surprised an Arab gathering and shot an Arab who refused to surrender. A British policeman was killed and two British policemen and an Arab terrorist were wounded when rebels attacked a British armored car on the Acre-Safed road.

STOVE DOES NOT EXPLODE

ANTHONY EDEN VISITS ANCESTOR'S TOMB

Anthony Eden, former foreign secretary of Great Britain, and Mrs. Eden, visit the tomb of an illustrious ancestor in St. Anne's churchyard, Annapolis, Maryland, while visiting United States. The tomb is that of Sir Robert Eden, Capt. Eden's great-great-grandfather, who was the last colonial governor of the state of Maryland.

Board Room Gossip

As supplied to Biggar and Crawford

By Financial Service

Home Oil was by far the outstanding actor on Canadian markets last week, opening at $1.80 and selling up to $3.50, on very heavy volume. Some of the reports about the company's No. 2 well have been exaggerated, although admittedly it is an important find not only for the company, but for Turner Valley as a whole, as it proves up the northern part of the Valley, in which section Home has practically all of the acreage. The rise was no doubt helped along in good measure by "shorts" who were caught at lower prices and were forced to cover when demand boosted the price.

The strength in Home Oil did not permeate the oil stocks as a group, although the industrial list acted much better due to the strength that developed in New York. Higher prices are generally predicted over the next few weeks, and it is maintained that the market will mark time for a little while early in 1939 in order to appraise the business prospects for the spring.

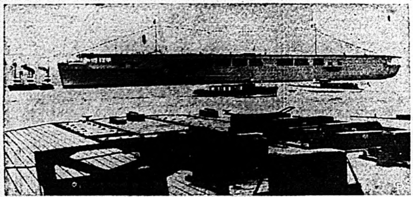
What better way to awaken the imagination in youngsters of 'teen age than through a direct gift of a share of stock in the country's business? The idea of giving sons and daughters, nephews and nieces or young business associates an odd-lot certificate in a leading industrial corporation is not new, but this year such a selection appears propitious because of the encouraging outlook for a continued recovery in business and industry.

Stock Gifts to Wives

When the common stock gift idea is applied to wives, parents or people in middle life, it is usually more desirable to select a sound dividend paying issue—one that affords a moderate opportunity for profit without the risks of outright speculation—because the "quarterly check" is always useful, as well as a reminder of the donor throughout the year. Here, too, the choice can be made for those who are not "financially-minded" by giving a stock which is representative of a company already serving the recipient. For instance, a wife or mother would likely appreciate a stock of a food or drug products manufacturer; a father, uncle or older brother would be most familiar with the shares of companies producing cigarettes or running a railroad or a telephone system.

More Split-Ups Are on The Way

So far this year, seven companies have deemed it advisable to split their shares in order to secure a wider distribution and thus a better market for the stock. The Street feels that such issues as National Steel Car, Noranda, Asbestos, Royalite and several others, are also possibilities in this connection.



FIRST NAZI AIRCRAFT CARRIER LAUNCHED

Latest addition to the Germany navy is the Graf Zeppelin, ABOVE, first aircraft carrier ever built for the Reich and named after the country's famous airship inventor. The new 18,300-ton craft is seen being towed across the Deutschewerke navy yard at Kiel, just after the launching ceremonies which were attended by Hitler, Goering and other high German officials. Countess Hella Brandenstein-Zeppelin, daughter of the airship pioneer, christened the new craft, which carries 40 planes, is equipped with 16 six-inch guns, 10 four-inch anti-aircraft guns and 22 lighter pieces. Her speed is given as 32 knots.

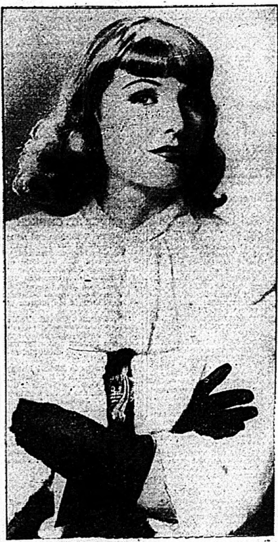
Ermine is Choice Of Modern Trilby



By ALICE ALDEN

TRILBY still is in circulation—or, at least, the famous du Maurier hair-do is. While the battle over the upswept coiffure continues, there are two lovelies who still prefer the Trilby hair-do. They are the socialites, Sally Clark and Whitney Bourne, the latter depicted here. Miss Bourne, who has made a name for herself in the movies, likes this coiffure at night. In this picture she wears a delightful ermine jacket over a black crepe dress, simply styled to form a background for gems. Gauntlets of black antelope enhance the sleeves.

BURGLARS REPLACE STOLEN SAFE WITH CARDBOARD REPLICA

THE WEATHER

Toronto, Dec. 20 (CP)—Light snow has fallen in some districts from Manitoba eastward to the Maritimes, but the weather has been generally fair in all provinces. It is somewhat colder this morning in the far west but it has been comparatively mild in nearly all parts of eastern Canada. A fairly deep disturbance, centred off the Nova Scotia coast, is moving eastward and a shallow trough of low extends southwestward from James Bay across Lake Superior to the immediate west of Lake Michigan. A ridge of high pressure extends southwestward from Ungava across the Ottawa Valley to the southeast states.

Lake Superior — Southwest to northwest winds; cloudy with light snow; a little colder tonight. Wednesday, mostly fair and somewhat colder; probably snowflurries in east portion.

Manitoba—Fair today and Wednesday; somewhat colder tonight.

Saskatchewan and Alberta—Fair today and Wednesday with stationary or a little higher temperature tonight.

Why the Weather!

By Major A. H. Thiessen
Science Service Meteorologist

Winter's sun! Generally one thinks of winter as a time for lots of clothes. But many take sun baths in comfort in the dead of winter. In sheltered valleys of the high Alps arrangements are made for patients, nearly nude, to take sun baths amid snow and ice. They are warmed sufficiently by the radiations from the sun which come through the pure, dry air much stronger than at lowlands where the air is less pure. Even in the polar regions and on mountains travelers sometimes actually suffer from the heat and glare from the untempered rays of the sun. Sunburn is quite common on mountains with air temperatures around zero, and face masks are often necessary.

GUIDE RELEASED FROM JAIL HELPS RESCUE SIXTEEN

Nels Ludwingson Had Served Six Days of 10-Day Sentence

BOAT STRIKES BEACH

Survivors Camped for Two Days Without Food or Shelter

Juneau, Alaska, Dec. 20 (AP)—A trapper-guide, released from a city jail drunkenness charge because he knew the perilous Cape Fairweather country, led sixteen shipwreck survivors toward Lituya Bay and ultimate rescue today.

The guide, Nels Ludwingson, had served six days of a 10-day sentence here, when he was released so he could accompany Pilot Sheldon Simmons to the scene of the stranded motorship Patterson.

Simmons returned two survivors, who needed medical aid, here in his plane. He left Ludwingson with the others. Ludwingson organized the remaining survivors into a hiking party and the men set out on their 30-mile trek to Lituya Bay.

Today two United States Navy planes from the Sitka base were to take a landing party of Coast Guardsmen from the cutter Cyane at Port Althorp to establish a camp at Lituya Bay.

Hazardous Adventure.

The survivors brought here yesterday—Chief Engineer Clair McDowell of Seattle and Third Mate Steve Johnson of Ketchikan — told a graphic story of their hazardous adventure on the stormy, gale-swept beach.

They said the Patterson was wrecked at four minutes to midnight, Dec. 11. She struck the beach with engines under full steam.

Chief Officer Gustaf Swanson was washed overboard by a heavy breaker as he tried to launch a lifeboat. His body was not found.

Made Shore With Belt.

Seaman James Moore made shore with a life belt, but drowned attempting to cross the eight-knot current of Sea Otter Creek. His body was washed out to sea.

"Four men made shore safely in a lifeboat," McDowell said. "The others remained aboard the Patterson and reached shore when the bow went dry. Then began a week of torture.

"For the first two days and nights we camped on the gale-swept beach without food or shelter. On the third day two men managed to reach the ship's bow at low tide. They brought ashore tarpaulins with which we made shelters."

CAN REMAIN IN CANADA 2 MONTHS

Miss Vera Freudenfeld Will Visit Her Fiance in Montreal

By HAROLD J. FAIR

Halifax, Dec. 20 (CP)—Assured by Canadian immigration authorities of two months sojourn in the Dominion, dark-haired Vera Freudenfeld planned today to leave for Montreal and meet her fiance, a New York surgeon. Like Miss Freudenfeld, the unnamed surgeon is a victim of Nazi Germany's annexation of Austria, their native land.

A week ago, Miss Freudenfeld sought to enter Canada as a visitor on a two-month visitor's permit but immigration authorities turned down her application. Intervention of C. J. Burchell, Halifax lawyer, resulted in another hearing and she received the permission yesterday.

PATCH TEST FOR TUBERCULOSIS SIMPLE TO GIVE

APPLIED TO SKIN

Toronto, Dec. 20 (CP)—Use of the patch test for tuberculosis filled a definite need in surveys in children and young adults. Dr. M. H. Brown, of Connaught Laboratories and the School of Hygiene, University of Toronto, told the Laboratory section of the Canadian Public Health Association today.

"The intracutaneous tuberculin test has been employed almost universally with quite good results," Dr. Brown said. "As with all intracutaneous tests, it requires rigid sterile precautions and the use of hypodermic needles. The patch test was designed with the hope that the method of application would be simpler and would obviate the use of the needle, an important consideration when dealing with children."

The patch test, he explained, consisted of soaking small squares of filter paper in concentrated stabilized old tuberculin, allowing the papers to dry thoroughly, then covering the patch with adhesive plaster to one side and tracing paper to the other.

The patch is applied to the forearm after the arm has been sponged with ether and allowed to dry. The tracing paper is removed and the patch applied in a transverse direction. It is allowed to remain on the skin for 48 hours, and readings of the reaction are made from 24 to 48 hours after removal.

Poisoning from eating mussels was discussed by James Gibbard, of the Dominion Department of Pensions and National Health.

"During the past summer," Gibbard said, "more than 200 sample of shellfish have been examined for toxicity. As a result of this study, definite evidence has been obtained to show that poisonous mussels occur in certain well-defined areas. Two specimens have been incriminated and tentatively identified as mytilis edulis and modiola modiolus."

NO AFFILIATION WITH COMMITTEE SAYS MR. HEPBURN

17 Members Appointed by Liberal Caucus to Study Situation

PREMIER NOT WELL

Ottawa, Dec. 20 (CP)—Liberalism in Ontario remains united despite the continued clash between Prime Minister Mackenzie King and Premier Mitchell Hepburn. This was the confident assertion of Ontario Liberal Senators, Members of Parliament and candidates defeated in the 1935 general election who attended a caucus here yesterday.

The caucus unanimously voted confidence in Mr. Mackenzie King's leadership and set up a committee to consider the interests of the party in Ontario and report back. But so far as the King-Hepburn quarrel was concerned it remained exactly where it was. There was no express condemnation of Mr. Hepburn for his attacks on the prime minister which were the reason for the caucus being called.

No Gesture of Appeasement.

A suggestion that a gesture of appeasement was made or was about to be made to the Ontario Premier drew a denial from a spokesman for the caucus. At the same time he refused to say no such gesture would be made. He said the committee, with seventeen members under the chairmanship of Trade Minister Euler, had a free hand.

Unofficially it was understood the committee would make a survey of the position of the party in all constituencies and seek to work out machinery for co-operation between all Liberals in making their full strength felt at elections. The object is to prevent the dispute at the top spreading throughout the rank and file of the party in the province.

No Compromise.

(Commenting on the caucus, Mr. Hepburn said last night in St. Thomas, Ont., that the Ontario Liberal Association will have no affiliation with the committee. He said "there will be no compromise whatsoever. Wish some of the Ontario Federal members had backbone enough to make an attack on me in the open and then face it before their own constituencies.")

Each man attending the meeting gave a brief report on conditions in his constituency. The consensus of these reports was said to disclose no signs of a split in the party ranks. In all constituencies Federal and Provincial members were able to work together in harmony. Party workers, however, were disturbed by the dispute and regretted it.

Asked if the meeting had made ny change in the situation a spokesman said: "No, but it has vindicated the leadership of Mackenzie King before the whole country." It showed Liberals in other provinces that Ontario Liberals were solidly behind the Federal Prime Minister.

Strained For Two Years.

Relations between Mr. Mackenzie King and Mr. Hepburn have been difficult for nearly two years. Until recently, however, the offensive has always been taken by Mr. Hepburn. He brought the condition sharply into public notice when he said he was "no longer a Mackenzie King Liberal."

Then about a year ago a clash occurred over Mr. Hepburn's application to the Federal government for

Intense Cold Grips North Europe, Many Lives Are Reported Lost

London, Dec. 20 (AP) — Winter rolled up a heavy toll of lives in many European countries today.

A ferry boat creeping through the icy Tagus River at Lisbon struck a dredge and sank. Twenty-five of the seventy ferry passengers were believed drowned.

More than twenty deaths were attributed to the cold. It was 23 degrees above zero in England. A violent northeast wind foiled relief for three keepers at Fastnet Rock Lighthouse, off the coast of County Cork, Ireland.

Paris and suburbs counted nine dead. Hundreds of barges were caught in frozen northern French canals. Railroad signals froze in Scandinavia, delaying continental expresses. Norway had the lowest temperature yesterday, 25 below zero. Sweden was second with 20 below.

In Hungary the cold snapped a rail and derailed a train, injuring six pssengers. Several ships in the Black Sea radioed distress signals, and at least three sailors were believed lost.

Weather forecasts were continued cold.

TRADE RESTRAINT IS CHARGED IN THE INDICTMENT

Violation of Sherman Anti-Trust Act Is Claimed

ACTION UNPRECEDENTED

Penalty of Year's Imprisonment and $9,000 Fine is Provided

Washington, Dec. 20 (AP)—The American Medical Association, three local medical societies and twenty-one individual physicians were indicted today by a Federal Grand Jury for violation of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act.

The societies named were the Medical Society of the District of Columbia, the Harris County (Texas) Medical Society and the Washington (D.C.) Academy of Surgery.

Noted Physicians Charged.

Among the twenty-one physicians indicted were Dr. Olin West, Secretary of the American Medical Association; Dr. Morris Fishbein, editor of the American Medical Association's Journal; Dr. Arthur C. Christie, prominent Washington Radiologist and Dr. Prentiss Willson, who recently cooperated in filing a suit against the Washington Group Health Association, charging that group health physicians had injured his practice in furnishing medical service through the association.

Others indicted are officials of the American Medical Association, or its affiliated societies.

The United States Department of Justice instituted proceedings against the American Medical Association last October, charging it was acting in restraint of trade, in violation of the Anti-Trust Act.

Specifically it charged the association, some local societies and individual physicians were preventing other physicians and cooperative medical organizations from supplying medical service by refusing membership in medical societies to individual physicians who joined such groups.

Action Unprecedented.

The jury's action was unprece- Anti-Trust Act prohibits "every contract, combination in form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce in any territory of the United States or of the District of Columbia. Every person who shall make any such contract or engage in any such combination or conspiracy, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor."

The law provides a penalty of one year imprisonment, payment of $9,000 fine, or both.

The indictment upheld the privilege of private physicians to treat their patients in well-equipped hospitals.

Privilege Desirable.

"Such privilege is desirable for all dented in the annals of medicine in "Exclusion from hospitals of surgeons and physicians including those engaged in group practice seriously restrains them in the pursuit of their callings."

The jury also upheld the right of one doctor to seek the advice of another in cases involving serious illness, saying "consultations between doctors are frequently advantageous, both to the patient and to the doctors. Doctors, including doctors engaged in group practice on a risk-sharing prepayment basis, are seriously handicapped if they are prevented from obtaining consultations."

800 Doctors Members.

The indictment said about 110,000 this country, said Justice Depart- the United States today are members of the A.M.A. which was shown as having an estimated gross income of "several million dollars a year".

Group Health Association, whose complaint led to the investigation, was incorporated here Feb. 19, 1937, as a non-profit, cooperative association of government employees. More than 80 per cent of its membership stated that they earned less than $2,000 annually.

Youth Unconscious After Car Burns

The patient regained consciousness at dawn, but would not talk to police. He gave four different names when questioned by hospital authorities.

MAYOR LAGUARDIA IS KNOCKED DOWN BY BLOW OF FIST

Heavy -Set Man Leaps From Behind Upon Mayor

'HOUNDED' MAYOR

New York, Dec. 20 (AP)—A heavy-set, gray-haired man leaped upon Mayor Laguardia from behind and knocked him down with a blow of his fist as the mayor was mounting city hall steps today. The assailant was immediately set upon by police and bystanders and beaten insensible. The man was tentatively identified as J. Hagen.

After the man was overpowered, he was carried into a secretary's office which adjoins the mayor's suite. Laguardia superintended the removal.

"He's been hounding me for four years," said the mayor. He did not amplify but the remark led City Hall employees to suppose that Hagen was a disappointed office-seeker.

The attack occurred in the presence of hundreds of persons gathered in and near the City Hall Plaza to watch the demolition of the old federal building that stands there.

On Dec. 8, the mayor announced the receipt of a bullet in an anonymous letter, signed with the symbol of a swastika, saying:

"You will get this if you continue to attack the German Nazi Party."

PLANE CRASHES KILLING FOUR

San Antonio, Tex., Dec. 20 (AP)—A flaming United States Coast Guard plane crashed at Boerne, 30 miles northwest of here, killing four men late last night.

The dead were identified as Lieut. P. S. Lyons, Unit Commander of the United States Coast Guard at El Paso; Rupert Germaine, Coast Guard; George Latham, enlisted man at Fort Bliss, El Paso, and C. H. Peague, Naval Ensign at El Paso.

Waif, Both Blind and Deaf, Getting Whole New World for Christmas

By JOSEPH RAWLINGS

Chicago, Dec. 20 (AP)—A six year old brown-haired girl who was a waif, both blind and deaf, is getting a whole new world for Christmas this year—thanks to science and the patience of Dr. Robert Gault, Northwestern University psychologist.

The child is Joan Higgins, sometimes called the "Helen Keller of her generation" and the present is one she'll remember as long as she lives—an opportunity to study Braille, the language of the sightless, under the scientific guidance of Dr. Gault.

Dr. Gault, Director of the American Institute for the Deaf, disclosed this unique gift today. Simultaneously he revealed that Joan had already begun her studies and had—in one short month—learned to read the Braille characters for eight words.

Thus Joan is receiving the gift of knowledge.

Dr. Gault laid the foundation of her Braille studies by teaching her a spoken vocabulary of nearly 100 words in two years. This was accomplished by use of the phonotactor, a device something like a telephone which he developed in 1937, a year after Joan was brought to his clinic. A loud speaker transmits vibrations of the instructor's voice, and Joan, holding her tiny fingers against the machine, can distinguish various vibrations and imitate them with her own voice.

In learning Braille Joan feels the object she is studying—a ball, for example—and the raised characters—b-a-l-l—at the same time, Dr. Gault said, or does the act represented by the characters immediately after feeling the letters. After she has repeatedly felt the word and experienced the object or act, she learns to perform the act or reach for the object designated by the characters she has felt.

Joan was only five days old when she was found on the doorstep of the Cook County Hospital. Born sightless and totally deaf, she remained in the hospital until 1936, when she became a ward of the state and Dr. Gault undertook her instruction.

Then she was almost insane with fear, would tear off her clothes, and be almost unmanageable. Now, after three years she is calmly and courageously carrying on her up-hill fight for an inkling of the world she has never seen or heard through Braille and the vibrations of a machine.

Stringent Regulations For Foreign Borrowings Announced in London

Regulations Put Back Where They Were Relaxed in February

QUESTION OF EXCHANGE

Recent Fall in Sterling One of Causes for Action

By J. F. SANDERSON

London, Dec. 20 (CP)—Sir John Simon, Chancellor of the Exchequer, today announced more stringent regulations for foreign borrowings in the British market. The reasons are understood to be the need to conserve British financial resources for rearmament and the recent fall in sterling.

Since April, 1936, applications for outside borrowings must be passed by the Foreign Transactions Advisory Committee. At first the regulations were stringent, but in February, 1938, they were modified because of the strong position of the pound and the bounding position of British trade. The effect of today's announcement puts the regulations back where they were before they were relaxed in February.

Foreign Transactions.

Answering a question by Clement Attlee, Labor, in the House of Commons, Sir John said:

"The House will recollect that on Feb. 1, 1938, it was stated that in view of the position of our exchange great latitude would, until further notice, be allowed with respect to certain applications to the Foreign Transactions Advisory Committee.

"In view of the present status on foreign transactions the advisory committee indicate — wherewith I concur — immediate restriction is now required on the greater latitude then announced and I have reason to think that the need for such restriction is generally acknowledged.

"I therefore, take the opportunity of stating that the temporary relaxations made in February have been withdrawn."

When a curb was first placed on foreign exchange in 1931 the pound was $4. The closing rate here today was $4.67, a level around which the pound has fluctuated for some weeks.

Plans For Industry.

London, Dec. 20 (CP)—A detailed plan has been worked out to keep the wheels of industry moving during time of war, Ernest Brown, Minister of Labor, said in the House of Commons today.

As part of the national service register a list of reserved occupations is being compiled from which recruits for the active defence forces will not be accepted. The list will include shipbuilders, munition workers miners, and public utility workers.

JAN MASARYK TO VISIT U.S.

London, Dec. 20 (AP)—Jan Masaryk, who resigned Dec. 5 as Czecho-Slovak Minister at London, said today he will sail for a private visit to the United States Dec. 30 in the United States liner Washington.

He added Eduard Benes, former President of Czecho-Slovakia, will sail in the Queen Mary Feb. 4. Dr. Benes has completed writing the lectures he is to deliver at the University of Chicago.

REARMING LAGS COMPLAINTS MADE TO CHAMBERLAIN

Prime Minister Sustained by 340 to 143 on Foreign Policy

LLOYD GEORGE ATTACK

London, Dec. 20 (CP) — Prime Minister Chamberlain, his foreign policy approved by a House of Commons vote, began an investigation today of alleged deficiencies in defence measures.

Almost simultaneously with yesterday's 340 to 143 vote for the government came reports that three junior ministers had complained to the Prime Minister of lagging rearmament.

Singled out for attack were Leslie Hore-Belisha, Secretary for War; Sir Thomas Inskip, Minister for Coordination of Defence; and Earl Winterton, who until recently was Under Secretary of the Air Ministry.

Reports were that the junior ministers also criticized Lord Runciman, Lord President of the Council, who sought unsuccessfully last fall to mediate the Sudeten dispute in Czecho-Slovakia.

Criticisms were said to have been made by Robert Hudson, Under-Secretary for Overseas Trade; Lord Strathcona and Mount Royal, Under Secretary of State for War; and the Marquess of Dufferin and Ava, Under Secretary for Colonies.

Lack of "Drive".

Mr. Hudson and the Marquess of Dufferin and Ava were reported to have told Mr. Chamberlain in private audience there was a lamentable lack of "drive" in the rearmament program and delay in production.

A fighting speech by Prime Minister Chamberlain in which he outlined Great Britain's foreign policy in firm and unmistakable words led to resounding defeat for the Labor party's motion censuring the government's foreign policy. The division came after Mr. Chamberlain said German leaders would be making a "tragic blunder" if they mistook British love of peace and willingness to compromise for general weakness.

Declares War Averted.

Mr. Chamberlain claimed his foreign policy had averted war with

CHRISTMAS PERIOD TO BE QUIET FOR JEWS

The Christmas period will be a quieter one this season for Jewish residents of the city owing to the fact that a calendar change this year resulted in the important Feast of the Candles, traditionally observed just previous to Christmas, being held earlier and marked with due ceremony at the local Synagogue on Saturday last.

There will be, however, the usual program at the Synagogue on Pinnacle Street for the children, and the usual gifts will be presented just previous to Christmas Day, according to plans of members not yet completed.

KIDDIES GUESTS AT TURKEY DINNER KINSMEN CLUB

FINE PROGRAM

"And so betwixt them all you see, they licked the platter clean" may have been true of Mother Goose's Jack Spratt, but it was never exemplified any better than last night at the Queens Hotel when the Belleville Kinsmen Club were hosts to twenty-four underprivileged boys of the city.

Steaming plates of turkey and dressing, vegetables, tasty soup, pie, ice cream, coffee, milk, were set in front of shining hungry faces. Necks scrubbed meticulously clean for the occasion bent forward in pure gastronomic joy as the boys "waded" into the delicious meal with all the gusto of hungry youth.

They had the time of their young lives. They stood up on dining room chairs and sang "Jingle Bells", "Schooldays" and other popular songs in lusty schoolboy trebles, and joined heartily in the club-songs sung by the clubmen. Leo Riggs presided at the piano in his usual capable manner.

And childish eyes rounded large with pleasure as brand new hockey sticks and pucks, boxes of candy, and a special gift of boxes of chocolates given them by Mrs. Zita Ryan, of the Queens Hotel were presented to them as they filed slowly out of the dining room.

A Perfect Evening

Their hosts left nothing undone to ensure the boys a perfect evening. Each member was delegated to look after one boy, and look after his personal wants. Interspersing the various courses were variable acts, that drew the unstinted applause of hist and guests alike. Headlining a program that fairly sparkled with talent was the clever, lightning sketches of a number of popular comic strip characters, that had the youthful guests standing on their feet, drawn by John Stephenson clever versatile young Belleville artist. The boys clamored for the finished products as "Jiggs, Popeye, Olive Oyl, Lil Abner Daisy Mae, and an Indian Chief in full colorful regalia came to life under the magic of Stephenson's crayons. The young artist was vociferously applauded as he concluded an act that not only was enjoyed to the full by his audience but brought out the clever talents and artistry of this versatile Belleville youth.

Musical Program

Another feature of the program was the selections played by a quartette of harmonica players. Led by Jackie Marsh, Belleville's "Bobby Breen," who also delighted his listeners with a sparkling vocal solo, the aggregation of youths showed a lively versatility and ability to play their instruments. Equally as popular proved three young cornetists whose rendition of "There is something About a Soldier" in trio, and an instrumental solo by one of the members of the trio drew rounds of applause from their listeners. Last but not least on the program was the sequence of animal impersonations given by young Marshall Spafford. His idea of a cat and dog-fight brought howls of laughter from the youthful audience.

New President

Another feature of the evening was the official installation of the new slate of officers, who will guide the destinies of the club for the coming year. Retiring President Cleo B. Colling, in a brief address thanked his fellow clubmen for the splendid support given him during his tenure of office. He appealed for more efforts in the social service work of the club and asked for the same fine co-operation to be given his successor, that was afforded him.

President William N. Hurst paid a distinct tribute to past-president Colling. "This is the first year, that a president has retired from office leaving a surplus in the club treasury. This is significant of the fact, that President Colling has used excellent judgment during his term of office. It is up to the rest of us to build up this surplus in order, that more service work can be done." President Hurst then presented Past-President Colling with the small gold past-president's pin, as members stood on their feet and cheered.

Last but not least, and due to the generosity of Mr. J. C. McCarthy owner of the McCarthy theatre, and his genial manager Vincent Freeman, the boys were taken to the theatre, where they were the guests of the management during the later part of the evening. They parked their Christmas presents in the spacious lobby, and tired but happy, filed in the main auditorium to round out one of the most enjoyable evenings of their young lives.

CHAIRMAN REID IS PAID TRIBUTE BY UTILITIES BOARD

Question of Delinquent Payers of Water Rates Raised at Closing Meeting of Year — New Water Rate Set for Consumption Over 6 Billion Gallons per Month — Harmony and Cooperation

Suggestion that the new Belleville Public Utilities meet the new heads of city departments early next month with regard to drafting a definite policy for collection of water-rate arrears in the city, was agreed upon at the last meeting of the 1938 Commission held to-day.

Lively discussion followed the perusal of a list of outstanding accounts presented to the Commission by Manager O. H. Scott. Splendid co-operation on the part of the greater majority had been experienced, Mr. Scott pointed out but there were still some accounts that had not been paid.

Opposition to Mayor Jamieson Bone's suggestion that delinquent payers be deprived of this service was voiced by Chairman George A. Reid. "These bills must be paid," he said, "but I do not think we can go this far. In fact I am willing to stand a suit if this service is cut off in the home of any friend of mine."

Mayor Bone stated that, "This Utilities Commission is not a relief office. We are running it as a Public Utilities without excuses. These people must pay or the water will be cut off".

Chairman George Reid — "The city should give a list to this commission of the tenant in city homes. The relief office should do something about it. This commission should have more co-operation between itself and the city, and itself and the Relief Office.'"

Mayor Bone stated that "the city is at loose ends on these matters, and needs a city manager". He suggested that Mr. Scott notify the city treasurer and the city relief office that the list of delinquent payers be placed in the hands of the Commission.

Commissioner Morley Duff struck a warning note. "We must be careful with regard to the cutting off of water services," he said.

"We should adopt a definite policy of co-operation between this Commission and the city and its departments. "I suggest that this commission meet the new heads of city departments early next year with regard to the adoption of such a policy," he said. The suggestion was agreed upon and will come up at the next meeting.

Operating Surpluses

Operating surpluses in the three utilities were experienced in November, Manager Scott pointed out. These include, Gas Department, $5,000, not including debentures; Water Department, $15,055.00 and Electric Utilities $7,972.00.

Reduce Rate

Reduction in the rate of users utilizing a consumption of a gallonage of six millions and over monthly, from eight cents to six and one-half cents gross, was approved by the Commission. This in turn is subject to the usual ten per cent discount, it was pointed out.

In view of the fact that C.N.R. consumption of water has risen over fifty per cent in the last year, the Commission felt that another step in adjustment of rates should be taken, with the above results. A discussion with railway officials will take place at the beginning of the new year, with regard to the new rate adjustment, it was decided.

Window Prize Won

Commissioners pointed with pride to the fact that the staff of the local Hydro Shop had been awarded a prize of twenty-five dollars by virtue of their gaining a first-place tie in Group Two of a window dressing competition held in Ontario Hydro shops. Manager Scott told the commission that the prize had been distributed among the members of his staff, adding his congratulations to those of his colleagues.

Charging that "street talk" and incorrect statements made on public platforms to the effect that the commission did not cooperate with the city in payment of the salary of the City Solicitor, Chairman Geo. A. Reid, asked that the motion passed some time ago in which the commission agreed to pay $400.00 in 1937 and 1938 towards the salary of the solicitor be read again.

"We have had a false policy with regard to statements made against this Commission," he said. "In that we have not met these statements. I want to state emphatically, with regard to one of these statements, that the Hydro does not wire electric stoves, nor does it conduct inspections. The wiring is done by electricians and the inspection carried out by a government official."

Mayor Bone suggested that the Commission meet city plumbers and electricians and others who have complaints with a view toward cooperation. "If these people will not listen, then the deal is off", he said. Complaints should be forwarded above the signature of the person making it, it was added.

City Bills

Presentation of water consumption bills of the city amounting to some $339 was ordered. "This money is always refunded to the city," Chairman Reid pointed out, "but we must present them for our records."

Tribute to Chairman

Tribute was paid by members to retiring Chairman Geo. Reid. "I move that this commission go on record showing appreciation of the services of Mr. Reid during his eight years of connection with us." Commissioner Morley Duff stated "He has shown great interest and enthusiasm and given much of his time to this commission."

Mayor Bone stated that he had found Chairman Reid, a most conscientious commissioner. He has proven a very valuable man and I feel a deep regret in seeing him leave the job. I think appreciation should be shown in a more tangible way."

Mr. Reid's Appreciation

Chairman Reid in a brief address of appreciation stated that he had given eight years of good honest service to the commission. He paid tribute to his colleagues. "Nothing has been done behind closed doors", he said. "Everything has been discussed above board and we have settled our problems like men. I have no regrets in leaving", he added, "although I would have liked to have stayed another two years."

The greatest compliment paid him, the retiring chairman said occurred when he was asked to address the Arnprior Commission. "They knew none of us, but had read what this commission had done for Belleville. I consider that the finest compliment ever paid me or this commission." He thanked commissioners and the staff for the courtesy and cooperation shown him, promising to always take a deep interest in the work of the commission. "In concluding ten years of public service", he said, "I can proudly say that I have yet to make a statement that I have had to retract." He closed with the compliments of the season.

Christmas Trees

ST. THOMAS CHURCH

UNDER the direction of the Sunday School teachers, the annual Christmas entertainment for the scholars was held with outstanding success in the Parish House last evening. About one hundred and thirty members of the Sunday School assembled at five o'clock and enjoyed a delicious supper of sandwiches, cake and all kinds of Christmas delicacies.

Following the supper the scholars witnessed a very interesting program "The Morning Dawned" in which tableaux of beautifully costumed characters depicted Christmas morning throughout the various nations. This was presented by members of Mrs. E. R. Logie's class and proved very effective and impressive.

All joined in the singing of familiar Christmas carols, this part of the program being particularly interesting.

ST. GEORGE'S

ST. George's Sunday School, Station Street, held their Christmas entertainment and Christmas Tree on Monday, December 19, with great success.

Rev. G. G. Wright of Christ Church opened the evening's festivities (after the singing of a carol) with a few welcoming remarks followed by a prayer for Mr. J. Varley, former superintendent, who is very ill in Christie St. Hospital, Toronto.

The programme — Recitation by Doris Wickett of Mrs. Flindall's Class; dance by Norma Coleman of Miss Charman's Class; Song and Dance by Bunny Button of Miss Armstrong's Class; Song and Dance by Marian Warren of Miss Armstrong's Class; Dance by Mary Gill of Miss Charman's Class; A reading by Madeline Walden of Mrs. Markle's Class; Song by Fay Wellman of Mrs. Markle's Class; Dance by Beverley Aselstine of Miss Charman's Class; Playlet by Miss Armstrong's Class; Recitation by Cliff Lazenby of Mrs. Newman's Class; Song and Dance by Madeline Walden of Mrs. Markle's Class; Recitation by Anne Briens of Mrs. Flindall's Class; Song by Mrs. Flindall's Class (Primary); Carol (Hark the Herald Angels Sing) by Mrs. Newman's Class; Song by Doris Wickett and Anne Briens of Mrs. Flindall's Class; Recitation by Florence Clement of Mrs. Markle's Class; Song by Miss Ruth Gibbon's Class (Primary); Song by Marjorie Grant of Miss Charman's Class.

Mr. George Gulliver and Mr. Cecil Rogers supplied some very well received Christmas music, between numbers on guitar and accordion and when Santa arrived at 10.00 p.m. to distribute gifts and candies to every member of the Sunday School he found everybody in that mood which comes only from an evening of very enjoyable entertainment.

A very interesting event of the evening was the presentation of a Bible to Clifford Lazenby for exceptional attention to lessons and 100 per cent perfect attendance throughout the year.

Holloway Street

Last evening was a gala night at Holloway Street United Church when the annual Christmas entertainment was held by the Sunday School scholars of the church. At an early hour the auditorium was filled to capacity and a splendid program was given by representatives of the various classes. Mr. A. C. Campbell is superintendent of the Sunday School, and the pastor, Rev. R. E. Newman was also present and congratulated the children on the fine entertainment of the evening.

At the conclusion of the various numbers which were keenly enjoyed by the entire audience Santa Claus arrived and excitement, particularly among the younger folk, was high. He brought a gift for all the scholars and his appearance was greeted with wide-eyed appreciation by the tiny tots.

The interesting program follows:

Mrs. A. Lennox's class (girls) — song—"Mince Pie for Christmas."

Recitation—Doreen Matthews.

Mrs. A. C. Campbell's class — dramatized chorus — "Away in a Manger."

Mr. W. Warren's class (boys) — play—"Santa's Christmas dinner."

Miss M. Oram's class—monologue —Betty Jose.

Recitation—Mary Southworth.

Mrs. C. McBride's class—recitation—Donny Kilbank.

Miss M. Hitchon's class—dramatized song.

Mrs. C. McBride's class—recitation and song — Robert Howard (The Wedding of the Painted Dolls

Mr. K Ray's class—play (boys)— "The Cowboy's Christmas."

Mrs. W. Warren's class—drill — (girls.)

Mrs. F. Dracup's class—play — (girls)—"The Girls for the Hall."

Mrs. A. Lennox's class—chorus — (class)—"Good Night Children."

Santa.

God Save the King.

EMMANUEL CHURCH S. S.

Before a capacity hall the annual Christmas entertainment of the Emmanuel Church Sunday School was held in the church Sunday evening. In the unavoidable absence of Bishop Marshall, who is ill, Rev. Wm. D. Harrison capably conducted the entertainment as chairman, commending favourably upon the numerous items, which were included on the lengthy program.

Especially of note was the carol, "It Came Upon a Midnight Clear," by the boys' Sunday School class choir. Following the rendering of this carol Rev. Harrison personally requested this group of boys to repeat the carol at Saturday night's Christmas Eve service. Christmas readings, carols, playlets, pantomimes and songs were all included on the entertainment.

At the conclusion of the program Santa Claus, in all his splendor, arrived to gladden the hearts of the smaller children, as well as to thrill the large number of adults. Mrs. George Nayler, superintendent of the Emmanuel Church Sunday School, pro tem, was capably assisted by the teachers, to whom all credit for a splendid entertainment was given. Candles, oranges and special prizes were distributed by Santa Claus to the children.

The program was as follows:

Recitation—"Welcome," by Douglas Thompson.

Recitation—"A Present from Santa Claus," by Russell Vandervoort.

Mrs. Cooper's Class—Exercises, song, "Mary's Lullaby," by Douglas Thompson; dialogue "Glad Christmas," by class; song "Baby Blest," by class.

Carol—"Carol Sweetly Carol," by school.

Miss Loury's Class—Pantomime and song.

Recitation—"Little Bateese," by Jack Gibson.

Playlet—"The Last Christmas," by Miss Worrel's class.

"We Three Kings of Orient Are"—by C. G. I. T. girls under Miss Isabel Grant.

Recitation—"The Birds' Christmas," by Rose MaCaw.

Mr. Ford's Class—"The Christmas Babe."

Carol—"It Came Upon the Midnight Clear."

"Watchman Tell Us of the Night," —song pantomime.

Recitation—"A Christmas Tragedy," by Delbert Cole.

Recitation—"Believe It or Not," by Phillis Whitmarsh.

Carol—"Holy Night," by Friday Afternoon Bible Class.

Santa Claus — Distribution of prizes.

JURY SAYS CAR HIT DARK TRUCK NEAR THE CITY

Kenneth Flindall, Operator, Charged with Criminal Negligence

RELEASED ON BAIL

That Mrs. Mary McDonald came to her death as the result of injuries received when the automobile she was riding in and driven by her husband (John McDonald) by substance of the verdict of the Coroner's jury at that ajourned inquest looking into the death of the late Mrs. Mary McDonald, when it concluded at the police court rooms before Chief Coroner Dr. J. J. Robertson.

With all evidence having been submitted, except that of Mr. McDonald who was driving the motor car at the time of the fatal accident on Dec. 9th, last, the adjourned inquest last night saw only Mr. McDonald as the only witness called by Crown Attorney B. C. Donnan K. C., who conducted the investigation.

When Mr. McDonald was called the protection of the court was requested by Mr. B. O'Brien, Toronto barrister, who represented the witness. After telling his business in Belleville, Mr. McDonald stated he had the lights of his motor car on when he met an east bound car some two miles west of Belleville and just prior to the accident, in which his wife sustained fatal injuries. "I had just passed another car, going in the opposite direction, when I saw a truck parked along the north lane of the highway. I swung sharply to the left, but the right side of my car struck the rear of the truck. There were no lights on the truck or flares displayed," stated the witness as he told of getting assistance of an officer to release his wife from the wreckage.

In Good Condition

"Was your car in good mechanical condition?" asked Mr. Donnan.

"I had the lights checked that day by a policeman and the brakes were good," replied the witness, whose face was still swathed in bandages as the result of injuries he himself received during the ill-fated accident.

That Mary McDonald came to her death in the Belleville General Hospital on Dec. 9th as the result of an accident, when a motor car driven by John McDonald struck an unlighted truck and trailer, owned by Nesbitt Haggerty, Wooler, and driven by Kenneth Flindall, Wooler, opposite May's service station on Highway No. 2., the said Mary McDonald being a passenger in the motor car, was the verdict submitted by the coroner's jury.

Following the accident Provincial Constable W. E. Smith and Motorcycle Patrolman H. Caldwell preferred a charge of criminal negligence against Kenneth Flindall, who was later released on $2,000.00 bail.

The coroner's jury consisted of Messrs. W. A. Woodley, L. Yeomans, Chas. Cochrane, H. Abbott, Wm. Todd, Fred Gauthier, Chas. Walters, T. Jeffery and D. McKinney.

Yuletide Briefs

Winnipeg, Dec. 20 (CP)—Police officials here have announced dance hall operators, organizations and hotels who make written application to Chief George Smith will be given permission to keep their premises open between 12.05 and 3 a.m., Dec. 26, Boxing Day, and Jan. 2.

Pittsburgh, Dec. 20 (AP)— A black-robed Santa Claus gave the six Hand children their father and mother for Christmas. After 24 years of married life, Mr. and Mrs. Hope Hand were divorced a month ago. But yesteray, at their request, Judge M. A. Musmanno remarried the couple so they might spend the Yule holiday with their children.

Hamilton, Ont., Dec. 20 (CP)—Police here believe thieves in the city lack the true Christmas spirit. For the last few days they have been receiving complaints of thefts of colored lights from outdoor Christmas trees.

Nanaimo, B.C., Dec. 20 (CP)—Some 400 children of this Vancouver Island city's unemployed will have a Merry Christmas as a result of generosity of the Nanaimo District Workers' Union and Service Club (Gyro). Each child will be given a theatre ticket Friday and at a mammoth party will receive candies, nuts and treats.

Winnipeg, Dec. 20 (CP)— Even at Christmas time Winnipeg police officers must attend strictly to business. Chief George Smith doesn't like his men accepting gifts from the public, although cigars are all right if sent to headquarters for distribution.

Victoria, Dec. 20 (CP)—The British Columbia Liquor Control Board made ready for the Christmas-New Year season by hiring 60 extra men for the Vancouver liquor stores and 20 helpers for the Victoria shops.

BOYS' NIGHT AT Y'S MEN'S CLUB

Each Member of Club Will Sponsor Boy During Year

One of the true exemplifications of the spirit of Christmas was in evidence at the Y. M. C. A. last evening when the Y's Men's Club held their annual "Boys' Night", at which gathering each member brought a teen-aged boy, to whom the member pledged himself and whose interest the member will have throughout the coming year.

In co-ordination with the seasonal expression, the speaker of the evening, Rev. Dr. Bert Howard, principal of Albert College, related to the boys and members relative anecdotes pertaining to the meaning and leading up to the present-day Christmas. Primarily speaking of the "origin of Christmas", Dr. Howard told of how many centuries ago the pagans and other religious bodies celebrated at different winter intervals, until eventually the 25th of December was accepted as the universal day of such celebrations

Speaking to the boys Dr. Howard told of the origin of hanging up one's stocking at Christmas time, a practice that was introduced by a Russian Bishop (St. Nickolas) "At first this Russian bishop asked the children to bring their stockings and hang them in front of his door. Then he would place something in each stocking. but this practice became too large for one man, so he asked others to help him," related Dr. Howard as he concluded by assuring his listeners that the true spirit of Christmas could only be realized by "The unselfish spirit and the generosity of giving." Dr. Howard was personally thanked for his message to the boys, and members, by President Harold Vaughan.

The Christmas entertainment was in charge of Chairman Bob Pringle, and several newly inducted members. Christmas carols were enjoyed, while ten-year-old Bobby Young, with delightful saxaphone solos and Alec Gordon, piano, added to the entertainment, Y'sman Homer Thomas capably fulfilled the duties of Santa Claus, every boy present being given candies, oranges and favours.

In his Christmas message, President Vaughan thanked the Club members for their support and urged them to retain their interest in their "adopted boy." Each member pledged himself to look after the interest of the boy to whom he had pledged himself last night, for the ensuing year. Boys' work, play and education is stressed in the movement.

For Wednesday, December 21

By GENEVIEVE KEMBLE

SURPRISING culminations to frustrating and perplexing conditions are promised by the prevailing planetary testimonies. There may be a harrowing situation, a bereavement or a grave anxiety coming to a head, but with fortitude, patience, application and acumen, there are excellent prospects for the realization of long-awaited benefits or material accumulations. Some change or instability is indicated, although good friends are at hand with wise counsel and support. But be alert to subtleties and schemes.

Those whose birthday it is may be prepared to enjoy the realization of long-hoped-for climaxes to events that have been held up by stubborn obstacles and impediments. However, this advantage and progress may be incident to a bereavement or other sorrowful circumstance. This may bring financial security or the friendly co-operation of friendly interests, but in all matters of importance be wary as to deception, intrigue or underhanded transactions.

A child born on this day may have rather peculiar or mysterious trends of thought, with originality and independence, although not wanting in humane and social ideals and impulses.

Richard Greene, Patsy Kelly and Slim Summerville are featured in "Submarine Patrol," at the Belle.

GERMANY TAKES STEPS TO RESTORE FRIENDSHIP PACT

MUST REPLY TO NOTES

Washington, Dec. 20 (AP)—Germany took the first step today to clarify some problems disturbing German-American relations.

Dr. Hans Thomsen, Charge d'Affaires of the German Embassy since Ambassador Hans Dieckhoff was called to Berlin Nov. 22, made an appointment with Sumner Wells, Acting Secretary of State, to transact undisclosed business.

Speculation grew in diplomatic circles to the effect that no resumption of normal relations between the two countries could be expected unless Germany makes satisfactory reply soon to two United States notes seeking assurances that Germany would assume responsibility for Austrian debts and would not discriminate against American Jews in the Reich.

German-American relations were subjected to further tension as the State Department completed its first reciprocal trade agreement in the Near East, where the Reich has been making overtures.

The treaty, with Turkey, is expected to be signed in January, and American concessions in it will be extended to all countries except Germany. Germany is not included in its most-favored nation clause because, officials say, she discriminates against American trade.

Conversations looking toward another trade pact were begun when Stanley Bruce, Australian High Commissioner to Great Britain, conferred with a number of officials here. Secretary Hull recently concluded an agreement with Great Britain and renewed one with Canada, and hopes to sign treaties with other British Dominions soon.

Meanwhile, Henry Morgenthau, Secretary of the United States Treasury, announced renewal of a financial agreement with China providing loans to China of an undisclosed amount of dollar exchange which will be utilized with security provided by Chinese gold on deposit here.

The department said Japan had presented no protest or inquiry about a recent extension of $25,000,000 credit to China by the export-import bank, and indicated none was expected. Hachiro Arita, Japanese Foreign Minister, said the bank credit "would lead to prolongation of the (Japanese-Chinese) conflict."

DEVELOP TOXOID FOR GANGRENE

Toronto, Dec. 20 (CP)—Perfringens toxoid, an antigen believed suitable for the active immunization of human beings against gas gangrene has been developed in the Connaught Laboratories and the School of Hygiene, University of Toronto. Guinea pigs and two human volunteers have been subjected to tests.

Dr. Helen Plummer, research assistant, told the laboratory section of the Canadian Public Health Association, which opened a two-day meeting here yesterday, that guinea pigs and white mice responded favorably to various tests as to immunity from gas gangrene.

She said the two humans had also received injections of the formol-toxoid without harmful results but that it was too early to report on the antitoxic immunity produced in these subjects. The animals were vaccinated against the gangrene with the toxoid.

Pneumonia Serum Effective.

Dr. W. B. McLure and Dr. A. E. Allin, Division of Laboratories, Ontario Department of Health, told the session of the effectiveness of the use of serum in battling pneumonia. Their paper noted that "the earlier serum therapy was commenced, the more striking were the results."

The doctors said that in an outbreak of type one pneumonia in Fort William, the case fatality was 13 per cent where serum was used, against 30 per cent where it was not. In eleven cases of type two pneumonia treated with serum, one death was recorded.

"In the serum treatment a crisis occurred within twelve hours of administration of the serum, followed by marked improvement of the patient's condition," the paper said.

R. H. Thexton of the Federal Department of Agriculture told the gathering that the quality of imported gelatin had shown marked improvement since the development of Canadian bacteriological standards in 1936. He said more than 2,000,000 pounds are imported annually.

STRIKING WORDS

Prime Minister Chamberlain made a memorable statement in the British Commons on Monday, when he said that he was still waiting for a sign from the leaders in Germany that they share the British desire for peace and that it would be a tragic blunder if these Germans should mistake British love of peace and willingness to compromise for general weakness. He also declared that there was a general feeling growing that there would be neither peace nor progress in Europe in the things man prized best unless the Germans became partners in the efforts to improve the general lot.

Again he referred to Munich and pointed out that he would go again through the anxieties of the past months and take the same stand even if the policy failed to bring lasting peace because the alternative at the time of the Munich accord was war.

This is straightforward language to use and the language seemed afire with the spirit which has been characteristic of the man since he began to put into operation his appeasement policy.

As Britishers see it Germany as well as the rest of the world would gain by understanding. Without understanding there will continue anxiety with all its train of possibilities.

Chamberlain is playing a great game. If he should not win he would not consider his efforts lost. If he wins he will have fought probably the greatest bloodless war of all time. His attitude is characterized by a vibrant humanitarianism.

This speech was outspoken and direct. It reveals to Hitler that Chamberlain is waiting for a demonstration from Germany of its acquiescence in the efforts towards a peaceful adjustment of problems. Mr. Chamberlain has had no doubt disappointments, but he is undaunted because his stakes are the highest in the world—to win peace and guarantees of security.

Steadily he goes on his way of appeasement, while in the tumultuous sea of trends and movements others seem to be going in every other direction. He at least heads his vessel to one port—calm and peace. But his vessel is guarded because he who is forewarned is forearmed.

Whatever the future will say hundreds of years from now when unbiassed historians review and analyze the tangled skein of events of these post-war years, Chamberlain will no doubt have a place of honour as a man who held before the world what he felt assured it the greatest and only happiness — a peaceful adjustment of difficulties. His policy may be realist as he calls it but it is also marked by the highest idealism, knightly generosity far from selfish nationalism. The future holds the key to the question whether his ideal of the world will materialize in fact.

There are various types of diplomacy today and the Chamberlain type offers the greatest goal whether events will justify it or not. His type is solidifying democratic sentiment throughout the world, for the democratic nations can understand the sincerity of British policy, which exposes other types to the searchlight of world thought. It may be that ambitions and other motives are too powerful in the case of other nations but it will be a sad day for the world if that should turn out to be the case. Policies of extreme nationalism seem destined if persevered in to lead to entanglements.

Some ambassadors in Europe are not too optimistic, some are even pessimistic, seeing little sign of anything for the better. Even Mr. Chamberlain's reference to a "sign" from Germany is a declaration that so far he has not seen that much-to-be desired sign. The irony of it all is that the dictators are those who "have the say". That Germany will never be satisfied is a view very strongly held by some. Where Italy will be found no one seems to know definitely. Should conflict come it will be because a dictator wills it.

There seems little evidence on the part of the Germans to follow up the Anglo-German document signed by Chamberlain and Hitler at Munich with closer relations and with definite effort to work out appeasement. Then there are what many see as evidences of Germany's getting to the end of her tether. Hitler's own speech recently referred to the scarcity of food and the determination of Germany to make her defences strong.

Chamberlain has done this—he has declared to all the world, whose ears are not muffled—the tireless efforts of the British people to preserve peace. The British have the world moral sense on their side in the game of international politics.

A CLOWN PASSES

A clown has "gone home", Armando Novello, ("Toto"), at the age of fifty, following an operation. He did not live out life to the standard of some portrayers of the woes of entertainers, for he was not poor and he was not old. Toto owned a comfortable home and possessed an inn. Critics give him a place with the famous Grimaldi.

Toto was not a portrayer of the unhappy mind. He wore the motley and played grotesquery for the entertainment of his audiences.

New York Times speaks of him as seeming to have "under his grotesquery a vein of tragic tenderness. Hamlet passing into silence is not so universally human as Toto entering in tumult with his toy automobile, his dog and his valise. The clown is always hoping, always experimenting, always being frustrated. He takes the world into his confidence. He puts his whole soul into his absurd and foredoomed enterprises. When his automobile blows up, when his nose catches fire, when he falls off the tight rope, his spirits are temporarily dampened. He expresses his occasional vindictiveness with an inflated bladder and again loves all humanity, believes fate his friend, and faces the future with superb assurance.

"In these things he is a projection of the human race at its funniest and saddest and bravest—for, as the clown spends his life proving, these qualities are entangled and cannot be unraveled. It was a clown who stayed with Lear in the rain when the courtiers fled, in a night that "pitied neither wise man nor fool". Kings once had their jesters, presumably to keep them sane under the ticklings of flattery. When a great clown dies we can say that there is less wisdom in the world. Some may wish that our modern kings might have wise fools at their feet to mitigate the royal folly and blow a gentler absurdity across the face of the royal madness."

CHRISTMAS JOY

Across the clamour of the years
Once more the sweet bells ring,
And peace is born on this blest morn,
The Birthday of our King.
The beauty of that Holy Night
Athrill with angel song,
Still, as of old, our hearts may hold,
And all our joys prolong.

A Boy was born in Bethlehem
That boys and girls might know,
Amid the maze of devious ways,
The one safe Way to go.
He smiles into their eager eyes
And takes them by the hand;
And questing youth that loves the Truth
Shall find the Happy Land.

A star shone clear in Syrian skies,
And wise men through the night
Followed from far that radiant star,
To find their hearts' Delight.
And still the Star of heavenly hope
Illumes our shadowed way.
O, give us grace to see Thy face,
Light of the World, to-day!

Soon, soon may grim war eagles furl
Each one his ebon wing!
That, far and near, all hearts may hear
The Christmas joy-bells ring.
To lives and lands that own not yet
Thy gracious, sovereign sway,
Come in and dwell, Emmanuel!
Thy ransomed people pray.

YASHA KATZENBERG, perhaps the only individual to receive dishonorable mention from the League of Nations, is in jail. Ten years imprisonment and a fine of $10,000.00 was his sentence, charged with dealing in habit-forming drugs. In the League of Nations Katzenberg was charged with shipping narcotics supplied by Japan, morphine to be exact, which he shipped from China to the United States. During prohibition Katzenberg was a big bootlegger, conducting an illicit business of ten million dollars a year. Rumania expelled him, and Greece arrested him, and expedited his extradition to the United States. In Manhattan he broke down and begged for mercy. John McAdams, a Customs official at the Port of New York, who conspired to pass the huge shipments of narcotics through the customs for Zatzenberg, was sentenced to seven years for bribe taking.

COMING NEAR THE TIME TO START A PERSONAL DIARY. Many diaries are started on the first of every year, but like New Year resolutions seldom get far. HEARST NEWSPAPER ORGANS IN THE UNITED STATES led the chorus of jeers at the Munich Pact, and pilloried Premier Chamberlain for not pulling President Wilson's chestnuts out of the Czechoslovak fire, regardless. Hence when the Man on the Spot, Joe Kennedy, United States Ambassador to the Court of St. James, praised Premier Chamberlain in a speech at the annual Trafalgar Day dinner of Britain's Navy League, that gentleman came in for considerable abuse, particularly from the Hearst press for taking the wind out of their sails. William Randolph Hearst has apparently never forgotten, nor forgiven his experience in England where his money did not form an open sesame to exclusive clubs, etc.

That Body of Yours

Mistaken Kindness of Parents may Hurt the Child's Personality

A mistake very easily made by parents is to trace some change in the behavior of their youngster to an illness or operation. Before the illness or operation the youngster was good natured, liked school, and was always willing to go messages. But since that time he doesn't like school, doesn't like to go messages or do chores. In most cases the illness or operation has nothing to do with the change in behaviour.

Dr. C. H. Gundry, Ontario Hospital, Brockville, Ontario, in an address before the Cornwall Medical Society says:

"The effects of physical illnesses are very important in the formation of personality trends or tendencies. Many mothers tell us that. One will say that Johnnie was quite a model child until he had diphtheria or until he injured his head, but since then she could do nothing with him. While there is always the chance that a brain injury may be the cause, a study of a group of these cases will show clearly that it is more often the mother's changed attitude than organic damage that is responsible for the change in the child's behavior."

All physicians are familiar with these cases. The youngster has an illness, or breaks an arm, or has his tonsils removed, and for some weeks he is treated as a little hero. He does more or less as he pleases, is allowed to remain away from school, takes liberties even to the point of becoming impudent.

"After his illness his mother may be looking for after effects of the illness and tells her friends in his hearing that she thinks he has changed. She may be afraid of checking him at all for fear of bringing on a relapse. If a child has been finding it difficult to keep up with his companions at school or play he is very likely to make use of the easy way out offered by the supposition or suggestion that his illness has had bad after effects.

I believe that as parents we should all ponder these plain straightforward words of Dr. Gundry for, after all, it is the youngster's personality and development that is injured by our mistaken kindness after an illness or injury.

PIN MONEY

The fatherly president of a big publishing house called one of his young men on the carpet recently. "You're dressing pretty expensively," he said, "and last night I saw you having supper at the Plaza. Don't you think that's flying too high for $27.50 a week?"

"Oh, not at all," the young man said. "You see, I really make between $50 and $60 a week by raffling off my check to the people in the office."—The Reader's Digest.

INDEPENDENCE

We pause and reflect wistfully on two items in the daily news grist.

An old Italian laborer in a Pennsylvania town regularly sweeps the street on which he lives, spending several hours a day, as payment to his adopted country for the relief check it sends him every week. "It makes my bread taste sweet; I feel like a man because I work for it," he said.

Behind the Veil in Italy

To the outside world Mussolini is Italy. For years the Italian dictator has been featured in the foreign and the native press as an Italian god. His will is law and his own country. He has millions of noisy followers. The youth of both sexes idolize him. But Italy at large is far from being Mussolini.

Away from the plazas, away from the noisy centres of big cities, Italians are grumbling. Stern suppression is inducing a mixture of wild confusion and mental awakening. Italian Industrialists and big business, who subsidized the Fascist movement and helped to usher in the Mussolini dictatorship, are tired of the whole business.

x x x

Eight million "bayonets" are not allowed to think aloud, but hundreds of them whom I have interviewed fear for their country. Even Fascists in the ranks are beginning to doubt if Italy can come through a major war with "her boots on!"

Since the Austrian invasion by Germany, Italians have become uneasy. The rape of Czechoslovakia has forced thinking Italians to think hard.

The Fascist foreign policy is undergoing extensive renovating. Fascists in the know are now openly discussing new alignments to thwart Germany's anticipated south and south-eastern march.

There has always been a school of political philosophy in Italy which advocates that the government should chuck up the German alliance and come to an understanding with Soviet Russia and Britain. This school maintains that Italy has nothing to fear from a so-called Communist Russia and that a definite understanding with Britain would be a blessing to the Italian people.

The general Italian frame of mind today is: "Where do we go from here?"

The masses all over the country are fed up with the "Glory of Rome," past, present and future. In Lombardi I heard people singing a ditty, which, when put into English, would read: "Give us today our daily bread, and please do not forget tomorrow. We prefer our olives and macaroni to Abyssinian turnips and Spanish graves and crutches."

Conscription is raising havoc with Italian manhood. If you journey through Italy today you will see in outlying towns every third small store with its shutters down. Its owner has gone to join the ranks of the eight million bayonets.

What has become of his dependents?

The value of the lira has gone down and is still going down.

Three weeks ago I made a short visit to London, where I could buy lemons and macaroni cheaper than in most parts of Italy. Italy is exchanging her lemons, olive oil and macaroni for British and American scrap iron.

"Il Duce is a prevaricator when he tells multitudes Italy has had a bumper wheat harvest; we are on short rations," Italian master bakers will tell you whenever they can trust you.

The oft-promised early return to the ancient glories of the Roman empire has now become the butt of a hundred coffee-house jokes.

Away from the centres of big cities Fascist guards do not dare to walk singly. Night sniping at uniformed guards is a common occurrence in Naples and other large centres.

x x x

Yet Mussolini is still a god to millions of Italians. But, like the ancients, who set up new gods when they tired of the old ones, many Italians are looking for a new god.

Mussolini is aware of it. He keeps Balboa at Libya. Whether or not based on fact, it is common talk in every part of Italy that Balboa has repeatedly refused to "come home" from Africa. Every Fascist of the rank freely admits that Italy is not large enough for Il Duce and Balboa.

The regular army is for the crown prince. The Italian aristocracy, the industrialists and the church are for the crown prince. The ex-blacksmith has gone too far for them.

Will they be able to give him the boot?

Not yet. The unthinking youths, who have been trained almost from the cradle with wooden rifles, are for Il Duce.

The next few months will certainly bring about a final crisis.

Watch the Hungarian front. It is there that Mussolini's enemies—domestic enemies—will trip him off.

Mussolini is now forging a new axle on which he hopes to whirl four new wheels—Hungary, Jugoslavia, Rumania and Poland. He is intriguing to chop off the tail of Czechoslovakia, hand over the booty to Poland and Rumania, form a common frontier between these two nations, and stop Hitler from marching south and east.

So far Rumania has refused to "bite," but Hitler has got wind of the plan. So a full-fledged fight is now going on behind the scenes over the corpse of the raped republic.

Mussolini is genuinely afraid of Hitler. Despite the ever-present terror of concentration camps and exiles in dreary islands, Italians are openly discussing these subjects. Even Fascists, whenever they can trust you, will confide to you that Il Duce is in a terrible fix.

One of the South American ambassadors in Rome told me the other day he expected the crisis would mature enough to come to public view in less than three months. This diplomat's view is that every time England yields to Hitler she is driving a dozen nails into Mussolini's coffin. England and France, in their ostensible surrender to Hitler, are actually encouraging Germany to go south and southeast to menace Mussolini and his central European satellites.

Chamberlain and Daladier can afford to watch the scene from the sidelines. The bout between the ex-paperhanger and the ex-blacksmith is due very soon. Attaches of the Soviet embassy at Rome are offering bets, six to one, that the paperhanger will lay the blacksmith low.

Returning to the eight million bayonets Mussolini so often boasts of: That they will crack under a good-sized strain is the opinion of every foreign expert with whom I discussed the subject.

Bluff and bluster may be conducive in raising cheers, but men cannot fight on these ingredients. There are too many empty bellies in Italy to-day, notwithstanding the contrary testimony of tourists who pretend to know all about the country after having observed conditions from a swiftly rushing railroad train.

x x x

Italy is not today a land where people are gay and happy. A mature generation pondering gravely for the future; a younger generation behaving like immature children playing with a new toy; a church trembling for the morals of this and especially the next generation; genuine intellectuals weeping for the decadence already set in Italiance arts and literature; mothers and sisters of soldiers wanting to, but not daring to weep in public for their loved ones lost in the Abyssinian and Spanish ventures for the glory of Il Duce—this is Mussolini's Italy today.—By Felice Ratto in Hamilton Spectator.

COURTESY COPS

England has recently put on the roads a squad of 800 mobile police charged with the special duty of keeping erring road users out of police courts, and of seeing how many speeders, corner-cutters, road-hoggers and jay-walkers they can avoid handing a summons. Every one of the 800 is trained to admonish a reckless driver with a temperate analysis of the possible consequence of his carelessness.

The cards which they hand out read as follows:

You have just had your attention drawn to conduct which might have proved dangerous either to yourself or to other people on the road.

Casualties arising from similar incidents are taking place in large numbers on the roads every day.

The police are doing all they can to reduce these accidents, but safety primarily depends on each individual road-user.

Pleas help us to help you.—Christian Science Monitor.

UNDERSEA GARDEN

The strangest flower garden known is about 500 feet below the floor of the Atlantic Ocean. You must go down 750 feet from the land surface and then travel miles to reach it. Its flowers bloom all year around and there are no weeds. And it's in Canada.

About 20 years ago, when electricity was first introduced to the colliers at Glace Bay, N.S., the engineers at the huge underground generating system, which supplies an entire mine, decided they would like a garden. To see it you go down to the 750-foot level and take an electric train which runs three miles out under the ocean. You get a mile from the end.

There is a passage 75 feet long and 12 feet wide leading to the generator house. Through it runs a three-foot path of crushed dolomite, a silvery-grey colour. On either side are all flower beds. The earth, brought down from the surface over a period of years, is 12 inches deep. It is moist and cool with temperature always at 60. The beds are constantly flooded with rays from powerful arc lights.— Financial Times, Montreal.

Statistics show that the world surplus of wheat is growing while absorptive markets are being closed. Canada must face the fact that the days of an open world market for wheat are past and end bonusing of western wheat, or create a bottomless pit for the taxpayers' money.—Brantford Expositor.

The Chinese war will cost Japan $1,350,000,000 next year, it is estimated. And what an outburst there would be if the government of Japan proposed to spend that much in 12 months on improvement of living conditions among the Japanese people!—Ottawa Journal.

Because a Mexican labour leader has been saying things derogatory to the Nazis, Germany is demanding his arrest and criminal prosecution. The Nazis don't mind criticizing other people, but they dislike criticism directed at themselves. Brockville Recorder and Times.

Germany, Italy, Japan and Insurgent Spain. He said that if he had to live the past eighteen months over again he would not change his policy by "one jot". It is just 18 months since Mr. Chamberlain took office. He said the Labor demand for resistance of the German drive to the east "would have involved us in wars simultaneously with Japan, with Germany, with Italy and with (Insurgent) General Franco."

Mr. Chamberlain's defence of his foreign policy moved David Lloyd George, war-time prime minister, to make the bitter declaration that "it is a dangerous state of obsession which he has got into".

"No Match For Dictators".

Mr. Lloyd George said Chamberlain was "no match for these astute, crafty and unscrupulous dictators," adding that Chancellor Hitler and Premier Mussolini had treated the British and French premiers "with great contempt".

The veteran Welshman drew a bitter word picture of Mr. Chamberlain and Premier Daladier of France meeting in Paris and "congratulating themselves on the historic triumph."

Lloyd George described Mr. Chamberlain as "a very destinate man and a very stubborn man." He added:

"He (Chamberlain) thinks it is enough to say 'I'm out for peace'. He probably has read Ivanhoe. The prime minister has got the idea of Wamba (the jester)—that he could get through anywhere by simply shouting 'Pax Vobiscum' (peace be with you.)"

Referring to charges that Italy has betrayed its Spanish non-intervention pledges, Mr. Chamberlain said that "to the best of my belief these accusations are not well-founded."

Amid protests from various members, the prime minister added that Italian "volunteers" dispatched to Spain since October numbered less than 200.

Aiming At Armistice.

Mr. Chamberlain indicated, however, that he and Lord Halifax intend to use all their influence to find a means of bringing the Spanish conflict to an end ,or to achieve an armistice.

Sir John Simon, Chancellor of the Exchequer, defended the Munich agreement and the transfer to Germany of certain Czecho-Slovak territory.

"What we were doing," he said, "was correcting one of the mistakes of the peace treaties."

Sir John said he had a brief personal interview with Dr. Hjalmar Schacht, President of the Reichsbank, in which "no government business and no financial business of any sort was discussed."

permission to export electric power to the United States and to proceed with water diversion projects in Northwestern Ontario.

The two governments have also been at odds over the St. Lawrence deep waterways proposal to which Mr. Hepburn is opposed.

A week ago last Saturday at Port Arthur the Federal Government took the offensive when Labor Minister Rogers and Transport Minister Howe attacked Mr. Hepburn, spoke of his "unnatural alliance" with Premier Maurice Duplessis and linked his name with a conspiracy to remove Mr. Mackenzie King from the leadership and establish a government at Ottawa under the control of the Quebec and Ontario administration.

Hepburn Not Well.

St. Thomas, Ont., Dec. 20 (CP)—Premier Mitchell Hepburn, at his home near here to spend Christmas and to recuperate from the latest attack of a long ailment, was reluctant as ever today to seek a compromise between the Ontario Liberal Association which he heads and the Federal Liberal Government of Prime Minister Mackenzie King.

"There will be no compromise whatsoever," Mr. Hepburn said last night when he learned a committee had been appointed by National Liberal Party leaders at Ottawa to attempt to smooth out differences in Liberal ranks.

He branded untrue the accusation of Hon. Norman Rogers, Federal Minister of Labor, that Mr. Hepburn had conspired with Premier Maurice Duplessis of Quebec to oust Mr. Mackenzie King from the party leadership. The minister's statement, made in a public address, was endorsed by yesterday's party conference at Ottawa.

"Furthermore, the Ontario Liberal Association of which I am head will enter no affiliation whatsoever with this so-called committee," Mr. Hepburn said. "I will have nothing to do with them."

At the same time conjecture grew over Mr. Hepburn's psysical strength to lead the Ontario Association in a protracted policy of isolation from the National Party. At Toronto, the Globe and Mail said Mr. Hepburn's retirement from public life "may come any time now unless the blood pressure and bronchial conditions from which he is suffering show an immediate and marked improvement, it was reliably reported last night."

Worried Over Condition.

Speaking to The Canadian Press last night Mr. Hepburn said he was a "pretty tough individual" and "there are a fe wkicks left in the old horse yet". But party men close to him were known to be worried over the condition of Mr. Hepburn's health, which nearly forced him to relinquish the leadership about three years ago.

Mr. Hepburn would not [illegible] directly to the newspaper report of his possible retirement, which said in part: "Physicians—and he has had a score of them in the past year—have for months been urging him to drop political harness and take things easy. Six months ago he pretty well made up his mind, it is reported, that the 1939 session of the legislature would be his last."

The Globe and Mail stressed that "intra-party feud and warfare do not enter at all into the situation in which the premier finds himself at the present time."

Mr. Hepburn carried along his split with the Federal party by declaring "the issue is not being decided behind closed doors at Ottawa and never can be." He said the electorate would have a chance in a few months to decide if they approve of "drifting without any constructive policy for another five years." The alternative, he said, was a "constructive policy that will rehabilitate this country and place it at least on a parity with other countries which have inculcated in the minds of their people, whether rightly or wrongly, a national spirit."

BOARD OF HEALTH, HOSPITAL BOARD TO MAKE REPORT

Council Willing Health Board Confer on Isolation Unit

DELEGATION HEARD

Shell Oil Company Given Permission to Transfer Tanks

After the Board of Health and the Hospital Board have agreed upon arrangements to place an isolation ward in the proposed new wing to the Belleville General Hospital, this proposal will be submitted by the Board of Health to the City Council and action will be immediately taken, the members decided at the regular meeting of the Council held last evening. A delegation consisting of Dr. G. S. Cronk, Medical Officer of Health, George Griffin, secretary of the Board of Health, Mackenzie Robertson Chairman of the Hospital Board, and Gordon Friesen, superintendent of the hospital were present, the members of the hospital board being there in an advisory capacity only.

Unit is Needed

Dr. Cronk told the council, that an isolation unit was badly needed in the city and that the accommodation at present is absolutely unsatisfactory and that if some arrangements could be made to have a unit or ward in the proposed new wing it would be better for all concerned. If the beds were not in use, the hospital could use them for certain types of disease", said the speaker. Dr. Cronk told of his visit to Toronto to interview members of the Health Department and was informed that the proposal to erect a unit separate from the hospital wing was not a satisfactory procedure. "It is not necessary to have it isolated "one member of the department said "and in years to come you would have a "white elephant on your hands' if the unit was built separate from the hospital."

Mr. Griffin gave a history of the present isolation hospital for the past five years showing the hospital was open for an average of 179 days in each year and that the average number of patients was twenty. The average duration of sickness was eighteen days per patient and the cost each day the hospital was open was $12.00 and the total cost to hospitalize each patient per case was $105.70. The total average cost of operation of the hospital was $2,217.00 and the amount received from patients per year was $181. "Under the new plan", said Mr. Griffin to hospitalize twenty patients per year at eighteen days each at $3.25 per day would amount to $1,170.00 a saving of $1147 per year."

Thanked For Work

Mayor Jamieson Bone thanked Mr. Robertson and Mr. Friesen for their attendance at the meeting and sincerely complimented them on the work of the hospital during the past year. "I have always been opposed to the isolation hospital, where now situated but I am in a quandary to know why the Hospital Board cannot take in these isolation cases. I am sure that the Board of Health and the Hospital Board can arrive at some equitable solution of the whole matter and I wish they would confer together and bring to this council some concrete proposal, that the council can give quick action on and not delay the board in their building of the proposed wing", said His Worship. Mackenzie Robertson told the members that the problem of looking after isolation cases was that of the Board of Health and the city but I can assure you gentlemen that every co-operation will be afforded and I believe it is a good suggestion that the Board of Health meet with the Hospital Board and that an isolation unit can be placed in the new wing," said Mr. Robertson.

Theodore Maraskas appeared before the council requesting that no by-law be passed restricting him from moving his mother's business from the place now located to another position on Front Street The speaker said negotiations were in progress and that if completed he would like to have issued a transfer. He was assured by the council that no by-law would be passed before an application was made by him to the council and then every consideration would be given his mother in the matter.

To Move Terminal

A special committee of Aldermen Glencoe Thompson, Laurie Lewis and the City Engineer appointed to confer with the Shell Oil Company with respect to moving their terminal from the present position to one closer to the government dock reported to the council and recommended that the application for transfer be granted. The Shell Oil Company will now have a marine terminal in this city and be in better position to handle their business for this district. The proposed changes will take place in the near future and in the spring the gasoline will be shipped to Belleville by boat instead of cars.

The special committee of Aldermen Wills, Baragar and Haig appointed as an insurance committee reported to the effect that considerable information had been gathered but that the committee was not ready to give a detailed report. The report recommended that the present committee be dissolved and that in 1939 a new committee be formed from the new council to continue the investigations and report with recommendations at the earliest opportunity. This report was accepted. The Chairman of the executive was instructed to pay civic employees before Christmas as is the usual custom.

Under the head of inquiries Alderman Kennedy asked "What portion of the city solicitor's salary has been paid by the Public Utilities Commission?" and Alderman Haig informed Alderman Kennedy, that a cheque for $400 had been received by the city from the Utilities for the portion of salary.

Parking Signs

Alderman Jennings, Chairman of Regional Planning, received from the City Engineer a report on parking signs, which is herewith given. It was recommended that certain action be taken as embodied in the report. The report—

December 19, 1938.

Alderman B. F. Jennings,
Chairman Regional Planning Committee,
City Council.
Belleville, Ontario,

Dear Sir:

Re: One Hour Parking Signs

As requested I have made a survey of the locations of the one hour parking signs which are now in place throughout the business section of the city and beg to report as follows:—

On Front Streets (signs on street lighting standards)—36.

On Bridge Street (signs on street lighting standards)—North side—5; South side—3.

The street lighting standards on Front Street are distanced from 100 feet to 200 feet apart on each side of the street and are spaced alternatively on both sides of the street so that the light standards are approximately 100 feet from each other. There are one hour parking signs suspended from these standards so that they hang over the city sidewalk on both Front Street and Bridge Street.

On Campbell Street, the three signs on the south side are attached to the street lighting standards in a similiar manner. On the north side there are no signs in place at the present time, but there are four hydro poles along this street on which additional signs can be placed.

On the south side of Victoria Avenue there are four signs attached to four hydro poles and there is one more pole to which an additional sign can be attached. On the north side of Victoria Avenue there is one sign attached to a hydro pole and if additional signs are to be placed on this side of the street, it will be necessary to provide standards for them.

The placing of four additional signs on Campbell Street and four additional signs on Victoria Avenue would cost approximately as follows:—

8 metal signs at 30c each..$	2.40
Painting and lettering 8 signs at $1.00 each	8.00
Supplying 8 brackets at 75c each	6.00
30 lineal feet of 2" diameter pipe for 3 standards at 35c per foot	10.50
Labor for setting standards and hanging signs.	8.00
Total ....$	34.90

I might say that there is a difference in opinion as to whether or not there are suffcient signs on Front Street. I would say that the number of signs on Front Street appears to be sufficient, but if additional signs are to be placed along this main thoroughfare. It will be necessary to provide pipe standards set in the sidewalk for them, and these additional signs and standards set in place would cost approximately $6.50 each.

Yours truly,
Charles A. Mott,
City Engineer.

ROTARY DISTRICT BOUNDARIES CHANGE

Belleville May be Linked With Northern Ontario New Mining Towns

Christmas cheer dominated the meeting of Belleville Rotary Club Monday in Hotel Quinte—first a huge turkey weighing over twenty pounds, courtesy gift of the Kinsmen Club, was drawn for and Mr. Gordon Friesan got the bird—the whole twenty pounds of it on a fifty cent ticket—great rejoicing down hospital way. Incidentally the lucky ticket was that supposedly unlucky number 13. A feature of the meeting centred in a discussion of a proposed re-arrangement of Rotary Districts. This discussion followed a report and explanation by Dr. Phil Huyck of Kingston, Past District Governor. After considerable discussion a vote was taken and a majority of members present declared for an all-Canadian district in place of the international district 171 as at present constituted, taking in part of northern New York State and this section of Ontario. The new Rotary district if finally approved stretches as far north as Bras d'Or and Englehart, taking in North Bay and Sudbury, and including Trenton, Campbellford and Belleville.

Arrangements were made for the distribution of Christmas baskets.

FIRE TO BE PROBED

Meaford, Ont., Dec 20—(CP) — President William McKay and directors of the Meaford and St. Vincent Agricultural Society at a meeting today decided to request a complete investigation into the $15,000 fire which gutted the skating and curling rinks on Sunday. The Ontario Fire Marshal will be notified immediately.

ESPIONAGE ROUNDUP

Geneva, Dec. 20—(AP)— An undetermined number of persons were arrested last night in a round-up which was officially described today as directed against espionage in Switzerland.

Police said a majority of the arrests occurred at Moillesulaz, a town on the French frontier, but declined to disclose any identities.

Play in a Child's Health?

In talking about healthy, happy, intelligent children, I often think how necessary it is to go back beyond the birth of the child to the parents—their health and their habits.

It may seem cold-blooded, but I might even say to the young people "When you marry, pick someone who will make a proper mother or a proper father for your children. It doesn't hurt to look at your future-in-laws, just to see what your prospective partner may look like in after years.

I know heredity isn't everything, but, after all, a child is a combination of the life transmitted to him by his father and his mother.

Most of the old-time country doctors who have treated three or four generations of one family will say, "Blood will tell". In fact, we can often foretell the results and the course of an illness because we know the family.

I will always remember an incident that happened when I was a medical student and which convinced me of the truth of this.

I was home for the holidays and had gone out with my father to see one of his old patients. (My father was a country doctor in the middle eastern part of Ontario for fifty years.)

The man we went to see had pneumonia. He seemed to be getting along pretty well, but Dad was pessimistic. Next day we went out again, and again I thought the man was more than holding his own. My father just shook his head and said, "He won't live the night".

I was young and enthusiastic, and I didn't agree with my father. I let him see that I didn't. Right away he suggested that I take the case; that he would leave the man in my hands. I thought it was a great chance to show the older generation of physicians how much they were teaching us in the colleges then, so I jumped at the chance.

Just to make sure that I was taking every precaution I called in another doctor from nearby and I stayed right with the sick man. He seemed to be doing fine, then his heart begin to give out and at four in the morning he died.

Of course, I was quite crestfallen and very unhappy about it all, but my father just patted my shoulder. When I asked how he knew the man would die in the night, he replied, "I know the stock. I knew what his heart could stand."

Ever since then I have had a great deal of respect for experience. Older practitioners who have practised for years in the same community with the same families get to know the types. So when children are born they aren't surprised if some of them are stolid, some are bright, some are stupid. You get to know pretty well the ones who will kick over the traces when they grow up.

The family physician gets to know the blood diseases in the family, and we know whether they are cured or not, so that often we give some protection to the second and third generation from the results of these.

Naturally a doctor is like a priest. He never thinks of telling what he may know about the individual. But sometimes we can be of service in advising whether a marriage should take place or not—that is, if we are asked.

Famous Authority on Problems of Love and Marriage.

Secret Engagement

Dear Miss Fairfax

For three years I've been working in the same office with a man who is eight years older than I am. I have reached the age of 21. I brought him over to the house a few times, but my parents are so prejudiced against him that I have been meeting him on the sly. And now they even go so far as to threaten me if I'm ever seen with him again. But we're engaged and hope to be married in the Spring. He has a good position and is able to take care of me. And we're so in love with each other.

Now I don't know how to tell my folks of the engagement, and that we hope to be married soon. I've always been a good girl a home, and have done whatever they wanted. And now I think I have a right to happiness. Don't you?

Unhappy

I wish you had told me more about this young man, and what makes your parents so prejudiced against him. You are 21, and both very much in love. He has a good job and can take care of you. All this makes him very eligible.

I suggest you take the matter up again with your folks and very gently tell them that you expect to marry this young man in the Spring. This will give them a chance to tell you why they object to him.

Whose is the First Dance?

Dear Miss Fairfax

My husband and I go to a good many dances, and always in the company of another married couple. My husband always dances the first number with the other woman. I think he should dance with me first, and also last. And we're leaving it up to you to decide for us.

Newlywed

A man always gives the first dance to the lady who accompanies him to the dance, whether she is his wife or not. And he also dances with her once or twice during the evening, and the last dance as well. He must see that she gets her supper or refreshments, and is supposed to keep an eye on her so that she may not become 'stuck' with a bore. He is as polite to her as he was before they were married.

Girls Who Always Want to Go "Steady" Irk Him

Dear Miss Fairfax:

Will you tell me why it is that girls can't go with a young man on a pleasant and agreeable friendship basis? I'm willing to take them out as often as I can afford, but no, they always want to go "steady", and try to "drag" me to the altar, when I really can't afford to marry.

I'm in my last year of college, and my mother and sisters are helping me get through, and it's a hardship for them at times. And I can't even think of bringing home a wife for them to support.

When I first take a girl out, I try to make it clear that it must be a case of friendship only. I don't want her to waste her time or keep her from going "steady" with another man, but then they call me all sorts of things. I'm about through with girls.

Student

Although you didn't describe these girls who took you seriously, when you had made it clear to them how you felt, it wouldn't be hard for me to give you word picture of them.

They are highly romantic, more in love with love than with any individual. Usually they live at home, are temperamental, and like to pretend their case is similar to that of the heroine in the last novel they've read.

Look about you for a finer type a girl than that which I've been describing. Cities, towns and villages—not to mention farms —are full of them. I know, because they write to me. These girls want friendships and have no desire to rush a man to the altar.

Dance Will Aid Hospital Work Of Auxiliary

The Christmas function, the dance of December 28th., is planned by the Women's Hospital Auxiliary to assist in raising funds for their work. It is the desire of this newly organized group to be of real service to the hospital in providing the greatest needs at hand. Citizens can show their interest in this benevolent work by attendance at the Yuletide entertainment.

The evening promises to be one of varied entertainment. There will be cards for those who desire to play, and dancing to an eight-piece orchestra. Mary Forster will give a specialty dance and several prize numbers will be included in the dance program. A feature of the evening will be the Lambeth Walk, couples already having received advance instruction in order to "lead off" in this popular new dance. Tickets can now be obtained at the Collegiate or by getting in touch with the General Convener, Mrs. A. H. Ketcheson, and members of the Committee. No invitations have been issued.

YOU MAY think I am extravagant using eggs for the main dish when they are expensive, but they are cheap food compared with meat, even at a high price. If they are 60 cents a dozen, for instance, they are five cents apiece, and four come to 20 cents. A pretty cheap main dish, I calls it.

Egg Souffle—Three cups milk, one tablespoon butter, one tablespoon flour, four eggs, one teaspoon salt and one-quarter teaspoon paprika are needed. Melt butter, add flour, and gradually add milk, stirring until smooth, and cook for five minutes. Cool. When cold add salt and paprika, and first the beaten yolks of the eggs, then the stiffly-beaten whites. Then pour into buttered baking dish and bake for about 20 minutes in a 350 F. oven, or until it is firm in the centre. Serve immediately.

Date Muffins—One-third cup butter, one-fourth cup sugar, creamed together. Sift two cups flour, two teaspoons baking powder and one-half teaspoon salt together. Add one beaten egg and three-quarters cup milk to butter and sugar mixture, then add flour mixture and one-half pond or one cup dates, seeded and cut in small pieces. Turn into muffin tins and bake in 350 F. oven for 25 minutes.

Fashion Flashes

(By ALICE ALDEN)

It is interesting to watch the steady growth of the woolen evening wrap. One of the smartest women in town wears a full-length fitted wrap of black tweed with Victorian shoulders. On either side of the bodice, from waist to neckline, is an applique of quilted gold kid.

Fine feathers make fine hats. A new model is a scalloped-edge Watteau beret arranged in tufted effect with plumes in back. Feathers and plumes are shaded pink to fuchsia.

Something to cherish is a frock that always looks nice. Such a model is an evening dress of black sheer crepe, shallow square in front, very deep square decolletage in back. The long slit pockets on the full skirt are embroidered with a floral design of crystal beads that form glistening flower spray trimming.

Our favorite little girl wears a charming fitted coat of green tweed with stitched velveteen collar and cuffs. With it goes a little hat of the tweed laced up the back with velveteen laces.

There's a demand for black satin. A lovely dinner dress of this fabric has fine net ruffles framing the low square front neckline, and fine net short sleeves finished with ruffles. Rows of net ruffles give a front panel effect to the skirt, and there are black net gloves.

Nice things have been done with Persian this year. A smart coat is a tightly molded reefer of black Persian lamb with fur buttons. Another model, with fitted waist, has dolman sleeves.

TYENDINAGA EAST W. I.

The December meeting of the Tyendinaga East Women's Institute was held at the home of Mrs. M. Husband with a good attendance.

The meeting was opened by singing the Ode followed by repeating the Lord's Prayer. The roll call was answered by exchanging Christmas gifts and three fees were paid. The current events were given by Mrs. R. McMath and Mrs. R. Tucker gave the treasurer's report.

Readings were given by Kathleen Waddingham, Beatrice Mowers, Miss Penney and Mrs. C. Akey. Tickets were sold on a wool cushion top and J. Mowers held the lucky number. The National Anthem brought the meeting to a close and lunch was served.

BRUSH AWAY BLUES OF FALLING TRESSES

CORRINE LUCHAIRE
French actress, gives her hair best of care.

By HELEN FOLLETT

NOW AND then hair falls by the wayside. It may behave nicely for months and months, then start to moult. No need of getting into a panic and visualize yourself bald headed. The old top-mop may be having a housecleaning. As long as the papillae are normal, healthy new fuzzers will sprout to take the place of those that have gone to kingdom come.

At the first sign of falling hair get a first class brush with stiff bristles set in groups and use it vigorously at least once a day. Every hair brought out by the currying is a dead one; the sooner it is out the better. The tug of the bristles acts favorably upon the tissues in which the hair roots rest, stimulating the tiny veins that are their feeding stations.

After the brushing spread fingers and thumbs over the scalp; lift it, roll it, pummel it. Work diligently along the nape line and at the temples where hair is always its thinnest. If the morrow is shampoo day, apply hot mineral oil before the mauling. The scalp likes that. Lubrications loosen the dead skin scales which the shampoo will wash away.

It is not enough to stand tall to have good posture. The abdominal muscles must not protrude, the chest must be full, shoulders normally posed, arms hanging easily. Good posture does not mean rigidity. Always the feminine shape must be graceful and at ease.

It is vitally important to have the head balanced, chin neither high or low. The low-posed chin means rounded shoulders; the high one gives a bossy, belligerent air that isn't pretty.

Perfect posture gives one a feeling of courage and spirit. It has a beneficial effect upon the inner organs, helping them to function normally. We do wish the beauty class would get posture wise. It is the making of a lovely silhouette.

Your Christmas and You

Your Festive Christmas Table

Christmas decorative items are so glamorously brilliant in color and sheen and so inexpensive that, with a minimum of expense, we can capture the maximum of charm in our table-setting.

I'd like to emphasize that "minimum of expense" because I think you'll agree that most hostesses are inclined to overload their tables with too many details, and the effect is a hodgepodge. Simplicity is of value in these holiday table decorations.

The loveliest Christmas table I can remember was the most inexpensive table decoration I ever saw. On a white table cloth the places were set with each place showing a gaily-colored plate. The highlight of the table-setting was a large, rather low, white glass bowl, generously filled with large brilliant red and green Christmas tree balls. On each side of this beautiful centrepiece was a pair of candlesticks, with a red candle in one stick and a green candle in the other. It couldn't have been simpler . . . and it couldn't have been more dramatic!

If you want to create your own centrepiece, you'll find colored cellophane or transparent materials an ever-ready help. They come in a variety of brilliant colors, can easily be cut to any size you wish, and have limitless decorative possibilities. You can gather them in your hand into an ample bunch, tie them securely in the centre and form them into balls of any size you wish.

You can form your centrepiece of piled-up sprigs of holly or other greens, and lighten this by interspersing it with these balls.

You can carry the color in your centrepiece to the individual places. For instance, at each place can be a small, well-made boutonniere of holly, or holly combined with mistletoe. Or, at alternating places, place a box wrapped in red and a box in green, each containing some little Christmas token.

If you want to have a more brilliant background for your table, for ten cents you can buy a white crepe paper tablecloth and napkins, appliqued with silver or gold or red stars. Then, to carry out the star motif, your centrepiece might be a Christmas tree topped with a shining star in the same color, or a Christmas fairy.

Tomorrow—Thank-you Notes for Gifts

For the "Boss"

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

My employer motors to the city almost every Saturday and any time I wish to go in he takes me. I would like to show my appreciation of his kindness, but as I have never met his wife or family, I do not know what I should do. Would it be correct to send flowers or some other gifts at Christmas, to him and his wife? If so, just how should I word the greeting card?

L.

Since you have never met your employer's wife and family, it would be in better taste for you not to make this gesture of sending a Christmas present. For you to make the first 'social step' would be out-of-place, and might easily be interpreted as being 'forced'. In such a circumstance as yours, it is always best for the employer to keep the relationship professional, rather than to take any step that might cause embarrassment.

I realize, of course, that you are grateful for your employer's kindness. Tell him so, thank him each time for his courtesy . . . and let it go at that.

Has 'Cure' For Inferiority Complex

By GARRY C. MYERS, Ph.D.

BELOW I quote from a letter typical of many I am receiving from boys and girls, young men and women on a subject that is of great interest.

"Dear Dr. Myers: I sometimes read your articles in our local paper about helping people with their troubles and wonder if you can help me. I am a young man and my trouble is that I have an inferiority complex and a lack of speech. I never seem able to converse freely with most people. Most of the time I am under a tension when talking to some one and it is difficult for me to converse steadily for any great length of time. I seldom go anywhere because I always get nervous in front of people, and it seems as though I am at a loss to able to say anything. So please write to me and tell me what I can do to overcome this and I will be greatly appreciative of it."

Needn't Talk Much

I know how you feel. I also know that your anxiety about carrying on a conversation is caused chiefly by your notion that you must talk much to be liked and prove agreeable socially. Let me tell you that I have received a tremendous amount of personal relief by discovering, after many years of needless suffering, that I don't have to talk much; that, indeed, I can be most attractive socially at many times by just listening earnestly (and I can learn something, too), and that all persons who converse well are greatly delighted to have an animated listener.

Ask Questions

I have also discovered that often in a group who are discussing matters of which I am partly or wholly ignorant, I can find comfort and relief by studying the conversation enough to ask a question which will encourage the person speaking to continue. It sort of winds him up when he runs down, and lets me rest.

When by this procedure I can attain composure, I have no disturbing emotions to hinder my expression when, perchance, an idea does come into my little head. I commend a similar scheme to you.

Of course, you won't expect to get relief all at once. If you accomplish some noticeable progress after several months, be very happy. I still have my own trouble, and I have been working at it for a number of years. But I am as sure as I know my hair is light that the method I described has reduced my personal suffering.

SEEN ALONG FIFTH AVENUE

MOST OF US, unless we are faring forth late in the afternoon bound for a gay occasion, want a handbag that is good looking, yet capacious and practical. An extremely smart bag is of crocodile, in various colors, shaped very much like a shoe box, with a double handle and a zipper fastener. A grand bag is of red boxcalf, with white saddle stitching and a handle and frame made of layer on layer of solid leather pressed firmly together. More dressy, yet practical, is a bag of brown calfskin that is gathered softly onto a tortoise shell frame with a flat handle of the leather.

VISIT OF SANTA TO STIRLING IS A MERRY AFFAIR

1,000 Happy School Children Are Given Gifts

COMMUNITY PROJECT

Stirling—Stirling streets were crowded with parked cars, proud parents and smiling happy children of all ages numbering nearly one thousand and gathered for the express purpose of voicing their personal welcome to Sana Claus as he made his annual visit under the auspices of the Stirling Community Christmas Tree Club.

The annual event carried on under the direction of the Stirling Community Christmas Tree Club with an aim to bring happiness to the children of the district is looked upon by local citizens as one of the finest movements ever promoted here. Under the leadership of Mr. A. E. Strickland, President of the organization, a group of faithful committee workers carried out their duties nobly in directing the long procession and assisting St. Nicholas in the distribution of over nine hundred Christmas packages to the children. School teachers of the Stirling schools and schools of the rural district also offered valuable assistance along with the Stirling Hydro Electric Commission, Stirling Citizens Band and the businessmen of the village. The Stirling Theatre provided a free matinee for the happy children with a special showing of films for children.

Lengthy Parade

Forming eagerly in the line of march at the Stirling High School the children were led by President A. E. Strickland, the Stirling Citizens' Band and Santa Claus perched high on a gaily decorated truck to the community tree situated near Memorial Park, here the most popular man in the eyes of all children greeted each one personally and presented them with a generous gift of candy, fruit and nuts.

After the presentation the long line of children ranging in ages from the cradle to junior high school students proceeded to the theatre which was filled to the doors. Here once again they cheered the smiling hero of the day as Santa appeared on the stage to address them briefly before the show started.

Co-operation Displayed

The officers directing each detail of the work are as follows: President, A. E. Strickland; Sec.-Treas., N. E. Eggleton; Executive Committee, Chairmen of each committee—Schools committee, H. L. Fair, J. L. Good, C. A. Wells; Parade Committee, H. L. Fair, J. L. Good, W. K. Etherington; Advertising Committee, T. W. Solmes, W. C. West, H. R. Tompkins; Purchasing Committee, C. Macklin, W. Wright, A. C. Waymark and H. Francis; Committee to interview Council and Community Welfare Club, J. E. O'Donnell, H. R. Tompkins.

St. Paul's Christmas Concert

St. Paul's United Church Sunday School held their annual Christmas entertainment in the Sunday School rooms of the church on Friday evening with many friends and parents of the pupils in attendance to witness a lengthy and well balanced program provided by the children. The guests were welcomed by Rev. W. J. Scott, minister and the following numbers presented on a program that revealed careful training and distinctive talent in both music and dramatics and also elocution. "Away in a manger", chorus by the Primary Department, directed by Mrs. Wescott; a reading by pupils of primary department, "Why do bells for Christmas ring"; Recitation, "Welcome", Betty Rouse; The Rhythm Band, directed by Miss Grace Pitman, A.T.C.M.; Recitations by Allan Munro, Roberta Good, "Christmas Wish"; Floyd Phillips, "A Yuletide Question" and Ronnie Williams; Unusual talent was displayed in the dramatization of a Christmas story by the members of Mrs. Pidgeon's Class; followed by recitations by Joan Green, "A stitch in time"; "Bedtime Bravery", Rossie Mason; "A Substitute" Elinor Wells; "Santa", Wilma Phillips. The next number was a play by Miss Ruth Murray's Class "The Kingly Gift." and recitation by Shirley Gough, "Christmas Shopping"; Freda Snarr, Lois Bedell; "Christmas Customs" was a skit presented by Misses Marjorie Hagerman and Helen Jeffrey. Address by Sunday School Superintendent, J. L. Good; Campfire Scene" by Reg Clarke's Class; Vocal duet by Helen Jeffrey and Marietta McKee; Amateur Minstrels by pupils by Don Williams and Mr. Munro's classes. "The Rhythm Band" by Miss Pitman; A short play "The Christmas pirit", Mrs. Scott's class; A pantomime "Near the cross", Miss Fenwick's class. The arrival of Santa Claus was the final number on the excellent program which climaxed with the singing of the National Anthem.

St. Paul's W.M.S. Annual Meeting

The annual re-organization meeting of St. Paul's Women's Missionary Society was held in the church parlors on Tuesday afternoon under the direction of Mrs. E. Munro. The meeting opened with a brief devotional period and during the business portion of the meeting reports were presented by the various secretarys. The election of officers for the coming year resulted in the following ladies being selected to direct activities for the year 1939. Honorary President, Mrs. E. Munro; President, Mrs. R. A. The closing devotional exercises were conducted by Mrs. E. G. Bailey.

QUINTE W. I.

The regular meeting of the Quinte Women's Institute was held at the home of Mrs. Geddes Bradshaw on Tuesday afternoon, Dec. 13th.

Mrs. A. Mitchell ,president, opened the meeting with the Ode, followed by the Lord's Prayer in unison.

Mrs. Harry Greatrix, convener for health and child welfare took charge of the program. Mrs. Greatrix gave her report of the convention which gave a good account of the activities of Institute workers.

Scripture reading by Mrs. Bell and Miss Alma Snider opened the Christmas season program.

Community singing, Silent Night, and Joy to the World, with Mrs. Fred Parrot, pianist. Mrs. George Conners, district convener for health and child welfare gave a very interesting talk on what a wonderful mchine the human body is, also spoke on proteins, carbohydrates, worry, nutrition, which was very interesting and much enjoyed. Community singing "O Little Town of Bethlehem". Miss Audrey Bradshaw read a very interesting paper on vitamins, A, B, C, D, E, and nutritions from the soil and the value of sunshine. Mrs. D. Atkins gave a reading and Mrs. Insley gave a paper, both being well given and helpful. The roll call was an exchange of Christmas gifts. Jolly old Santa with his basket full of gifts visited each member, candy for the children he had.

Members were then honored by having Dr. Lily B. Mathieson speak on paroxysonal, tacchycardia heart condition, when it becomes suddenly rapid and goes back to normal rate, the speaker explained, the two heart chambers which everyone was interested in and gave symptoms of various diseases which affect both children and adult. Dr. Mathieson stressed the value of sunshine and proper rest, simple meals, the members felt very fortunate in having Dr. Mathieson address them.

Mrs. Clinton McDonald on behalf of the institute members thanked Dr. Mathieson for her instructive address.

Santa appeared on the scene with a gift for Dr. Mathieson who was deeply grateful and promised her service at any time.

The president extended the season's greetings to the members. Another eventful meeting was brought to a close with the National Anthem, after which Mrs. Bradshaw, hostess, assisted by the President, seated the guests where a delicious lunch was served by the conveners.

MAKING CLAPPER INTO DEFENCEMAN REAL SMART MOVE

Hastings Ontario Player With Boston Bruins Improves With Age

ONCE A FORWARD

Ross Turned Player Into Defenceman and Move Proves Judgment

Like a good wine, Aubrey (Dit) Clapper seems to improve with age. The burly defenceman with the Boston Bruins is an object example of one of a goodly share of smart moves that have to be credited to Art Ross, the major-domo of the Boston National Hockey League Club.

It was Ross who turned Clapper from a forward into a rearguard several seasons ago and the move has paid dividends in big way. Clapper was no mean shakes as a forward in his hey-day and as a defenceman he has been just as effective.

Big, and fairly fast, Clapper was a member of the famed Boston dynamite line which ran riot in the N.H.L.'s 1929-30 season. That was the year Clapper, Ralph (Cooney) Weiland and Dutch Gainor teamed to tally 183 scoring points, and 102 of them were goals. In that season Clapper scored 41 goals and only Weiland of all other N.H.L. players did better. Weiland potted 43.

But when Clapper started to slow down a bit up front Ross realized that the big fellow still had a good number of seasons of hockey left in him as a defenceman. Clapper made good immediately and has kept up his brilliant play.

It's this same Clapper who, with six goals in 14 games, is leading all other defencemen in goals scored this season. He has been one of the mainstays of a Boston machine that has been defeated only twice in those 14 games and is credited with 11 victories and a draw to lead the league.

The Bruins will be gunning for their seventh straight victory tonight when they tackle New York Americans in Boston, while Detroit Red Wings take on the Rangers at New York in the only other scheduled game of the night.

Letter to the Sports Editor

New York City, New York.

Dear Editor:

I have just had an enjoyable afternoon with my very good friend Tommy "Perfect Man" Pedder. I am surprised Belleville didn't recognize him when he brought back a United States lifting title last May. It's not only that but when a magazine like Strength and Health call him "America's Best Built Small Man" he certainly is. Besides that he has never been beaten at stretching cables and there is only one man in America who could give him a battle at cable stretching and that man is Anthony Tarlazzo of York, Penna., the world's lightweight lifting champion. The honour he likes best of all was when he was named "Best Built Small Man in America." He should have let the newspapers know of this, but he told me he didn't think Belleville would care to know. So what are you going to do about it? I hear that Belleville is going to hold its lifting championships, so why not present him with something to show your appreciation for him? Do you know that his picture has appeared in ten different papers in the U.S.A. and wonderful stories of him with pictures have been in four physical culture books and yet he claims his picture has never been in his home paper? Get wise, you may not have him much longer.

Yours very truly,
John Wills.

MIAMI MAESTRO

Harold (Jug) McSpaden, ABOVE, one of the pro golfers who tour the continent in search of big purses, took care of a few winter fuel bills when he posted a score of 275 for 72 holes, good enough to capture high money in the annual Miami Open. He was one stroke up on Henry Picard and left the resort city with an extra $2,500 to his name.

LEE IS LEADING HURLER OF LOOP

Member of Chicago Cubs Had Earned Run Average of 2.66

New York, Dec. 20 (AP)—William Crutcher Lee, Jr., strong man of Chicago Cubs, was the leading pitcher of the National Baseball League last season, official figures released today showed.

The big righthander led both in percentages with .710 and in earned runs with an average of 2.66 per nine-inning game to dominate the circuit's mound corps as completely as Carl Hubbell of New York Giants formerly did.

Lee turned in the most victories, 22, against nine defeats, had the most shutouts, nine, and tied for starting the most games, 37.

Four of his shutouts came in succession between Sept. 5 and 22 equalling a venerable league record held by Red Reulbach of Chicago and Grover Cleveland Alexander of Philadelphia.

Lee appeared in a relief role seven times and pitched a total of 291 innings, second biggest load of any pitcher. Of the 1,194 batters he faced, only 281 made hits, 74 received bases on balls and 10 sacrificed.

TRENTON SCORES FIRST VICTORY

Flyers Defeat Kingston 1-0 on Goal by McNeeley

Kingston, Dec. 20 — Trenton scored its first win in the George Vanhorne Memorial series here last night to better its chances for a playoff position by beating Kingston 1 to 0. The lone goal of the game was scored on a McNeeley from Lecompte play, with the former deflecting a shot into the net.

Referee: R. Dougall.

First period:
No scoring.
Penalty: Roberts.

Second period:
1—Trenton, McNeeley (Lecompte) 2.00
Penalties: Hager (2), Brackenbury, McNeeley.

Third period:
No scoring.
Penalties: Stoness (major), Olekevis.

Adams Refuses Offer For Brilliant Forward

Detroit, Dec. 20 (CP)—Manager Jack Adams revealed today he had just refused an "enormous" offer for Sid Abel, Red Wing centre, whom he terms the brightest front-line recruit of the season. Adams did not want to say who bid for Abel, but added that any club in the National Hockey League would be glad to get the Prairie meteor.

Red Dutton, New York Americans manager, is the saddest of all the hockey experts over the player, for he missed getting him by 24 hours when Abel was an amateur playing in his home town of Melville, Sask.

"I hurried up there only to discover that the Red Wings had been there a day ahead of me," complained Dutton.

CALLING 'EM

Between the Lines

Ken J. Colling

We are in receipt of a letter, post dated from New York City, which appears elsewhere in today's issue. The writer firmly and openly takes Bellevillians in general to task for failure to recognize the feats and accomplishments of Tommy Pedder in his winning of the North American weightlifting championships. The writer of the letter, who signed himself John Wills, of New York City, further enlightened us as to Pedder's strength ability when he says there is only one other man in America who can beat Tommy at cable stretching. There is much truth in Mr. Wills' statements. Belleville is prone to welcome in its midst the first stranger to come along and without reservation, but like the proverbial 'prophet', local lads to make good are always without honour in this city. Pedder's case is by no means one of isolation; there are others just as neglected.

According to the league-statistician Bill Walshe, the Kingston sports scribe, the aggregate scoring records of the Van Horne series is about even. For instance Belleville and Garrison have six points each, although the Redmen have the advantage of one more league game than the "Soldiers." In three league games Eddie Thomas' charges have scored 14 goals with ten having been scored against them. Incidentally the Redmen have not lost a stars as yet. The Garrison, with only one more game left in the schedule have scored 14 goals to nine of their opponents, while Queens have scored 15 as against ten against them. Perth has only scored nine, but has had 15 scored against them, while the tail-end R.C.A.F. "Flyers" have only scored five goals in two games, with nine having been hauled out from behind Gibson. Carr-Harris is the leading scorer with five goals and two assists for a total of seven points. Younger-Lewis, of the Soldiers, and Williamson of Queens have five scoring points each. Incidentally the Redmen must win Wednesday's game versus Queens to assure themselves of first place.

According to Bill Walshe's figures the Belleville scoring is well divided, showing the locals are playing splendidly as a team. Of their 14 goals, ten have been the result of assists from combination plays, which are hard to beat. If the Redmen continue to play as a unit and pass the old boot heel they'll be hard to front in any loop. The individual records of the Redmen for three games in the Van Horne Memorial Cup series is as follows:

New York, Dec. 20 (AP)— Mike Jacobs will announce that Max Baer-Lou Nova bout Wednesday .. He's waiting to hear from madcap Max now and plans a two-week vacation in Florida when the fight is made....Miguel is peeved over the National Boxing Association's rating of Tony Galento as the No. 1 challenger to Joe Louis....Mike rates Galento no better than eighth on his own list, which has John Henry Lewis, Baer and Nova bracketed on the top rung....By a strange prank of fate Lewis will fight the champion next and either Baer or Nova will have a shot at him in 1939...."My list includes box office attraction too," revealed Jacobs....No kidding.

When the Sanford Uniteds of Amsterdam, N.Y., held their soccer reunion about 200 old timers responded .... Among them was Matty Davis who booted the ball on the first team representing the club—51 years ago....The winner of next February's championship of golf club champions at St. Augustine, Fla., will receive, in addition to the regular trophy, a medal which the late Walter J. Travis won in 1898 for low score of the season at the Westchester Golf Club'.... Travis' widow has contributed one of the medals from the great champion's collection each year since the Florida tourney was started in 1928....The South Carolina team with the best record at Thanksgiving will invite an outsider for a New Year's Day yam bowl game in Columbia next year.

Albert Reese of the Galveston Daily News has dug up the passer to end all passers....Ernest Brow, quarterback on the Central Bearcats, a negro eleven, recently completed 18 out of 20 passes in one game....Reese investigated and found brother Brow had tossed 125 completed aerials out of 166 for a percentage of .753.

After losing their initial two starts in the Van Horne Memorial cup series, the R.C.A.F. "Flyers" moved into the win column by virtue of a 1-0 victory over the Kingston City team last night. Incidentally the "Airmen" can still finish in the moneyed series by winning their remaining games, as they've only played three to date, leaving two remaining. Coach Carling-Kelly's defence tightened up last night, after some loose playing, earlier in the season, while the forwards did overtime in the matter of backchecking. The big moneyed goal came from the stick of Eric McNeeley with Louis Lecompte providing the necessary pass. The ice at Kingston was not in any too good condition last night, slowing up the game to a noticeable degree. Now Coach Carling-Kelly's sextette has registered a win the final game of the series, Belleville versus R.C.A.F. at Kingston next Wednesday will be well worth seeing.

Do you remember when Jerome (Dizzy) Dean, who managed to hit the sports pages from January until August, was voted sports biggest disappointment of 37? The Associated Press annual poll result, published one year ago today, showed 20 of 53 sports writers voted the then St. Louis Cardinals pitcher the unenviable award.

In an effort to bolster the floundering Leafs, Conny Smythe signed Bucko McDonald, who wasn't good enough to play for the tail end Detroit Red Wings this year. With Red Horner and McDonald on the same squad the Toronto sextette is liable to be playing shorthanded about fifty per cent of the time from here in. It is reported that $10,000 and a minor league player was placed on the trading block for "Bouncing Bucko", which seems like a lot of iron men for a player who has been on the sidelines and reported to be slated for the minors only last week.

Already congratulations are being received by Connie Mack, veteran manager of Philadelphia Athletics and builder of championship baseball clubs. Mister McGillicuddy will celebrate his 76th birthday on Friday. During his colorful career as manager of the "white elephants", Connie Mack was forced to wreck three championship clubs, owing to the indifference of Philadelphia fans once a title-winning team had been rounded up. Mister Mack loves nothing better than the moulding of youngsters into a world's championship machine and is today back at his old tricks.

HODGE PODGE—Johnnie Gottselig, of the Black Hawks, is the top scorer in the N.H.L. today with nine goals and ten assists to his credit ..It will cost you $7.70 to see Donald Budge play his inaugural professional tennis in Madison Square Gardens, that is if you are at all interested....Cecil Hart is threatening a shake-up among the ranks of the Canadiens if more action and goals are not soon forthcoming ....Jeff Heath, Ontario slugger with Cleveland Indians, is considered one of the most dangerous hitters in the American League .... Wilmer Hillock's Victor Patch won two straight at Dufferin Park yesterday....Incidentally this horse Victor Patch is just about tops in all its surveys around the tracks... The University of Toronto Varsity hockey team is enroute to California, will play games in the U.S.A. enroute to the west coast and return.

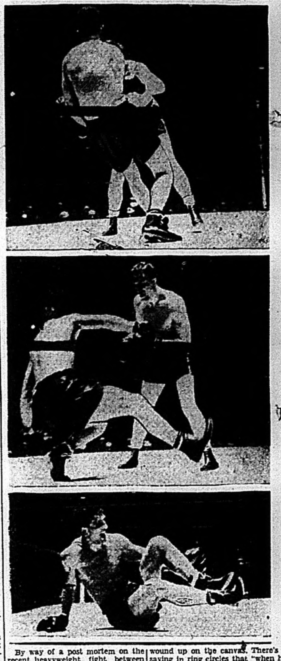
"LAUGHING LOU" TAKES A REST



By way of a post mortem on the recent heavyweight fight between Tommy Farr and Lou Nova, here are some magic-eye pictures that caught the winner, the up-and-coming Mr. Nova, as he tried to land two blows in rapid succession, while off balance and as a result wound up on the canvas. There's a saying in ring circles that "when he laughs, he's hurt," but in this instance Lou sat down and laughed at his own clumsiness, something he intends to remedy before that match, already being mooted, between him and Joe Louis.

DIARY NOTES OF FASHION MODEL

Smart and Practical

By GRACE THORNCLIFFE

I'LL HAVE to get after that gift list of mine. I want to get everything done by the first of the week. I sent off the presents for Pam's children so that there are no more long-distance gifts to send.

Pam and Ken get here tomorrow and it will be good to see them. Consuelo's mother and her brother and his wife are here. And you can just imagine how happy she is! They saw her show and just loved it. It certainly has gone over with a bang and every seat has been sold out for the holidays. We had to scurry round to get seats for Prylys' brother and for Guido and his wife. We finally did manage to get all we wanted so there is to be a big theater party on Christmas Eve.

Nice Displays

Despite the beautiful weather, everything is looking like good old Yuletide and the shops have never had nicer displays. I have been rushing round with my lists and, busy as I have been, I have had to spend my time glued to the windows looking at the glorious displays. Monday and the day after I am going out shopping with Madame, which means that we'll be in the car and so I ought to get a lot done. I am splurging on a gift for Bill. I'm getting him a set of pigskin luggage, a pullman case, a wardrobe case, a small dressing bag and a hat and shoe box. It is very expensive, it is true, but it is worthwhile.

I bought a great many things in Europe this year so part of my list has been settled. But I want to get nice gifts for my people, for Consuelo, for Dodo, for Don and Guido and their wives. Of course the present for Guido will have to be something extra special, for it is a wedding gift as well. I'll talk it over with Madame when we are out together, for she always has such marvelous ideas.

I've been wearing this smart but practical coat to save my good coat while in the crowded stores. It is in deep bordeaux woolen with striped fabric used for the collar border and for the buttons, also for the patch pocket trim. The seaming on the bodice continues down to form side pleats on the skirt. It is part of an ensemble, for the striped fabric is used for a dress.

Located by an adventurous cameraman in one of his desert strongholds, Abdul Razak, leader of the Arab rebel army that harasses British army outposts and Jewish settlements in Palestine, had no objections to posing for this picture. In fact he produced the chair on which his foot is resting in order to produce a more imposing picture. He is flanked by his secretary and personal aide and members of his heavily-armed bodyguard.

HAIL AND FAREWELL TO THE WHITE HOUSE

U.S. Attorney-General S. Cummings, LEFT, who will leave President Roosevelt's cabinet on January 1 to take up a private law practice, appears to be "happy about the whole thing" as he leaves the White House after a cabinet meeting. Federal Relief Administrator Harry Hopkins, CENTRE, whom rumor slates for a post in the Roosevelt cabinet, already sits in on cabinet meetings, and is pictured here leaving the White House after sitting in on the latest meeting with President Roosevelt. This meeting marked the last appearance of Secretary of Commerce Daniel C. Roper, RIGHT, as a cabinet member. The ABOVE mentioned ruor hints that Hopkins mentioned rumor hints that Hopkins will fill the Roper vacancy.

HELD AS SPY

George H. Miller, who describes himself as a member of the "international police," is the fourth spy suspect to be arrested in California in the past month. He was taken into custody when discovered in the cockpit of a newly-finished military bombing plane at the Vultee aircraft plant in Downey, Calif.

TESTIFIES

Shown here as he appeared before authorities probing the ramifications of the McKesson & Robbins Drug Company is John M. Kantor, who told investigators that two men claiming to represent the drug firm had attempted to sell him 250,000 Lee-Enfield rifles. Kantor, who is 60 and describes himself as a merchandise broker, is wanted in Stratford, Conn., on a charge of participating in an oil swindle. He was held in New York as a fugitive from justice.

WILL THE NEWSPAPER OF THE FUTURE BE PRINTED IN YOUR LIVING ROOM ?

Here you see a group of young topic-thirsty folk reading an edition of the Post-Dispatch as it unreels from the special receiver in their home. Pages, containing the usual news, features, cartoons and sports are printed in the regular manner by the Post-Dispatch, transformed into soundwaves on an ingenious sending apparatus and broadcast. The receiver picks up the sounds and turns them back to original form, printing the pages on a paper roll which unwinds as printed.

Romance

By DOROTHY R. SCOVILLE

Before her hair had begun to whiten, and when her invalid mother had ruled the household, Miss Emma Prescott had been inclined to rebel at the unkind fate that had harnessed her to the everlasting routine of the cottage on the Lane. She had dreamed so long of having a home of her own. Sometimes the tears would come when she thought of it but with a stern New England will she had repressed tears. It had been hard at first, not to think of what she had almost had. Her eyes would persist in straying across the hedge to the house where Elijah Benton had once lived.

Elijah, tall and fair, with the tenderness that she remembered so well on the day that he had asked her to wait for him. She remembered to the day, now she had stolen down to the garden to meet him. She had not dared to meet him openly. For years the two families had not spoken. All because of trouble over the boundary line between the two houses.

But love knew no bundary line, and Emma and Elijah had sworn that nothing could keep them apart. That was before he had come home from the sea to die. Fever from the tropics had followed his ship.

While he lay ill he had begged for her, and she had not been allowed to go, Pride and the family quarrel had prevented. Then when she could endure it no longer, she had gone secretly, only to find she was too late.

Across the hedgeway the Benton house had long been closed, for there were no Bentons to care for it.

Because only a memory and an empty house are lonely company. Miss Emma asked Mary Ellen Lewis to come and live with her. Mary Ellen was a Prescott by blood. She was young and blue eyed, with a sunny laugh and a way with her that made the village smile back at her. But what worried Miss Emma was that she never had any beaux.

Spring came and the Benton garden needed attention. Miss Emma and Mary Ellen worked together, with Mary Ellen doing the work and Miss Emma giving the orders. Quite often Mary Ellen worked in the garden alone. Her dreams could live among the lowers.

When John Parker first saw the garden, its rare beauty stopped him. It was so primly old-fashioned in the way it was hidden behind the hedge. He was glad that he had remembered the old place belonged to him. His painting would go well there.

So quietly had John Parker come into the garden that even his footsteps had not sounded. The slender little figure in blue went on reaching for roses and talking to the thush that sat on the bough of the apple tree.

"You think it's a shame, too, that any man should own this garden, don't you?" the figure was saying. "He's an artist, and he's coming next week to live here, so that I can't come over any more."

"But I'd rather like it if you would come over, even if I am here," protested John Parker.

The figure whirled around with a suddenness that sent the thrush winging over the hedge. John Parker smiled, and wondered what on earth he should say next. The girl laughed in a disconcerting manner, and dropped a rose from the armful she had.

At Mary Ellen's description of the Benton descendant, Miss Emma's heart beat a little faster, he seemed so much like Elijah.

On the last day of August the picture was finished. The day after, John Parker went away Mary Ellen did the housework with a forced cheerfulness that did not deceive Miss Emma, nor did Mary Ellen's explanation deceive her John Parker had gone—with only good-by. Miss Emma nodded wisely. Mary Ellen had found she did possess a heart after all.

Then she saw the Boston paper, and on the front page was the reason why John Parker had hurried away. Very carefully Miss Emma had the paper behind the wood box in the kitchen.

Mary Ellen went each evening to the garden to sit beside the lily pool and dream. So when John Parker appeared, Miss Emma knew where to send him, and she smiled as she watched him run down the path. She even spied a little; saw him show Mary Ellen a newspaper clipping, then take her in his arms.

Miss Emma sighed, content at last. "I knew he'd come back," she said to the rose bush by the door. "And with all the prize money that pict[illegible] hibit, they can fix up the garden and reshingle [illegible]."

She sighed again, and went slowly into the house.

"And there's going to be the wedding of a Benton and a Prescott, after all."

WALL STREET CLOSE

New York, Dec. 20—(AP)—While selected steels, rails, aircrafts and specialties displayed rallying inclinations in today's stock market, many recent leaders were unable to work up advancing steam.

Gains ran to a point or so at the opening, but these were whittled down in most instances as the session progressed. Near the final hour quotations were mildly mixed. Transfers were around 1,000,000 shares.

TORONTO STOCKS

Toronto, Dec. 20—(CP)— The action on Toronto Exchange today quieted down in all sections of the Board but the western oils continued to supply the big part of the trade. After opening with a fairly strong tone the oils sold down but they were showing signs of a come back in the early afternoon at which time Home had about halved the morning 'oss and Okalta and Calgary - Edmonton were showing net gains. All the indices were off at noon.

Base metals developed no changes of importance and in the golds a few of the cheaper issues, including Hardrock, Kirkland Lake, Siscoe and Broulan were higher and O'Brien, East Malartic and Macassa narrowly lowered. In the industrial section the liquors, steels and senior oils displayed a mildly soft note.

PERCH START BITIG

Perch have already begun to bite well, it is reported by the first through-the-ice fishermen on the bay. Regular fishing has not yet commenced and actual fishing will not be undertaken until the fishing shanties are placed on firmer ice, but angling through test holes east of the city has already produced some fair catches, it was reported by one resident.

RECEIVES AWARD

Mr. Frank P. Smith of Napanee, second vice-president of the Lennox Agricultural Society, who for many years past has distinguished himself in agricultural circles through his effort to promote the interests of fall fairs, has been chosen this year for the award of the diploma of the Ontario Department of Agriculture for his services in the past. Mr. C. W. Buchanan, agricultural representative of the county, made the presentation this week on behalf of the department.

Police Blotter

Charged with aiding and abetting to the moral delinquency of children in the home, James Menzie, of Coe Hill, was arrested in the home of a relative in that village yesterday. Menzie was brought to Belleville by Provincial Constable Palmateer, where O.P.P. preferred charges against the accused and lodged him in the Hastings County jail on remand. Menzie appeared before H. B. Wilson, local Justice of the Peace, today and was remanded.

Two transients are said to have been responsible for the breaking of a window in a private residence situated at 82 Station Street last evening. The two men were seen scuffling on the street and fell against the building breaking the window. Although police searched the immediate district for the alleged culprits, their efforts were in vain.

A Setter dog, the property of Mr. J. Harrott, Ann Street, Belleville, was located in Napanee yesterday. The canine was last seen following a transient east on Dundas Street. Chief Watts of Napanee took the dog into pound after a man had tried to dispose of the animal in Napanee. The transient disappeared, however. Today Mr. Harrott recovered the dog.

Butter, Egg Prices Remain Steady

Toronto, Dec. 20 — Unchanged prices were reported for butter, eggs on the Toronto open produce market yesterday by the Dominion Department of Agriculture.

The butter market was quiet, but steady, with not much offering. Ontario creamery solids traded at 21 3-4c for No. 1 grades, 21c for 38 score and 20 1-4c for 37 score. Prints moved through retail channels at 23 1-4c to 23 1-2c for top grades. Buyers continued to offer 21c for No. 1 grade churning cream (country truck prices).

Fresh receipts were lighter on the egg market and, although demand was good, prices held firm at previous levels. Graded shipments cleared readily at 33c for grade A-large, 28c for medium, 27c for pullets, 25c for B's and 22c for C grades. Offerings moved freely in the retail section of the market.

Quebec Butter Eases.

Montreal, Dec. 19 (CP)—Quebec and western regraded butter eased slightly on open produce markets here, according to reports from the Dominion Department of Agriculture. Other offerings mostly were steady and unchanged.

Creamery butter prints to retailers were 22 1-2 to 23 and solids 22 to 22 1-2.

Graded egg shipments in used free cases were offered at 34 1-2 to 35 cents a dozen for A-large, 29 for A-medium, 27 to 28 for A-pullets, 23 1-2 to 25 for B-large and 21 1-2 for C. Receipts: 492 cases.

'COUNTRY STORE' AT McCARTHY'S FOR FIREMEN'S FUND

To help the Firemen's Toy Fund which still needs money to bring it up to the total of other years, Mr. John C. McCarthy, proprietor of the McCarthy Theatre has offered a generous percentage of the receipts at his theatre on Thursday evening, December 22nd. The firemen will stage a "Country Store" at nine o'clock, awarding fourteen prizes ranging from a cord of wood to a turkey. Many of the prizes to be drawn for will be on the stage for the lucky holders of ticket stubs. The firemen are very grateful to Mr. McCarthy for his co-operation and for that of Mr. Vince Freeman manager of the Theatre.

"There is no doubt that we Americans as a people are young in spirit."—Will H. Hays.

CHRISTMAS FOWL OFFERED TODAY ON CITY MARKET

Thursday's Market Will be Large One it is Believed

OFFERINGS NUMEROUS

A fair-sized, pre Christmas market, not too heavily patronized by buyers offered turkeys, geese and ducks at prices which varied as greatly as the offerings shown this morning.

Average price of turkey asked this morning ranged between 25 and 30 cents the pound, with birds selling at from $2.50 up to $4.00 for the single fowl. Geese were a close second, selling at prices slightly below turkey, ranging from 20 to 25 cents the pound, and asking bids of from $1.75 to $2.50 the single bird. Plenty of ducks were also available at from $1 to $2 for the exceptionally fat birds. The common chicken sold from 75 cents to $1.26 the single bird, pairs averaging $1.75.

"Corn fed and crate fattened, all of them," stated one vendor, displaying a fine show of geese. "Prices won't go down any, either, by Thursday next, but may go up," it was added.

Thursday next will be the big market day for Belleville, it was generally agreed by those present at today's market. "Local buyers don't like to get their bird until just a day or so before," stated one attendant.

In the dairy line little other changes in price were noted. A small supply of butter was held at an average price of 28 and 30 cents the pound, with two-pound rolls at 65 cents. Eggs held firm at from 33 to 35 cents the dozen for "A" selects, and ranging down from 32 to 30 cents for pullets and ungraded stocks.

Vegetables were offered in smaller quantities at prices which generally prevailed on Saturday's market. Greater attention was being paid by the buyers to the necessary ingredients for stuffing the family fowl, with sage at ten cents the bunch, onions at 25 cents the peck, and celery and radishes at ten cents the bunch in chief demand. No changes in prices of potatoes were noted.

NO CHARGES IN SLIGHT ACCIDENTS

Icy Pavements Attributed as Cause of Two Crashes

Icy pavements were again attributed the paramount cause of two motor accidents, to have occurred in the city late yesterday. Fortunately in both cases, however, the vehicles were not travelling at rapid rates of speed and no personal injuries resulted, although one car was badly damaged.

Shortly before midnight last night a motor car driven by Raymond Pringle, Picton, was in collision with another automobile, driven by Charles Harper, 30 Bridge St., the collision taking place at the intersection of Front and Bridge Streets. Mr. Pringle stated he did not observe the Harper car owing to vapor on the windshield of his vehicle. Both cars skidded when the brakes were applied and before the impact.

Considerable fender, radiator, headlight and body damage resulted, especially to Mr. Pringle's car, which had to be towed to a nearby garage for repairs.

Earlier in the evening a motor car being backed out from the west curb along Front St., by Dr. Gerald Allison of Picton, was struck by another motor car, driven by Charles Gerdem, Mansville, N. Y. The street was slippery with ice, fender damage only resulted and the matter was amicably settled between the two owners police revealed upon investigation. No charges were preferred in either case.

PAY FOR TREES BUT NO DELIVERY MADE

Several local citizens have complained to the police department regarding the non-delivery of ever green trees, said to have been purchased on the city market, but not delivered to the address of the purchaser. Irritated and disappointed purchasers alike informed police they had paid for their Christmas trees for delivery, but the vendors had failed to make the delivery. In all cases reported the vendor of the trees is believed to have been the same party, residing in Peterborough County. Police are investigating the non-delivery of the trees.

WORKMEN RUSH WORK ON RINKS

In the hope that work may be completed in time for younger residents of the various neighborhoods to try their Christmas skates employees of the public works department are rushing the construction of the open air rinks being installed by the local Kiwanis Club at three school grounds in the city. The open air rinks will be maintained by the club until spring, and will be under the supervision of the school principals.

OBITUARY

JOSEPH ADAMSON (Chicago)

Joseph Adamson, a former resident of Belleville, died in Chicago, Ill., on Sunday, Dec. 18th.

The late Mr. Adamson, who was in his 35th. year, had lived in Chicago for many years. A brother, Mr. W. H. Adamson, resides on Station Street, Belleville. Old friends here will regret to learn of his death.

The funeral will take place in Chicago on Wednesday, Dec. 21st.

LATE CHARLES E. JEFFERY

Monday afternoon, December 19, the funeral of Charles Edward Jeffery took place from the Martin Funeral Home, Church Street, to St. Thomas' Church where the Burial Office was conducted by the vicar, the Rev. A' Beauchamp Payne. There was a large attendance of friends in the church, and the floral tributes were beautiful and many in number.

At the close of the service the funeral party left for Picton where interment was made in Glenwood Cemetery. The committal service was conducted by the Rev. A. J. Anderson, who is temporarily in charge of the parish of St. Mary Magdalene, Picton.

The honorary bearers were Messrs. J. S. McLean, Toronto; Stanley Brock, Toronto; H. G. Green, Belleville; and W. D. Green, Belleville.

The active bearers were Messrs. Frederick Uden, Toronto; Herbert Charles, Toronto; Alexander Hall, Toronto; Samuel Bolton, Toronto; Thomas Jamieson, Belleville and Larry Cromien, Belleville.

LATE ALBERT R. CONNOR (Madoc)

Madoc—The funeral of the late Albert R. Connor of Madoc, Ontario, who died in Belleville General Hospital on Tuesday evening, December 13, after an illness of two months, took place at the residence of his father, Mr. M. W. Connor at two o'clock on Thursday afternoon, Dec. 15., where a large number of sorrowing relatives and friends gathered to pay their last tribute of respect to the deceased who had been a life long resident of Madoc.

The funeral service was in charge of the Rev. E. N. O. Kulbeck, Pentecostal minister from Belleville, who was assisted by Rev. I. E. Kennedy and Rev. James Smith of Madoc. Prayer was offered by Rev. Smith. Rev. Mr. Kennedy reading the Scripture lesson from John 14 followed by a short address. The sermon was preached by the Rev. Kulbeck who spoke very comforting words from Hebrews 6-19—"Which hope we have as an anchor of the soul, both sure and steadfast and which entereth into that within the vale."

The service was under the auspices of the I.O.O.F. No. 179 of which lodge the late Mr. Connor had been a member for nearly 40 years.

The hymns used were favorites of the deceased being Jesus Saviour Pilot Me" and "Abide With Me". Two beautiful selections in song were rendered during the service. "Sometime We'll Understand" by Mrs. L. Ashley and Mrs. W. Hulin and "Good Night and Good Morning" by Rev. and Mrs. E. N. O. Kulbeck.

The pallbearers were brother Oddfellows namely Messrs Wm. McBain, R. Bristol, A. Smith, C. Conley, C. I. Ross and Jesse Reid.

The service at the graveside was in charge of the I.O.O.F. and was conducted by Dr. S. R. Beatty, D.D.G.M., and Mr. Percy Holland, Chaplain. Interment was made in Lakeview Cemetery. Relatives attending the funeral, Mrs. A. R. Connor, Woodstock; Miss Lillian Connor, Niagara Falls, Ont. Mr. and Mrs. John Connor, Mr. and Mrs. Jas. Dennison of Kingston, Mr. and Mrs. Howard Connor, Tweed and Mrs. Arthur Reid, Millbrook.

Navigation Lights Go Out One by One As Season Ends

One by one the navigation lights have gone out on Lake Ontario and the St. Lawrence River as the season ends. Captain M. Barry of the sturdy little government ship, Grenville a regular caller in the local part during the navigation season, sailed away from the port of Kingston yesterday after completing the fall task of picking up 275 buoys and 150 lights from the foot of Coteau Lake to the head of Lake Ontario. He will enter port at Prescott where the carrier will be berthed during the winter.

"Last week was one of the roughest weeks I ever spent on Lake Ontario," reported Captain Barry. "There were fog and ice and snow. The eastern end of the lake was particularly troublesome, and in the vicinity of the Main Ducks a terrific storm was experienced during the latter part of the week."

But up to last week sailors had never experienced such ideal late sailing weather, it was added.

The last boat out on Lake Ontario this season was the coal carrier, C. W. Cadwell, a consistent visitor to the local port this summer.

Reception Held For Bridal Couple

On Saturday evening, Dec. 17th., the eve of their twenty-sixth wedding anniversary, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Bailey, Roslin, tendered a reception to their eldest son, Carman, and his bride, (nee Edith King) who were married last September in Windsor.

At five-thirty the guests, numbering forty, were called by Mr. Clarence Holmes to the dining room which was prettily decorated in pink, yellow and white streamers and bells. The bride's table was centred with a miniature bride and groom and the proverbial rolling pin was given a prominent place nearby.

Dinner was served by the Misses Rita Harrison, Blanche Reid, Helen Sills, Phyllis Sills, and Nellie Hodgens, assisted by Mrs. Reuben Walt, Mrs. Clifford Bailey and Mrs. Clarence Holmes.

Mr. Herb Bailey, Belleville, was the very capable master of ceremonies and in a neat speech proposed the toast to the bride to which the groom fittingly replied, after which all joined in singing "For They Are Jolly Good Fellows." Other speakers who tendered congratulations and offered advice following years of experience in married life were the bride's father, Mr. Allen King the groom's father, Mr. Charles Bailey; Mr. William Holmes, Mrs. Tom Smith, Mr. Fred Rollins and Mr. Fred Holmes. During the evening community singing was enjoyed.

Miss Rita Harrison favored with a solo also Miss Nellie Hodgens, Miss Blanche Reid acting as accompanist and playing several piano solos. Cards and dancing were also enjoyed.

Mr. and Mrs. Bailey received many valuable gifts in silver, china, pyrex, blankets and linen testifying to the popularity of the young couple.

HEROIC 'PHONE OPERATOR SAVES TOWN

Refusing to leave her switchboard despite the fact that she was being menaced by flames less than 10 feet away, Florence Andrews, 20-year-old telephone operator, of Thornbury, Ont., stuck to her post and put through call after call warning sleeping Thornbury residents that the town was in danger of being burned to the ground. The heroic action of Miss Andrews is credited with saving the town from the flames, which gutted six buildings, including the Bell Telephone office, shown ABOVE, in which Miss Andrews stayed until the last possible moment.

Attacks on Women Rouse Residents, Vigilantes Formed

Toronto, Dec. 20 (CP)—Angered by attacks made on four township women within a week, a score or more residents of Silverthorn district have banded together as a vigilante committee to assist police in tracking down the assailant.

Dividing themselves in small groups, equipped with flashlights, the vigilantes thoroughly combed the fields, valleys and outlying areas of North Silverthorn and Mount Dennis Saturday and Sunday.

Poorly lighted streets were watched during the hours of 7 to 11 p.m. Gilbert and Cameron avenues, where the attacks occurred had a particularly heavy patrol.

Strangers found in that vicinity were closely questioned while all persons considered suspicious were reported to the police.

CHAPTER XII

It didn't seem to Jan that the day was any different from any of the others since her talk with Paul Harris. The morning sunlight, streaming across the deep blue of the sitting room carpet, lay in the same pattern; Dora's smile was just as contented as ever as Jan settled her among the pillows of her chaise longue.

Oh, the blessed relief of these quiet work-filled days! Now that Jan had made it clear that she was not going to be responsible for William Anthony Deverest's appearance at the floor show she felt that life was much brighter.

Making conversation, she remembered to tell her sister what she had heard about the suite being one of the most difficult to rent. Dora's eyes were round with amazement and her definite opinion was that anyone who did not like such a heavenly place must be out of his or her mind. As she spoke she was lifting her breakfast tray from the table to her knees. Jan watched her in silence, and then commented on it.

"Dora "You lifted that tray so easily. Do you really feel—"

"Oh, I'm well enough—my doctor man has been giving me all sorts of little things to do that I never did before. It was going to be a great surprise for you some day to see me go through my daily dozen all at one time. But I forgot and lifted the tray. I've spoiled the surprise," Dora said sadly.

Jan hugged her so hard that the orange juice and coffee were in grave danger of falling to the floor. She could not speak; her heart was too full for words. But she resolved that if there was ever anything she could do for kindly Dr. Curtis she would never count the cost to herself.

The sunny morning wore on. Jan returned to the room after rehearsal, glowing after a bit of unexpected praise from Zambrini. A new verse had been added to her Jingle Bells song, and the orchestra leader declared she had learned it perfectly. Dora was napping, so Jan retired to the bedroom and busied herself with the little details of mending which kept her show costumes in good condition. The muted ring of the house telephone interrupted her and wakened Dora. The clerk was announcing the arrival of Dr. Curtis.

Jan thought again as she opened the door to him that he was the cleanest man she had ever known. His skin always looked freshly scrubbed, his black hair, becomingly tinged with gray at the temples, seemed to have been polished strand by strand, and his glasses twinkled brightly as he walked across the room. As usual, he looked around for Pussy-puff, mindful of the time he had once stepped on the fluff of yellow tail.

Dora laughingly pointed to the soft ball of fur now curled at her feet sound asleep, and demanded that he should not be moved even for her examination.

Jan stood watching the doctor's deft movements, her amber eyes glowing with the gratitude she felt for him. How wonderful it must be to have spent a lifetime bringing happiness to others! Of course Dr. Curtis had not really spent a lifetime yet, Jan reminded herself; Tony had revealed that the doctor was only a little over thirty-five. Then suddenly Dr. Curtis looked at her above Dora's fair head and said quietly:

Jan could only stand and stare at him. He had always refused to admit that the operation would be anything more than experimental in nature, although Jan suspected he hoped it would give Dora a new life.

"Oh, Jan, isn't this wonderful?"

"Of course, dear," Jan swallowed the lump in her throat and tried to be casual as she answered her sister. But she could not overcome the horrible fear that Dr. Curtis' simple statement had aroused. Dora—her helpless little sister—lying on an operating table! The smell of ether—those dreadful hours of waiting without being able to help. She heard Dr. Curtis' voice as from a great distance.

"Your sister is going to be fine, Jan. She's been one of my best patients so far, and I know she isn't going to disappoint me now." He patted the pale slender hand lying on the coverlet and rose briskly. Only then did Jan remember that the question of paying for the operation had not been discussed.

"But — but Dr. Curtis! The money—"

His warm hand rested reassuringly on her shoulder a moment. "I haven't mentioned it, have I?" he asked, sm'ling.

"No, but—"

"Then you needn't bother about it either. If it will make you any happier, I want to tell you that the success of this operation will mean a lot to me and I can arrange things at the hospital."

Dr. Curtis turned away from the almost painful rel'ef that made Jan's 'ips quiver and her eyes fill with tears. He envied Tony's ability to bring that look to the girl's face. When his friend had first told him about Jan and her sister, he had tried to convince Tony that the idea of posing as his own chauffeur was a foolish one. But Dr. Curtis had to admit now that it was the only way Tony could have arranged for Jan to have all she needed without her knowing—and refusing—his kindness. The night before, when Tony had guaranteed all expenses for the operation, he had protested again that Jan ought to know the identity of her benefactor.

"And miss all this fun?" Tony had demanded. "Not on your life! I've given enough to charity and listened to enough mealy-mouthed requests and hypocritical thank you speeches. I certainly can part with a few pennies for the girl I'm crazy about, without putting her in a spot where she'll have to register gratitude."

The doctor, now preparing to leave, gave a few cheerful instructions to the girls.

"Dora can be ready to go to the hospital this afternoon?" he asked casually. Without wait'ng for Jan's answer he went on: "I'll send a private ambulance at three. You'll like it, Dora," he promised, "you'll go racing through the streets with the siren going full blast, scaring all the rest of the traffic out of the way."

Outs'de in the hall, his arm across Jan's shoulders, he said: "Be happy about it, Jan." "That helps everybody, you know."

"I — I'm happy," whispered Jan.

CHAPTER XIII

After Dora, smiling from the stretcher, had been carried out of the room, Jan lost all sense of time. She was not to see Dora again until after the operation, according to Dr. Curtis' arrangements, and the hours went by in a sort of leaden procession that dulled her senses to everything — even the work that lay before her. She followed her regular routine, accepting her cues mechanically, smiling a frozen little smile at the applause she received. Then almost immediately it was another day—the day of Dora's operation!

The old woman, always referred to by Jan and Dora as "That cranky old Mrs. Talbot" who lived on the same floor, met Jan in the hall that morning as she was fitting her key into the door.

"I hear your sister has gone to the hospital," began Mrs. Talbot, "I hope everything will be all right."

Jan was astonished at this sympathy. She had thought Mrs. Talbot disliked her—in fact the old lady had seldom replied when she said good morning to her. Now she said, gratefully, that she was sure the operation would be a success and that she would tell Dora as soon as she could see her that Mrs. Talbot had inquired about her.

Jan tried to rest, but to her tortured imagination everything about her seemed in a conspiracy to remind her of her sister. Dora was all she had—if anything should happen....!

Jan jumped up, threw on her coat again and jammed her hat on her head. She walked a'mlessly mile after mile. Only when she called the hotel and found that Dr. Curtis had left a message that Dora was doing well, did she suddenly see that it was past noon and that she was in an unfamiliar part of the city. It took her some time to get back to the Devon and she realized only then that she had walked far and was extremely t'red. Paul met her as she was coming in and exclaimed in pity.

"You must not worry so much. I'll tell Zambrini you will not rehearse this afternoon. Get some sleep—the maid will call you in time."

Jan, like an obedient child, went to her room, accepted the cup of hot broth that was sent up to her, and curled up on the bed. She would not—she could not—fall asleep. Yet, about five minutes later, it seemed, the maid was gently shaking her and saying it was seven o'clock.

It was a blessed relief to rush through a bath, force down a sandwich and get ready for the show. In between she found time to call Dr. Curtis and his warm, cultured voice reassured her as much as his words. Dora had cooperated beautifully. He was very pleased with the way everything had gone. She was not to worry. His voice lingered with her for the next hour.

Then again she began to get restless, to wonder nervously if Dr. Curtis had not been professionally kind. If only she could see Dora—just for a minute! But no, she must put on her make-up, she must dance and smile and sing her silly tuneful little song. Her nails bit into her palms until she felt that she would lose control, and she hated every one of the well dressed, well fed aud'ence who turned their faces to her so politely. But at last came the blessed moment of release—the time when she could fly to Tony waiting with the car to carry her to the hospital. Jan scarcely heard Zambrini's whispered: "Bravo, Mademoiselle!"

The morning after Dora's operat'on, Jan returned to the hotel with feet that fairly danced across the lobby.

"Dr. Curtis said she would surely be home in time for New Year's" Jan said breathlessly to Paul Harris. For once his iron reserve seemed broken and he had to clear his throat before he spoke.

"I—I'm delighted to hear it, Jan. Dora has become very—very firmly established in my—in all our affections. Last night when you came back from the hospital I was afraid...."

Jan looked up and remembered that she had heard Paul's wife had died in hospital following an operation. For the first time he seemed to her not a stern and worldly hotel manager, but a sympathetic friend.

Later, when she answered a ring at the door, Jan was surprised to see her former landlady, Mrs. Mallord, framed in the doorway. The heavy bulk of her figure was swathed in a plaid ulster that seemed to double her size. She was wearing what was plainly a new hat, as well—a very late style, as Jan recognized, but of a pert type that was the last thing Mrs. Mallord should have chosen. As she entered the room, she waved a large transparent - wrapped bouquet in Jan's face.

"I would have taken them to the hospital to your sister, only I couldn't get there during visiting hours...." she began. "I'm taking a chance being away as long as this, anyhow. How is the poor darling?"

"She's just fine, Mrs. Mallord. Everybody says she couldn't be better." Jan pulled forward an easy chair and settled her visitor comfortably. "Let me help you off with your coat."

"I don't know as that's necessary," the woman replied, smoothing the plaid design over her knee.

"It's new, isn't it? And I do like your hat, Mrs. Mallord." (I do, but not on her, Jan was thinking to herself.)

"I'm after having myself a complete new, outfit."

"Really, Mrs. Mal'ord! Don't tell me someone's left you a fortune?"

"Well, now — and that's just what happened," began Mrs. Mallord. "You'll be remembering that unc'e of mine that had his funeral on the very day I couldn't go? He was a sly one, God rest his soul! A savings account he had all the t'me— in a bank, mind you — with a bank book and all, and never a word to anybody except how hard it was for him trying to make ends meet."

"He did that. And he's after leaving it all to me. A legacy, the lawyer called it—a fine spoken young man he was, too. The very image of my nephew Timothy McShane—"

"Oh, Mrs. Mallord—I'm more glad about it than I can tell you," Jan cried. "Now you won't have to work any more."

"Listen to the child!" scoffed Mrs. Mallord. "And what should I be doing if not working, as I've done all my life? No, four hundred and eighty-seven dollars is what I had left after I bought some new clothes for myself and Jack, as the lawyer advised me to do. Imagine, if you can, me taking advice from a lawyer! But I put the rest of the money away and now I can die easy."

CHAPTER XIV

Accepting the cup of tea that Jan had ordered for her and which the bellboy had just brought in, Mrs. Mallord sat back complacently. As she stirred the generous amount of sugar in the cup, Mrs. Mallord drifted, at a question from Jan, to Jack and his new "c'ub." It was all due, it seemed, to that fine young man of Jan's— Tony Williams. Jan flushed at Mrs. Mallord's assumption of an engagement between her and Tony.

She told the girl about the empty store down the block that Mr. Wil'iams had managed to rent for the boys. It was all in a bad state of repair, but the boys themselves had painted it and fixed it up. She had made them some nice flowered curtains and Jan didn't know what it meant to a mother's heart to have a boy like Jack off the streets and safe out of harm's way. Jack was studying hard, too. He'd always been very bright in school and Mr. Will'ams had told him about a scholarship he might win to go to a military school. The uniform and brass buttons, Jan surmised, had led Jack to work hard toward this particular goal.

When Mrs. Mal'ord had had three cups of tea and an equal number of pieces of toast with marmalade, she announced that she could not stay another minute, and hoisted herself out of the armchair. When she was gone, Jan began to dress hastily. She had a luncheon date with Tony and she could hardly wait to tell him about Dora, what Dr. Curtis had said [illegible] how kind everyone at the hospital had been.

She felt so festive she wished she had some flowers to pin to her dark green coat. But ever since she had refused his orchids, Tony had refrained from giving her any more flowers. That had been a silly and childish thing to do, Jan thought for the hundredth time as she rummaged through a drawer for the bracelet that had been Tony's only last'ng gift to her.

It was quite a pretty bracelet, Jan thought as she fastened the clasp around her wrist. Rhinestones and a pattern of little green stones that almost matched her coat. Really, a diamond bracelet cou'dn't have sparkled more. Jan turned her arm this way and that, admiring the flash of the stones, marveling anew at the modern ingenuity that could im'tate real diamonds so successfully.

In the back of her m'nd Jan was going over what Mrs. Mallord had said about her legacy and Jack's club. It was a'l wonderful'y good fortune for the Mallord family Kind of Tony, too, to take such an interest in the boy. He must be spending qu'te a lot of money on him. Jan knew enough about rents, the cost of paint and chintz curtains, to realize that even the meager club room which Jack's friends had set up must cost a good many dollars. Tony had never told her what he earned; she supposed it was plenty, since he seemed to be somewhat of a conf'dential secretary as well as chauffeur to William Anthony Deverest. From what Tony said, she gathered that Mr. Deverest confided in him most of the details of his private life. Still—how much money would he have to be making to be able to indulge in ph'lanthropy for a whole neighborhood of boys?

Suddenly, Jan was struck by another thought. That legacy of Mrs. Mallord's—it was rather funny that this uncle should turn out to have money only after Tony Williams had called at Jan's old home! Oh, well—there was probably no connection. And as for the boys, maybe that club of theirs was not nearly so grand as Jack's mother described. It wouldn't do any harm, however, to find out if she could whether or not Tony was spending all his savings on the Mallord family simply because she had suggested that they needed help.

Jan picked up her purse and went down to the lobby. In another week it would be hung with evergreens; Paul had already told her that the huge wreaths of balsam which were especially made for the Devon Arms every year had been ordered and were even then, probably, getting dressed up in red satin bows.

"Jan!"

"Why, Dr. Curtis!" exclaimed Jan. The last t'me Jan had seen him he had been in his white coat, looking as stiff and starched as if he had never appeared outside the shining hospital wards. Now he was dressed in a dark blue overcoat that gave h'm somehow a more youthful air. Jan could not help noticing that his warm smile and friendly greeting were more whole-hearted than usua'. Her color rose as she gave him her hand and chided him for having left Dora even for an instant.

"Dora couldn't be better, nor in better hands," said the doctor, "but I've been wondering if somebody shouldn't look after you. In fact, I was coming up to prescribe luncheon for you with me."

"Oh!"

Jan could not repress an exclamation that was half pleasure at the thought that such a busy doctor should find time to think of her—and yet dismay at the recollection that she was even then on her way to meet Tony. She exp'a'ned as well as she could tha the lun'heon date was out of the question; she was meeting a friend within a few minutes.

"A girl friend? I'll take you both to lunch."

Jan's color rose a shade higher, as she explained haltingly that it was not a girl she was meeting. As Dr. Curtis still stood looking at her, with that very intent and friendly glance, she grew more embarrassed. She did not want to have him know that she was lunching with Tony. The latter had told her that Dr. Curtis was a good friend of William Anthony Deverest's and it was unlikely that he would want to sit at the same table with Deverest's chauffeur. Yet she could not just rudely walk away after he had been so kind, and after the wonderful things he had done for Dora.

"My date is with Tony Williams," she said at last, and Bradford Curt's thought he had never seen a more charming confusion. He grinned as he thought of Tony's face when he should appear, and promised himself that he would see to it that his friend acted perfectly the role of chauffeur he had picked out for himself.

"Why, that's just fine!" he beamed. "I know Tony well. I'd rather have lunch with you a'one, but s'nce we must have Tony with us, I don't mind a bit."

Jan, propelled through the door by his urgent arm, cou'd not protest, but she thought despairingly that it was going to be a difficult luncheon, for if Dr. Curtis did not m'nd Tony, she was sure Tony would mind him.

Tony had parked the car around the corner, the usual parking place, out of sight of the hotel. And there was Tony behind the wheel of the car. He had caught sight of them, and his face was alive with welcome.

"Oh, dear," thought Jan to herself. "wait 'til he hears!"

"Hello, Tony," she began as they stopped beside the car and Tony 'eaped to the ground. "Dr. Curt's met me as I was leaving the hotel ...." she stopped awkwardly.

"How are you, Tony?" said Dr. Curtis, looking, Jan thought, unnecessarily patronizing. This was going to be worse than she had imagined.

"Very well, thank you — sir," Tony added, apparently as an afterthought.

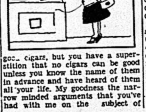
Little Benny's Note Book

Pop was looking at the comics with a serious expression and ma said, Do you know what I've decided I wouldn't buy you for Chrissmas, Willyum? Cigars, are you surprised? she said.

I can hardly believe my luck, I mean my ears, pop said, and ma said, I always buy you perfectly good cigars, but you have a superstition that no cigars can be good unless you know the name of them in advance and have heard of them all your life. My goodness the narrow minded arguments that you've had with me on the subject of cigars that you hadn't even tried yet. So this year I've decided there wont be any good cigars of mine left lying around the house to shift for themselfs, because I'm not going to buy you any, she said.



Words fail me, that's the most diplomatic answer that occurs to me at the moment, pop said, and ma said, So I'm going to get you neckties instead, not just one necktie or not even just a half a dozen, but a whole unadulterated dozen neckties so you'll have plenty of changes and I wont have any excuse to look at the same old chromo day after day.

Yee gods, get me cigars, pop said. After all, it wouldn't seem like Chrissmas without a broadside of cigars from my favorite wife, so dont tell me you're not going to get me any cigars this year, he said, and ma said, O well, if you insist, you silly man.

Orbey Alyea Faces Manslaughter Charge at Picton

NEWS ODDITIES AND BRIEFS

JUDGE LOSES PATIENCE

San Francisco, Dec. 21 (CP)—Michael O'Dea filed the same lawsuit against a bank 38 times.

The 39th time, the Judge said "five days for contempt."

The 40th time, the Judge said "$100 fine."

The 41st time—yesterday — the Judge said "Merry Christmas."

"But," he added, "you'll have to come back after the holidays" to answer another contempt charge.

CELEBRATES 104TH BIRTHDAY

Morewood, Ont., Dec. 21 (CP)—Mrs. Simon Bogart, "grand old lady" of this Cornwall district municipality, celebrated her 104th birthday today at the home of her son-in-law, Walter Loughridge. She has had the distinction of having lived under six British sovereigns. She was born in County Fermanagh, Ireland, in 1834, before Queen Victoria ascended the throne.

SKATER DIES OF INJURIES

Simcoe, Ont., Dec. 21 (CP) — Elmer Coates, 17, injured in a fall while skating on Sutton's pond last night, died here today. Dr. E. S. Copeman performed a head operation after the accident, but the boy failed to survive.

Coates, son of Earl Coates, collided with another boy and fell over backwards striking his head on the ice. He was taken to his home suffering from concussion and possible skull fracture.

MAYBE THEY WERE DOGS

Wingham, Ont., Dec. 21 CP)—The ways of Bruce County wolves indeed are strange, think Mr. and Mrs. W. Ritchie. While driving through the rural areas of the country, two wolves followed the Ritchie automobile, biting at the tires.

STALIN 59 YEARS OLD

Moscow, Dec. 21 (CP-Havas) — Joseph Stalin, the most powerful figure in Russia, celebrated his 59th birthday today. As usual, there was no public demonstration or mention of the event in the press.

THE WEATHER

Toronto, Dec. 21 (CP)—A storm of considerable intensity, centred this morning over the Grand Banks, and moving northeastward, is causing strong winds and moderate gales with snow in east Maritimes. Snowfalls have also occurred in west Nova Scotia and light to moderate snow in many parts of Ontario, though in nearly all other districts the weather has been fair. Pressure is high from Hudson Bay southwestward to the immediate west of the Great Lakes with shallow lows centred over Georgian Bay and south of Lake Ontario.

Lake Superior—Mostly fair and somewhat colder today and Thursday.

Manitoba — Fresh southeast to southwest winds; mostly fair today and Thursday with stationary or a little higher temperature.

Saskatchewan and Alberta—Generally fair today and Thursday with not much change in temperature.

Why the Weather!

By Major A. H. Thiessen

Science Service Meteorologist

Snow for skis! A skier should know his snow, and snowcraft can be learned best by personal observation. New, dry snow is good for skiing but not the best; it is called "powder snow". At first it is full of air but after a while it settles by its own weight, air is expelled, but it is improved for the sport. If this snow is subjected to melting it sticks, but upon being refrozen never sticks again. Wind packs powder snow, caking it; it also causes ripplemarks as it does with sand. A cake surface is fair for skiing. If wind persists, it produces a hard crust, sometimes called "wind board", which is still better.

ITALY'S POSITION TOWARD FRANCE IS NOT CORDIAL

Hope of Settlement of Differences Very Remote at Present

TREATY OF LONDON

Italy Using This Treaty as Basis for All Negotiations

Paris, Dec. 21 (CP-Havas)—Latest information regarding Italy's official position toward France was viewed in authoritative circles here as precluding for the time being any hope of negotiations for a settlement between the two powers.

When Italo-French diplomatic relations were made normal recently and France gave legal recognition to Italy's sovereignty over Ethiopia, it was hoped the two countries were on the eve of a new era of cordiality.

France's willingness to aid Prime Minister Chamberlain's policy of appeasing the dictatorships soon ran aground, however, on the shoals of the Italian propaganda campaign for French territory.

It now appears that although the Rome government has expressed no official connection with demands for French territory voiced in the Fascist press, it considers null the agreement concluded in 1935 between Premier Mussolini and Pierre Laval, then Premier of France.

Invoke Treaty of London.

Latest dispatches from Rome quoted the influential Giornale d'Italia as invoking the Treaty of London, signed in 1915 by Britain, France and Italy just prior to the latter's entry into the Great War, as justifying Italy's "logical aspirations" at France's expense.

In Paris it is felt that the same concessions provided in the 1915 instrument—rectification of the Libyan and Somali frontiers in Italy's favor—are contained in the Laval-Mussolini accord.

France is still ready to abide by the latter agreement, which was initialed but never made final, despite the fact that the Italian Foreign Minister, Count Ciano virtually denounced it in a talk last week with Ambassador Andre Francois-Poncet of France.

Convention Possible.

The 1935 accord would make possible, among other things, a special convention regarding the status of the large Italian population in Tunisia, one of the French territories demanded by the Fascist press.

Prime Minister Chamberlain will go to Rome next month armed with a full knowledge of France's point of view. This stand can be summarized as follows: No territorial concessions beyond those stipulated in the 1935 accord and no negotiation implying abandonment of that accord.

ITALY TO DRAFT PERSONNEL

Rome, Dec. 21 (AP)—The Fascist government today submitted to the Senate an airforce training bill to draft thousands of Italian youths into aviation. The Chamber of Deputies approved the measure at its closing session Dec. 14.

It requires all soldiers now attached to the air force to take flying instruction, authorizes the air force to select as many youths as needed from next year's conscription class, and provides that any Italian with desirable qualifications will be subject to conscription at any time for the air force.

Franco-Canadian Treaty in Effect

Paris, Dec. 21 (CP)—Foreign Minister Bonnet of France and Philippe Roy, Canadian Minister, yesterday signed an exchange of letters putting into effect a new Franco-Canadian trade treaty.

The agreement abrogated the Anglo-Moroccan accord of 1856 as it applied to Canada and established new commercial relations giving mutual concessions with reference to French Morocco and Canada.

Bonnet also expressed France's thanks to Mr. Roy who will retire soon after 28 years of service in Paris.

New York, Dec. 21 (AP)—Another crony out of the past of Philip Musica—a man who knew the masquerading super-swindler when he was a great spy-hunter—was held today on a charge of conspiracy in the McKesson and Robbins drug mystery.

The arrest of Benjamin Simon, 49-year-old Bronx salesman with a police record, gave credence to a previously reported story of an old friend who met Musica one day when he was still "F. Donald Coster", respected president of McKesson and Robbins.

COLD WAVE ENTERS ON FOURTH DAY

Many Suffer from Cold as Water Pipes Burst

By GUY RHOADES

London, Dec. 21 (CP) — British teeth continued to rattle today as the coldest wave in ten years entered its fourth day with a slight rise in temperature but no sign of a final letup.

Snow fell over London from early morning, creating a mess of slush through which citizens sloshed — most of them without rubbers. Mildenhall appeared to be the country's coldest spot with a temperature of 12 above.

London's temperature rose to 26 but inhabitants continued to suffer in the cold, drafty homes — many without water as pipes were frozen. Cold snaps are so rare in this country that no effort has been made to protect or insulate plumbing and even the air ministry's new $5,000,-000 building was partly flooded by a bursting pipe.

Plumbers did a rushing business in mending broken water services but one Canadian residing in the suburbs, who asked his landlord to have the pipes thawed, was told "the plumbers won't come unless the pipes are burst".

Hundreds of skaters were disappointed when heavy snow covered ice in the Lincolnshire fenlands. Some schools closed until after the Christmas holidays when rooms became too cold for classes.

News services ceased attempting to keep track of deaths from cold owing to the difficulty of separating them from heart attacks and the like.

8,000 Italian "Volunteers" in Spain Labor Member Tells Parliament

London, Dec. 21 (CP-Havas) — Ellen Wilkinson, Labor, last night told the House of Commons she had proof that fully 8,000 Italian "volunteers" have swelled the ranks of Insurgent General Franco's forces in Spain since Oct. 15.

Contradicting Prime Minister Chamberlain's assertion that so far as he knew only about 200 volunteers from Italy have reached Insurgent Spain since that date, Miss Wilkinson charged Italy is continuing its intervention in the Spanish civil war on a large scale.

She said that although Premier Mussolini of Italy withdrew 10,000 "volunteers" in an appeasement gesture last October, he almost immediately started shipping replacements.

Among the instances of which she said she had proof, Miss Wilkinson cited the following:

Nov. 9—400 men landed at Cadiz from the Italian ship Gradisca.

Nov. 28—170 Italians landed at Cadiz and Malaga from two ships.

Dec. 10—375 officers and soldiers landed from an Italian ship at Seville.

Richard Butler, Foreign Under-Secretary, said that it was very difficult to make confident assertions concerning "information on this particular matter".

He repeated the prime minister's statement that as far as the British Government knew there had been new Italian "volunteers" sent to Spain in the past few weeks.

"The Spanish government," he stated, "in recent months have carried out their intention of withdrawing volunteers from their side. The latest news I have is that 5,000 volunteers have actually left Catalonia and that 1,300 are ready to be evacuated."

WITNESSES STATE LIGHTS ON CAR NOT OPERATING

Edward J. Simonds Fatally Injured When Struck by a Car

BOLT IDENTIFIED

Dr. E. R. Frankish Says Bolt Produced is Continuation of One Found on Car

FLASH

Picton,—Orby Alyea committed for trial this afternoon.

Picton, Ont., —(Special)— Testimony of seven witnesses was heard by Magistrate O'Shea today in the opening session of the Preliminary hearing of Orbey Alyea, Carrying Place resident, charged with manslaughter, following an accident on Dec. 3rd as a result of which Edward J. Simonds, aged Massassaga resident died of injuries in Belleville General Hospital.

The first witness called was Dr. G. S. Cronk of Belleville, who had been the Simonds' family physician for twenty years. He hadn't attended Mr. Simonds himself but knew that for the past seven or eight years he had had fifty per cent loss of hearing. Although not of a strong build he had apparently never been ill and was always active. He wore glasses but enjoyed the average eyesight of a man of his years. At a distance of ten feet it was necessary to speak loudly to have him hear one's voice.

Seen at Scene

Dr. Cronk told of being called about twenty after six on Saturday night Dec. 3rd, to the scene of an accident, where he found Mr. Simonds covered with dirt, with scratches on the head, the left eye bruised and minor scratches on both hands. Dr. Cronk called an ambulance and had the injured man removed to Belleville General Hospital where he was X-rayed immediately. A fracture on the right side of the head 2 1-2 or 3 inches long running down toward the ear was revealed. Mr. Simonds never rallied and died on Sunday morning about ten o'clock. Dr. Cronk applied the lumbar test Sunday morning and this proved death had resulted from a hemorrhage of the brain caused by the fracture.

J. W. Leavens, County Road engineer of Prince Edward was called and a plan of the alleged scene of the accident drawn by him under the direction of Traffic

Yuletide Briefs

Sudbury, Ont., Dec. 21 (CP)—An hotel here will serve a free, Christmas Day turkey dinner to each guest registered either in a 50-cent or $1 room Christmas Eve. The idea is to aid men whose "luck is out."

London, Ont., Dec. 21 (CP)— A popular Christmas present here this year is a baby, say Children's Aid Society officials. With the approach of Christmas, a large increase in the number of applications from would-be foster parents is reported.

London, Ont., Dec. 21 (CP)—For weeks Wellington Street United Church Sunday School children put their nickels and pennies into a Christmas Missionary Fund. The other night a burglar broke into the church and stole the fund, about $6.

Vancouver, Dec. 21 (CP)—A band of Christmas musicians gathered outside the city hall yesterday to play airs of the season. There was a wheeze, a sour note and the music stopped. Alderman H. J. DeGraves had tossed a dime out of the window into the biggest horn in sight.

Sydney Mines, N.S., Dec. 21 (CP) —Nova Scotia Steel and Coal Company, whose Princess pit was the scene of the Dec. 6 disaster in which 21 miners died, announced yesterday it would grant a $5 loan to miners desiring extra money for the Christmas season. Workers in Scotia collieries have had few shifts since the disaster. The company will also replace equipment lost by the men in the accident.

London, Ont., Dec. 21 (CP)—The spirit of Christmas "got" Eddie Hall, Chippewa Reserve Indian. After meeting a minister at Windsor, Ont., Hall, sought for 20 months on a liquor charge, gave himself up to authorities here yesterday.

Food Strike Felt In City of Buffalo

Buffalo, N.Y., Dec. 21 (AP) — A paralyzing food strike in New York's second largest city made itself felt in surrounding reas today as 400 policemen were placed on special strike duty call.

Inspector James Hylane ordered the policemen to be ready to report at a moment's notice after a member of the Food Industry of Western New York, an employers group, announced an attempt would be made to bring deliveries through union picket lines.

Late last night, Canadian immigration officials at the International Peace Bridge reported they had turned back a car load of strikers who were following a Canadian truck which had come through the picket lines.

Buffalo's food terminals were being picketed by members of local 558, Warehouse and Produce Workers Union, affiliated with the American Federation of Labor's International Teamsters Union. The union went on strike after negotiations with the food industry group for a raise in wages collapsed.

RE-ORGANIZATION BRITISH CABINET MAY TAKE PLACE

Moves Will be Made to Strengthen Rearmament Drive

TWO MAY RETIRE

London, Dec. 21 (CP)—Prime Minister Chamberlain was reported today to have under consideration a number of changes in his cabinet to strengthen the rearmament drive.

However, it was not expected there would be any important developments until after parliament adjourns Thursday for the Christmas-New Year recess, and possibly not until the Prime Minister and Viscount Halifax, Foreign Secretary, return from their visit to Rome in January.

The government was sustained last night in its decision to try out a voluntary national service register of available manpower for defence until March. Then a new survey will be held to determine whether the voluntary plan will work or whether compulsory registration is needed to make Great Britain secure.

The vote was 270 to 9 after a day-long debate but more than half the strength of the House abstained from the division. Observers felt the abstainers did not want to go on record until the three-months trial is over.

May Go To Lords.

Rumors widely heard were that Sir Thomas Inskip, Minister for Defence Coordination, may go to the House of Lords as Lord Chancellor in succession to Lord Maugham, and that Viscount Runciman, Lord President

STERLING YOUNG, JOCKEY, HURT

His Horse Stumbled While Being Pulled Up After Race

Miami, Dec. 21 (CP) — Sterling Young, Canada's leading jockey this year, was injured yesterday in a spill just after the finish of the last race at Tropical Park.

His mount, owned by W. Waterman, stumbled as it was being pulled up after finishing third to Silent Shot and Winged Flight.

German Youths in France Called to Germany

Metz, France, Dec. 21 (AP)—Several thousand young Germans living on the French side of the border have defied orders issued through German consulates to return to Germany to do military service.

The youths affected are mostly sons of Rhineland and Saar separatists who took refuge in France when Germany regained full control of those regions after the Saar plebiscite of 1935.

IMPORT EXCESS FORCES GERMANY TO TAKE ACTION

German Foreign Exchange Fund Reported Very Low

11 MONTHS FIGURES

Concentration of Economic Powers in Hands of Walther Funk

By LOUIS LOCKNER

Berlin, Dec. 21 (AP)—Confronted by a serious foreign exchange situation, the German government has effected further concentration of economic power by appointing Walther Funk, director of the newly created "central office for increasing production".

During the first eleven months of 1938 Germany had an import excess of 205,500,000 marks ($82,200,000). Halting of this drain on foreign exchange reserves is expected to be Funk's main task.

Announcement of the assignment last night seemed to indicate it was merely a matter of departmental coordination, but informed business men today told a different story. They asserted Germany's foreign exchange fund is so low that even when a near relative abroad is dying authorities withhold the foreign exchange permits necessary for a German to make a last visit.

Coordinate Individual Processes.

Business men say Funk will try so to coordinate German industrial processes that a minimum of imported raw materials will be required. Use of substitute materials, standardizing of types and replacement of hand processes by machines are expected to be early results.

Collection of old iron and other materials which can be used again is expected to be intensified.

For the workers there is talk of a ten-hour day.

48 STRANDED ON ISOLATED ISLE IN INDIAN OCEAN

SOS Flashed Stating the Inhabitants Were Short of Coal

LOBSTER EXPEDITION

Paris, Dec. 21 (AP)—The French government tried today to find a wireless channel to communicate with 48 stranded settlers, silent since they flashed an SOS from the isolated Isle or St. Paul in the Indian Ocean.

After a day of unsuccessful attempts to reach the settlers through French colonial wireless stations, the government sent an urgent call to all ships flying the tri-color in the Indian Ocean to rush aid to the island. The government also asked United States naval authorities to try to communicate with the settlers.

The plight of the settlers became known when a feeble SOS flashed half way around the world was picked up by an amateur radio operator, E. R. Gibson, in Bremerton, Wash. The message said:

"SOS St. Paul Island, Indian Ocean. Bad weather. Exhausted

Twenty Million Britons Sheltered in Time of War In Caverns, Steel Huts

20,000,000 Pounds to be Spent Upon Shelter System

FOUNDATIONS IMPROVED

Program Consists of Communal Shelters in Streets

By J. F. SANDERSON

London, Dec. 21 (CP)—Sir John Anderson, Lord Privy Seal and Minister for Civilian Defence, today announced in the House of Commons that the government will spend £20,-000,000 ($93,175,000) on a system of private and public air raid shelters designed to protect 20,000,000 Britons from bombs in time of war.

The plan, providing for half the population of the United Kingdom, is believed to be the largest shelter scheme ever attempted anywhere in the world. Legislation to provide money for the work will be introduced in the House in January.

Public and Private Shelters.

"The shelters will vary from vast underground caverns to ready-made steel huts which can be erected in gardens and yards alongside houses. The scheme will involve also the strengthening of basements, apartment blocks and tenements so people can congregate in them when they hear air raid sirens.

At the same time Sir John announced the government will introduce legislation shortly after the Christmas recess to force employers to provide protection for their working people while they are on the job.

The shelter program, he said, will consist of communal shelters for persons caught in streets during air raids and steel shelters in or near private houses.

Stocks For Shelters.

"The government will accumulate the necessary stocks for these private shelters and will bear the whole cost of the material," he added. "Private shelters for 10,000,000 people will be provided and material will be accumulated for strengthening private basements.

"Twenty millions (of pounds) will be required for this material and will be borne entirely by the exchequer."

He said "several million pounds" additional will be contributed by the government to local authorities for construction of public shelters.

"The measures described are designed to protect nearly 20,000,000 people," he said.

MOYER APPOINTED CLERK OF SENATE

Ottawa, Dec. 21 (CP)—L. Clare Moyer, K.C., of Ottawa, one-time secretary to Prime Minister Mackenzie King, has been appointed clerk of the Senate, it is announced today. He succeeds A. E. Blount, retiring after nearly fifty years in the civil service, 21 of which he spent as clerk of the Senate.

Mr. Moyer, sixth clerk of the Senate since Confederation has had a varied career as a lawyer, soldier, newspaperman and secretary to the Prime Minister.

Born at Preston, Ont., fifty years ago he received his primary education in Galt and was graduated from the University of Toronto in 1910. After graduation he worked on the Toronto Star and Regina Leader until 1913 and was admitted to the Saskatchewan Bar in 1915.

HENS LAY OVERSIZED EGGS

Dr. Vizetelly Dies of Pneumonia, Earned Reputation as Lexicographer

New York, Dec. 21 (AP) — Dr. Frank H. Vizetelly, 74, widely known lexicographer, died today of pneumonia.

Vizetelly was a native of London where his father was a master printer and for a time was a special correspondent for French publications.

After that he conducted a publishing house in England. He came to New York in 1891. His first job was with Funk and Wagnalls and it was with them that he became internationally famous for his work on their dictionaries.

His interest in words—slang particularly—never languished, and he was forever checking newspapers and other publications seeking new and more expresive words and tracing their origin.

He was the author of more than a score of volumes on the English language and philological subjects.

TORONTO'S MAYOR NOMINATED FOR A SECOND TERM

Possibility There May be No Election for That Office

9 FOR CONTROL BOARD

Toronto, Dec. 21 (CP) — Mayor Ralph C. Day, Lewis Duncan, barrister, and Patrick Sullivan, former journalist, were nominated today for Toronto's 1939 mayoralty contest with prospect that Duncan might contest the issue with Mayor Day at the New Year's Day election.

Duncan, prominent attorney, said he would consider whether he would allow his name to go before the voters. He has until tomorrow night to qualify. It was expected Day, seeking a second term would qualify later today.

Sullivan, publisher of the weekly "Thunderer" which ceased publication here several years ago, was described in official quarters as ineligible to be a candidate as his name is not on the voters' list.

A Distinct Surprise.

Duncan, whose nomnaltion was a distinct surprise, said:

"The nomination is a compliment at a time when the proper discharge of the duties of the office of mayor demand a thorough investigation of municipal affairs in all aspects, but the issue goes deeper than that for we stand on the threshold of disaster without an immediate readjustment of taxation between municipal, provincial and federal authorities.

"I can not say whether I can accept. There are many matters to be considered."

Sullivan, a one-time policeman, took an aggressive interest in the mysterious disappearance in 1919 of Ambrose Small, Toronto theatre owner, and was responsible for several aspects of the case reaching court. He was unsuccessful in attempts to implicate Small's wife in the disappearance.

Nine For Controllers.

Nominated for controller were the following: Harry Bradley, Tim Buck, Controller Fred Conboy, William Croft, Controller Fred Hamilton, Controller Joseph McNish, W. D. Robbins, Robert H. Saunders and Controller William Wadsworth.

Buck, secretary of the Canadian Communist Party, is making his third attempt at election to the Board of Control. A year ago he made a strong run, placing in fifth place, less than 500 votes below the total obtained by the fourth successful candidate.

Robert Harding was on hand to run for mayor but he couldn't find two men who would nominate him.

"If any two men are brave enough, I'll run for mayor," said Harding in the nomination room. There was no response.

Charge Sabotage Ring Working In Spanish Cities

Barcelona, Dec. 21 (AP)—Discovery of a sabotage ring was announced on the front page of the semi-official newspaper Vanguardia today.

The announcement said the ring engaed in wrecking in the supply services in large cities had attempted to sow seeds of discontent among the civil population.

"All citizens are warned against hidden actions of the enemy, employing provocatory agents vilely to achieve what it is unable to gain on the battlefields," Vanguardia said. "The government has all the threads of the net in its hands and will be implacable in its punishment."

TIRE CHAINS NEEDED ON NORTHERN ROADS

Local motorists who are expecting to travel over the roads of the northern section of Hastings County at the present time should carry tire chains as an essential part of the equipment of their cars, warn local truck drivers who report roads extremely slippery owing to the snowfall this week and consequent melting and freezing yesterday. Considerable sanding of the roads has been carried out by employees of the highways department, but lesser travelled roads have not had this attention, it was stated.

COURT OF REVISION COMPLETES 24-DAY SITTING AT NAPANEE

Court of Revision which has been presided over by Judge G. E. Deroche of this city, Judge J. E. Madden of Napanee, and Sheriff Jos. Haycock of Napanee, was completed after a twenty-four day sitting at Napanee yesterday afternoon. The councils for the Townships of Ernesttown and Camden, had appealed against the equalized assessment for the town of Napanee, which is a part of the county of Lennox-Addington, and evidence was lengthy. The townships endeavored to show that the property in the town of Napanee was not assessed in keeping with township property. Court was adjourned yesterday until December 30th when solicitors will present their arguments.

LEAVENS BROTHERS FIND BUSINESS GOOD

According to reports from Toronto, the Leavens boys, Canada's pioneer aviators, former residents of Belleville, who made their first start in aviation in this district, have during the past few days sold new Taylorcraft airplanes to the Sudbury Flying Club and the Kirkland Air Services at Kirkland Lake. The Leavens brothers have become also the foremost instructors in flying in Toronto, from their own hangars at Barker Field there.

THE SHORTEST DAY

Residents of Belleville and the Dominion today observed the shortest day of the year.

Differing from other "shortest days," however, bright sunshine which gleamed in a million pin points from the light covering of snow on the ground stood out in contrast with the drabness and dullness of the proverbial short hours of daylight which have been experienced in years before.

From now on the days will lengthen until June 21. This morning the sun officially arose at 7.48 a.m., and will set at 4.42 p.m. On each succeeding day the hours of daylight will be lengthened by fractions of hours until the longest day or June 21st.

ACT OF BRAVERY TO RECEIVE RECOGNITION

Gordon Bailey, Stirling electrician employed by the Stirling Utilities Commission, who at the risk of his own life this summer climbed a pole to attempt the rescue of his superior, Frank Sprentall, when the latter was electrocuted while installing a hydro line in Stirling, has been placed on the list of the Royal Canadian Humane Association as one of the few Canadians who will receive a certificate from that Association.

Mr. Sprentall, who was rendered immediately unconscious by the shock of electrocution, hung suspended from the wires which were heavily charged. Oblivious of danger to himself, Bailey climbed the pole, secured the body of his boss with rope, then set out to secure help, the certificate will read.

SKATERS TAKE TOO MANY CHANCES SAYS CLUB CARETAKER

A fairly firm coating of ice covers the bay at the present time, but the surface is not too safe for extended skating, warns James Cook, caretaker of the Belleville Atheletic and Yachting Club who has been busy evenings keeping track of the younger and more daring skaters on the harbor ice near the clubhouse. For some days past skating here has been regulated by club members, and careful watch has been kept of the smaller ones to prevent accidents, in spite of the vigilance of club representatives a few skaters persist in taking too many chances, it is reported.

TWO S. A. BANDS SERENADING CITY HOMES

Both Salvation Army bands, the senior band under Bandmaster David Wardle and the junior band with Jack Green as leader, have been serenading this week and meeting with generous response on the part of the citizens. The bands play on alternate nights and travel by motor so that they are able to appear in many parts of the city during the evening.

With the junior band are playing this year three young girls, Ruth Alderman, daughter of Major Alderman, playing the trombone, Margaret Stebbings, trombone, and Dorothy Stebbings, her sister, playing cornet. These young ladies have been taking part with the other members of the band in the serenades.

Of note is the fact that the two Stebbings girls are members of a musical family. Their brother Bobbie plays the baritone instrument in the junior band, their father, Mr. Harry Stebbings, is second cornet in the senior band and their mother plays the cornet with the junior band though on account of recent illness she has not been able to join in the serenades.

The familiar kettle of the Salvation Army has collected a fair amount of givings on the part of the passers-by and motorists on Front Street and it is expected that the collection will equal that of last year.

ISSUE INVITATIONS

Special invitations to children of the members of the Imperial Veterans' Club of Belleville to attend the annual Christmas Tree entertainment and presentation of gifts are in the mail today. This procedure was decided upon at a special meeting of the club held last night, under the chairmanship of President James Shepherd.

Children are asked to be at the Armouries by four-thirty o'clock on Friday afternoon, so that proceedings can start on time. A fine program has been arranged by Lieut. Fred Jobson.

WEEK OF PRAYER PLANS ARE LAID

Belleville Ministerial Association executive has arranged for the week of prayer which will be held on the first week in the New Year. Services will all be conducted in St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church from Monday, January 2nd to Friday, January 6. Ministers of the city will have charge and speak at these services.

GEORGE SHEPHARD WINS AT CAPITOL

Boy Tenor of This City Voted Best in Amateur Show

Ten-year-old George Shephard, Belleville's boy tenor, sang his way into the hearts of the Belleville theatre-going public last Friday night when he was the popular choice of the amateurs contesting on Ken Soble's "Tour for Talent" program after the balloting at the Capitol Theatre.

Second in the choice in the balloting was George Gulliver and Cecil Rogers, accordian and guitar duets, giving Belleville the top honors in the third consecutive "Tour for Talent" program at the Capitol Theatre. In clear, pleasing notes young Shephard sang "Cathedral in the Pines."

George Shepard, who resides at 125 West Bridge St., and the instrumental pair, who finished second last week, will be the guest artists at the fourth of Ken Soble's "Tour for Talent" programs at the Capitol Theatre on Friday night. Auditions for talented young entertainers are held each Friday afternoon on the theatre stage to which Manager W. Tyers extends an invitation to all local entertainers as regards age or previous experience.

The winner of the Belleville "Talent Tour" will appear on Ken Soble's All-Canadian amateur broadcast later in the season.

What Are Manners Compared to Hunger?

Twas a few nights before Christmas. A group of underprivileged children, guests of members of a city organization, were in the throes of gastronomic delight. Delicious turkey, vegetables and all the trimmin's disappeared rapidly down throats that rarely swallowed such viands.

A small boy, eyes shining with joy, but with hunger still unappeased ate rapidly of the "goodies" placed in front of him. Suddenly he stood up, reached long arms across the table and drew to his plate a dish of vegetables.

"Johnny," she said sweetly, "don't you know that is the wrong thing to do? If you wish anything ask the person seated at your side to pass it. What would your mother say if she saw you reaching for food instead of asking for it."

"She wouldn't say nuthin'" retorted the incorrigible one, "but if I ast for it, she'd want to know what the h--- was wrong wit me arms."

Sidney Council Approves Action to End Sunday Dancing

Rescinding of a motion and recommendation that the 1939 council of Sidney Township "take steps to end Sunday dancing in the township between the hours of midnight Saturday night and eight o'clock Monday morning", featured the final meeting of the current council following the hearing of a petition of representative members of the Belleville and Central Hastings Ministerial Association.

After hearing the opinions of several of the speakers, members of council expressed themselves as being favorable to the recommendation, and concurred in it being passed to the new council for action.

Other business included the passing of bylaws restricting the speed of vehicles on certain roads in the township and to provide polling places, clerks, and Deputy-Returning officers for the purpose of holding elections next year.

Taxes on township property were ordered struck off the collectors rolls, and the purchase of a snowplough subject to approval of the district engineer was authorized.

Commends Service Clubs for Work At Christmas Time

Mayor Bone today paid sincere tribute to the efforts of Belleville service clubs, fraternal organizations and charity societies for their work or behalf of the city's needy, particularly at Christmas time.

"What a drab and dreary world it would be if we did not have these organizations who dedicate themselves to the work of bringing just a little cheer to those who need it most," he reflected.

"Make no mistake, there is a lot of unemployment and need in Belleville at the present time, and a lot of families are going to have a hard time getting by. Here is where our service clubs and other organizations step in to do a work which I cannot commend too highly, or explain how much I appreciate.

"In order that there may be no families on the forgotten list, I'd like to remind all those who need help to register at once with the Central Relief Office. Those who need help will certainly get it, if I can do anything about it. It would be a good idea for all clubs and other organizations which are to distribute baskets and other things to compare notes with the relief office in order that no duplication will be made."

In his message to Belleville residents, Mayor Bone advised just two simple rules for the best enjoyment of the Christmas season, "Drink sensibly. Drive safely."

"Make it a joyous Christmas. Have all the celebration you can afford. Belleville and other cities do not celebrate enough, and there is too much drabness in the world during everyday life. This city intends to put no damper on any worthwhile celebration of the season. Make it as happy an occasion as you can," urged the Mayor.

BUSINESS IS HEALTHY

Buyng during the present Christmas season has been good, according to merchants. All the signs on the streets and in the shops are proof of the large buying interest. Merchants point out that business even before this week was ushered in has been up to the record and in many cases passed the record of early buying in previous years.

More wintry weather conditions have accelerated the trade since the last days of last week. Now the setting is just what is desired for the last half of the week before Christmas. The weather seems to put the spirit of Christmas into everything.

The next three days will be strenuous days with two large markets included. That means large buying on the part of the city dwellers and the people from the farms and villages and towns around about.

DATE OF GREAT ANNUAL FESTIVAL

No time has so universal an interest as Christmas with its central feature Christmas Day to mark the birthday of Jesus. The beginning of the celebration of Christmas is lost in primitive days of the Christian Church. There are said to be some references to its having been flourishing in the time of Tebephorus, 138-161 A.D. These are believed to be spurious and the first direct mention is made of the festival in the reign of the Emperor Commodus who ruled from the year 180 to 192. It is spoken of by Clement of Alexandria in the third century. Diocletian hearing that a number of Christians were gathered together in a certain building celebrating the anniversary of the founder of their religion, caused the church to be ignited and all the worshippers perished in flames.

The early church had no fixed date of celebration; by some branches the festival was observed in May, by some in January, and by others concurrently with Epiphany. It is believed that the day now fixed is not the exact time as December is the rainy season in Palestine. The choice of this season is probably due to the general recognition that the winter solstice was the turning point of the year; all things then seemed to prepare for a fresh period of life and activity after the winter sleep of death. Such a belief was current among all nations and the one which especially influenced the Christian Church was the Roman festival of the winter solstice, celebrated on December 25. The Celtic and Germanic tribes held the season of Christmas in veneration from the earliest times and the Norsemen believed that special evidence could be obtained of the existence and work of their deities, who were supposed to be present and active on earth from December 25 to January 6. Many other ancient beliefs and customs regarding their period have been handed down to our times and have crept into Christmas usage.

The lighting of the Yule log, now fallen into disuse, is an inheritance from Lithuanic lore. The practice of decorating churches is believed to resemble pagan rites in its origin, and the mistletoe used was the sacred plant of the Druids. The ancient Romans presented gifts. Scotland in old days took a long time to celebrate Christmas from Dec. 18th to Jan 7th.

The Christian church raised and ennobled many rites above their heathen associations and as a result the liturgy was formed and dramatic representations of the birth and early events in the life of Christ were instituted. Hence came the manger-songs, carols, special music for Christmas. The legends and rites were very numerous in the Middle Ages, most of them having since been lost or fallen into disuse. Charles Dickens revived the interest in them. The Christmas tree is believed to date back to the Roman saturnalia, Santa Claus has a counterpart in every land.

USES OF CHRISTMAS TREE

Christmas trees have developed into a large business. Eighty per cent of last year's cutting of these evergreens in Canada was shipped out of the country to the United States, so heavy is the demand. That is four millions were set up in American homes, while one million were used in Canada.

Lest there should be any fear that the cutting of so large an annual harvest should be thought as a poor and wasteful policy, the Department of Mines and Resources at Ottawa, points out that under proper control and regulation, there is no threat of denuding the forests. It is stated that the entire crop of trees could be produced for all time on one hundred square miles of forest area.

A bulletin of the Canadian National Railways points out that such Yuletide trees are regarded as undergrowth, sapping the strength from more hardy specimens and retarding their growth. "In stands of marketable timber this undergrowth would have to be cleared out any way."

For what there is in outlay, something over half a million dollars in trade, the Christmas tree gives perhaps as great value as, if not greater value than, almost any product. The occupants of the home know what measure of decoration these trees make, accentuating the warmth, cosiness and content of the modern indoors as contrasted with the winter without. The four million trees sent to the United States are seen and enjoyed by millions in the homes in the United States and in the stores and on the streets. In Canada a great majority of the population see the green trees put to ideal use.

British Columbia exports a large amount of mistletoe and holly, the latter of which makes a fine appeal on account of the large red berries.

Decoration with Christmas trees is ideal use.

"To succeed in the world, it is much more necessary to possess the penetration to discern who is a fool, than to discover who is a clever man."—Talleyrand.

CHRISTMAS

Now in hall and cottage, holly wreaths are hanging,
Homes are bright and cheery with the Christmas glow;
Back to home and fireside wayward feet are trending,
Once again they're children, as in the long ago.

Every care and worry to the wind they're flinging,
Careless of the sorrows that the years have brought.
Oh! the happy spirit of good-will they're bringing,
Counting all the passions of the years as nought.

Gladsome is the greeting, free the joyous giving,
In it does the semblance of our Lord appear.
Oh! the Christmas Spirit makes a joy of living—
That its tender tokens might last throughout the year.

HOME, SWEET HOME, IS NEVER SO SWEET AS AT CHRISTMAS TIME—and this comes home with extra force to folks away from home—that is away from "the old home", the real home that the mind ever turns to. Hence the remembrances, received by those unable to return to the old home for Christmas are doubly esteemed and the opening of these parcels generally brings a tear or two, generated by sad, sweet recollections. This was brought vividly to mind by a letter in the mail this morning addressed to this Great Family Journal from Cuba bringing tidings and good wishes from some of the folks away from home. The letter was appreciated as one of the brightest stars in our Christmas constellation of Good Will, as bringing Good Tidings from our very good frend, J. J. Brickley, Banes, Oriente, Cuba, and his charming wife and family. J. J. Brickley was born and brought up in the vicinity of Belleville, his father being a successful farmer. Young Brickley elected to follow the profession of agriculture, of which he made a close study at school and college. The United Fruit Company, capitalized at many millions, with immense holdngs in South and Central America and the West Indies, secured his services as an agricultural expert, and his duties are largely confined to Cuba. Each summer Mr. and Mrs. Brickley put their motor car on board ship, sail to New York City, and then motor to Canada and the old home, Mrs. Brickley coming originally from Roslin. We pass on Mr. Brickley's letter to the Family knowing that it will prove interesting.

"Enclosed find check in payment for one year's renewal subscription to your admirable paper. I may say that the arrival of your publication from seven to ten days after date of mailing, and often in lots of two or three, is as welcome as a letter from home. Short wave radio and the local Spanish papers keep us up to date on world news, but the Ontario is our means of retaining our contact with the daily happenings in the section of Canada that Mrs. Brickley and I are so glad to consider as our homeland. Moreover the column conducted under the pseudonym of "The Lamplighter" always has our preferred attention, and comments, opinions and reminiscenses "grave and gay" are thoroughly enjoyed by us. Figuratively speaking the world is not as large as it used to be, as your writings would indicate that your periodicals and radio programs are very similar to those enjoyed by us. Probably, however, your writings have the greatest appeal for us when they hark back and recall memories of younger days spent in the rural environment of Hastings County. Not that I consider that such times were better than present day life, for I do believe that during the past twenty-five years, the enjoyment of life has improved for the average individual; but those days of youth have certain sentimental attachments that one never shakes off regardless of how distant one may have travelled or how completely one has changed his environment. In recognition of the pleasure we receive from your column I am sending you a few local items of interest which you are at liberty to use as you wish."

Thanks to Friend Brickley for his kind words and appreciation of this Great Family Journal, and for his paragraphs on conditions in Cuba which the Family will no doubt find as interesting as we did from the preview. Tomorrow's column will be devoted to Cuba and the observations and impressions of a Hastings County boy who has made good in a big way far from that Little Red School House, S.S. No. 6, Tyendinaga—J. J. Brickley, Superintendent of Agriculture, United Fruit Company, Banes Dvision, Banes, Oriente, Cuba.

A spoilt boy was sent by his loving parents to a big public school. He had been strictly enjoined to write home regularly and tell them all about his new life.

At the end of the week his first letter arrived: "There are 670 boys here; I wish there were 669".

LOOKING BACKWARD

20 YEARS AGO

Dec. 21st, 1918.

Mr. Fred G. Osborne, wholesale and retail stationer of Calgary, Alberta, who was born and educated in Belleville, has been elected an alderman of Calgary, coming fifth at the polls. Mr. Osborne left here ten years ago to reside in Calgary. Friends here will be pleased to learn of his success.

Mrs. L. M. Young and son Raymond, of Toronto, are here to spend the Christmas vacation with her sister, Mrs. J. W. Barlow, Forin Street.

Mrs. W. O. Kerr and son Edgar of Ernfold, Sask., are visiting her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Thos. Thompson, Sinclair Street.

Dec. 21st, 1908.

The Belleville senior hockey players are coming along in fine shape and promise to be ready for all-comers when the bell rings. Some of the boys show cclass and glide around in midseason form; the others are ambitious and enthusiastic and a few more practices will put them in good shape. Pepper and Bert Allen are sure fixtures and it looks like Burke and Geen for the wings. Both are in excellent trim. With Sandy Burrows to coach them the boys will soon be able to put up a game to enthuse Belleville hockey lovers and they are numerous.

At the annual meeting of Court Moira I. O. F., the following officers were elected: B. Mallory, C.R.; H. L. Ingram, C.D.; E. Harrow, V.C.R.; A. Walker, R. S.; J. W. London, F.S.; Col. S. S. Lazier, Treas.; W. H. Cronk, Orator; C. Ruttan, S.W.; J. Birse, J.W.; T. Hill, S.B.; E. H. Greatrix, J.B.; Trustees, A. McGinnis and J. C. Balls; Auditors, W. J. Campbell and C. L. Walters. A donation was made by the Court to the local branch of the Children's Aid Society and to the charitable work of the Salvation Army.

The annual meeting of the Quinte Hockey League was held at Hotel Quinte last evening. The following delegates were present: Belleville, F. M. McKeown and Glencoe G. Hulme; Picton, Messrs. McKenzie and McLean; Deseronto, S. Bartha; Napanee, G. E. Hall. F. M. McKeown was appointed chairman and the following officers were elected: Hon. President, J. F. Baird; Hon. Vice President, W. Hatch, Deseronto; President, H. Corby, M.P.; Vice President, Wm. Moffatt, Picton; First Vice-President, W. T. Waller, Napanee. The trophy to be played for is a handsome cup donated by Mr. H. Corby. It was decided that in case of default the team defaulting is to pay the sum of $25 to the team they default. All ties are to be played off in Belleville except in case Belleville ties with another team; in this case the game is to be played upon neutral ice and receipts are to be divided between the opposing teams.

40 YEARS AGO

Dec. 21st, 1888

At the annual meeting of the Sons of England the following officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, Thomas Weymark; Vice-President, Geo. Bennett; Financial Secretary, Henry Tammadge; Recording Secretary, Wm. Hopkins; Treasurer, Walter Alford; Chaplain, Rev. A. L. Geen; Surgeon, Dr. R. Tracy; Inner Guard, W. Kemp; Outer Guard, A. Gael; Trustees, J. W. London and Geo. Twining; Auditors, F. Slater, E. Hayne and S. Burrows; Managing Committee, A. Wensley, S. Wedden, W. Creeper, J. Luscombe, F Palos and R. Oliphant; Grand Lodge Delegates, R. Croft Hulme and J. W. London.

Boys and girls were coasting on Murney's Hill, West Belleville, last night.

The candidates for aldermanic honors number thirty-five and a contest in every ward is possible.

The following are new telephone subscribers: W. B. Northrup, law office; Nelson Lingham, residence; Mrs. Wilson, grocer, Foster Ave.; F. E. O'Flynn, law office; James Wallace, residence; J. A. Roy, residence; Bateman & Rowe, flour and feed.

Owing to the absence of the police magistrate, the bench was this morning by Ald. Bogart and occupied at the court proceedings Ald. Anderson.

Friendly Spirit of Home

The house and outbuildings on our new homestead, while amongst the simplest of the surrounding farm homes, were adequate to our needs, and more convenient and nearer the standard of others in our community than the more passionately loved older home had been.

Of course we heated and cooked with stoves in winter, and burned wood that was cut and hauled from our own wood lots, as did almost everybody else. We washed in a basin in the kitchen, but there were the china bowl and pitcher (with accessories) for company in the the spare bedroom. . . .

The front door of our house led directly into the parlor and behind it lay the other room (as it was always called), where we sat in the evening and ate when we had company and occasionally at other times, in spite of my father's loud dissent. He much preferred the kitchen, where his old chair was placed beside one window, and our beloved old drop-leaf cherry table to which my first high chair had been drawn, stood against another. Here, too, were color and light: the huge wall map of the world from which I had learned my letters in infancy; rows of potted geraniums in the window, with a certain rattail cactus favored by my mother because it savored of a foreign land; a blue glass hen on the clock shelf in which my father kept horehound drops, and the clock itself, with pointed spires and a shiny pendulum of brass dependably swinging to and fro across a circle clear glass in a painted scene.

The ticking of the clock and its musical rhythmic informing of the hours, the purring of a cat on a cushioned chair, and the muted burble of a wood fire in the stove were part of the friendly spirit of our own kitchen. — From "Millbrook," by Della T. Lutes. (Boston: Little, Brown.)

UNBORN CLAIMED

An unusual case revealing, in all its cruel refinement, what the worship of the State means to individuals, is reported of a Canadian young woman who married a German national at Kitchener. By so doing; of course, she became a German citizen as well as the husband. The couple went last summer on a trip to visit the husband's folks in Germany. At the German border on their return, officials discovered that the wife was about to become a mother. Her departure was prevented, because if the child is a boy the State exercises its sovereign claim on him. If a girl, mother and infant will be allowed to leave Germany. The husband is back at work in Kitchener; the wife is still in Germany.

If there is any moral to this incident at all, it is that once out of Germany, a man should stay out. It is presumed that even this German national, resident in Canada finds it difficult to worship the Nazi State.—St. Catharines Standard.

That Body of Yours

By James W. Barton M.D.

Digestive Disturbances Due to Emotional Unrest

A few years ago when a patient consulted the physician about symptoms which he thought were due to heart, stomach, liver, or other organ, the physician, finding no organic trouble after careful examination, would tell him his trouble was all in his mind and to forget about it. This certainly helped many of these cases because once the patient realized that there was nothing really wrong with him, he forgot about himself. His symtoms promptly disappeared.

There are many suffering with various symptoms yet the reassurance of the physician that there is no organic trouble does not remove the symptoms. The reason that the symptoms remain is because the individual has worries, problems, disappointments in his life, and the upset mind can upset the various organs and processes of the body.

In speaking of these nervous, upset patients with various heart, stomach, liver, or intestinal symptoms, Dr. Walter Alvarez, in Medical Clinics of North America, says

"Only a little encouragement and reassurance is needed by the sensible patient who says, "Well, if there is nothing serious growing in my abdomen or my head, I can easily stand this gas pain or distress or headache. I will go back to work and stop worrying". But bromides and a high-vitamin diet won't help a bit if the patient's indigestion happens to be due to milk or eggs and it will not help if the abdominal distress and soreness in lower bowel are due to constipation which cannot be controlled by a bulky diet. Bromides and a diet will not help the overworked girl with a sensitive colon (large intestine) who is terrifically unhappy because her beau cannot marry her and at the some time support his aged parents. Nor will they help the woman who is fighting with her husband and trying to make up her mind about a divorce."

The first thought then when symptoms are present is to undergo a thorough examination by physician and dentist. If no organic condition, is found, then question yourself as to whether your emotions —anxieties, disappointments, difficulties—disturb you to any great extent.

There is always the possibility also that stomach and intestinal upsets, headaches, rapid heart, breathlessness and other symptoms are due to sensitiveness to certain foods.

Trailer Travel

ED NOTE: Mr. Arthur Jones is now located at Little River Station, Miami, Florida. He expects to be there until Spring. From time to time he will contribute short articles on life, as he sees it, in this interesting city.

x x x x x x

Miami, Florida, Dec. 14, 1938—A well known writer for National Magazines has just moved from Clearwater to this city. He states "a writer has to get ideas and this is a city full of ideas." From the short time we have been in Miami we are already quite in accord with this statement. Interesting people live here and visit here. Everything goes on in Miami and on top of it all there are the beaches of the Atlantic with the warm Gulf Stream just three miles offshore. This special writer for the Great Family Journal has reached 'Trail's End' for him. Miami is his turning point. We will not haul our trailer a bit further south. In fact it is parked up for the winter in Ollie Trout's "Trailer Paradise," on Biscayne Blvd. We mean just that—Trailer Paradise. The route supplied by my friend, Mr. Everett Mastin formerly of Belleville and now of Miami and Fort Lauderdale is a good one and a short one and above all, a safe one. Actual mileage to wicked Miami is 1739 miles, marked from Post Office at Belleville.

The highways have been made much more safe for motorists. An enterprising garage man between here and West Palm Beach has this to say, "I invested in a modern wrecking outfit, large powerful crane to lift the heavy trucks out of the ditch, then along came the painted lines to separate lanes with other safety devices, Since then it don't pay." There is no doubt about the painted lines, especially the centre line, which has become much wider. We struck a few miles of pavement, not marked, and felt actually lost. We had a great feeling of relief when the centre line began again. We drive with this slogan continually in mind, "Everybody has the right of way over me." It is the reckless boys that get into the most trouble. In a heck of a hurry to get someplace, and nowhere to go, and nothing to do when they get there. However it is quite possible to drive from Belleville to Miami in three days. With the speed necessary and long driving hours nothing goes wrong with the steering gear or other important parts. Our neighbor from Chicago informs us he has driven 800 miles in a day. We found we could make more mileage more easily as we approached the deep South and thereafter our record for one day on this jaunt was 223 miles. We make more stops than most cars. Yesterday we had our first dip in the Ocean at Miami Beach and found the water pleasant but the air a little chilly.

A. JONES.

Thoughts of an Old Fellow

Be thankful all the day long for all the goodness and loving kindness bestowed on you and yours and for the beauties of creation and in the lives of men.

Be thankful that here are so many fine and wholesome men and women. Their friendship and companionship is worth more than incense.

The great purpose of life should be to help bring about the Kingdom of God on Earth. The day of Jahve, the early Hebraic God of Wrath and Indignation, has passed away. Today, we worship the God of gentleness and kindliness. Make your neighbors happy; your neighbors, foremost of whom are the members of your family. Make them happier, not only by thought, but by word and deed. In making others happier, you make yourself happier.

Be considerate, tolerant to your employees; to the halt and maimed, the stupid, the afflicted, the second-raters.

Consider your caddie. The rich cub with his selfish heavy leather bag, bulging with a score of clubs and a dozen of balls, never carried a rifle and pack in the Great War.

Be ever ready to praise others for the good work done on their jobs, the fine shot on the green, the well-played hand. It is the kindly words over little things that better the world. All criticism and no praise does not bring sunlight into any window. Praise children for their tiny achievements. They thrill when someone they love says "good work". Such words lift them to do better the next time. Pray to make at least one child happy each day.

Take the opportunity to tell your loved women-kind how well they look, or how becoming the gown or hat is, or how excellent a luncheon you have had. It not only gives pleasure, but it helps to better looks and better meals.

A good wife is the blessed sunshine which brightens the home all the day long.

A well-ordered home and healthy happy children and a becoming interest in one's surroundings is an infinitely better job than gluttonies of missionary meetings or bridge—idem.

Decent gaiety and cheerfulness do more wholesome good than the tristesse, sombreness of our Puritanic Ancestors.

Alas and Alack! O tempora, O mores!

Good manners are a grand form of unselfishness. The man who wears neither coat nor tie, or reads magazines at meals lacks consideration for others.

A little paint and lipstick is a dangerous thing, splash deep or taste not the demi-mondaine Spring.

You will receive your due if you associate with one who continuously refuses to play the game.

Blessed is he who, having amassed wealth honorably, has a heart that is touched by the calls of the needy. When your heart is touched act at once or you may lose the opportunity of doing some act of gentle kindness.

The man who brags that he has kept each and every one of the ten commandments and has never been tight seldom lives up to the Gospel for All Saints Day.

Curious, that the man grown rich by raping the Sabines, i.e., pillaging the weak and infirm, whether corporations or individuals, often becomes the saver of souls by the wholesale, the boss of welfare associations, and leader in churches where the pulpit is ruled from the pew, and is alternately harsh and affectionate with his family and employees.

Plutarch wrote that Solomon had said that laws were made for the poor to obey and the rich to avoid. The State deserves its dues. Doubtless Solon would have agreed to the machine gunning of the big evader of taxes, the capitalist who submitted a false statement of his company's doings, the man who made his pile in a country and erected himself into a trust or hiked away to the Jerseys or West Indies.

Most professional men who make more than what is necessary to provide their comforts, speculate. Don't. Invest in four per cents.

Stick to your last. When work is slack, stick closer or some other will catch your crumbs.

Don't become annoyed should an old and well-tried friend paint your shortcomings. Hasten to clean the slate.

Doctors should be prohibited from attending those over 65 years of age, and in time the world would acquiesce in the snuffing out at 70 of the halt, the maimed, the independant, and the weary. It would be twice blessed; to him that gives the taxpayer, and to him that takes the sleeping draught. Domine refugiam.

Some grown-old unemployed, bored with existence, tend to become peevish and censorious, while others bless their children for their daily acts of kindness, and are thankful every time the grandchildren lovingly say "Grand-dad."

One Sunday evening, in the Isle d'Orleans, I visited a farm to enquire about some cases of strawberries. Madame brought me into the dining-room, and there I saw seated at table, a hale and hearty very old habitant. He had done his bit improving the heritage (la terre). As the sun sank over the hill, a wee grandchild (petite fille) lovingly said "Grandpere." The old face gladdened up. To me, it seemed to say: "Yes, a hardworking life is worthwhile if at its end some dear wee child will lovngly say "Grandpere!"

When most of our friends have passed on, and the remnant look like old crocks, have a snap taken of yourself.

Few go through a long life without being hacked in the scrimmage. As we approach the end here and become more lonely, the faces of our beloved dead come before us oftener, and we thank them more and more for their many acts of kindness. Sometimes they knew we wanted to fight it out alone and they were silent and yet we knew of their help. Did we thank them enough? God rest their souls, and may we have the joy of thanking them again and again.

The Empire's Healthiest Spot

The population of the Empire is growing, according to the latest government blue book. Only one or two areas, notabl y Sarawak and Gambia, show a substantial decrease since the 1931 census, although the figure for Eire, given separately, shows that there has been a slight decrease from 2,957,000 in 1931 to 2,944,000. Increases are shown practically everywhere else.

Britain differs from many parts of the Empire in that it has more women than men—nearly two million in fact. In Australia, New Zealand, South Africa, Newfoundland, the Gold Coast, and Hong Kong, to mention but a few, men predominate. In the Falkland islands the proportion is roughly two men for every woman.

The healthiest place in the British Empire is the Cayman islands, Jamaica, with a death rate of six per thousand. The island of St. Helena comes next with a rate of 7.3 and the Falkland islands is third in the list, with 8.4 per thousand. Australia, Canada, New Zealand, Rhodesia and Bermuda are all healthier spots than Britain to judge by their death rates, which are less than that of 12.6 per thousand for this country.

Not-so-healthy spots are the Fiji islands, Jersey, Eire, Gibraltar, Zanzibar, Cyprus and the Malay States. Hong Kong with a highest death rate of 34.5 per thousand easily heads the list, followed by the Mauritius 28.8 North Borneo 25.2, the Straits Settlements 21.9. Malta has a death rate of 20 per thousand.

Notable fluctuations in the movements of people are shown in the immigration and emigration figures. Ten years ago 136,000 left the United Kingdom for various parts of the Empire, but last year the figure was only 31,800, although this showed a slight increase on the 1936 figure.

Canada, Australia and New Zealand all show a big drop in the number of immigrants in the last ten years, but most of the dominions showed slightly better figures for 1937 over those of 1936.

The highest rates of wages were to be obtained in the United Kingdom, but the cost of living in this country was the highest with the exception of Eire. With an index number of 100 for 1929 Britain showed 104—the highest for ten years—Canada varied from 64 for agricultural workers to 104, Australia 83 to 89, New Zealand 100-102, and South Africa 100. The cost of living index in Britain was 154 compared with Canada 129, Australia 129, New Zealand 147, South Africa 117, Bombay 106 and Southern Rhodesia 104.

The grand total of the trade of the Empire was $13,215 millions last year—the best for eight years—but the 1928 figure was $16,535 millions. Ten years ago, however, 74.1 per cent. of the Empire trade was with foreign countries, but last year the percentage was 68.6—the difference being to the advantage of the Empire.—Hamilton Spectator.

POLISH MARKS

The St. Marys Journal-Argus reports an unusual case of a man who does not know what to do with his money:

Andrew Woods, Great War veteran and hired man on the farm of Ernie Alderson near Kintore, has several large denomination Polish mark bills, which he is anxious to exchange into real money. He got the bills while serving with the British army in Constantinople after the Great War and at the time of the crisis caused by the late Kemal Ataturk seizing power and threatening to oust the victorious allies from the Dardanelles demilitarized zone. One of the Polish bills is for 50,000 marks and the rest for lesser amounts. It is probably, that Poland like European states has by this time, repudiated this money and thus the paper may now be worthless.

They'll Do It Every Time :-: By Jimmy Hatlo

WELL, GENTLEMEN, I SEE IT IS GETTING VERY LATE. WE WILL ADJOURN THE SALES MEETING UNLESS- AHEM-SOMEBODY HAS A QUESTION.
BOSS-I'D LIKE TO ASK YOU TO EXPLAIN THE NEW DEALER CONTRACT AGAIN. I DON'T THINK IT'S QUITE CLEAR TO SOME OF US.
THAT DUMMY! IF THE OLD MAN GETS WARMED UP ON THAT AGAIN WE'RE STUCK HERE FOR ANOTHER HOUR.
MY WIFE'S WAITING DINNER FOR ME NOW. PROBABLY THINKS I'M MAKING WHOOPEE SOMEWHERE.

Madoc W. I. Has Christmas Program

Madoc.—The local meeting of the Women's Institute was held on Friday afternoon at 3 p.m. at the Community Hall. The room was decorated in keeping with the holiday season and the Christmas tree was laden with white gifts. After the business was transacted carol singing was enjoyed for a while. Mrs. Major reported for the Girls' Sewing Club and announced that tickets would be sold on a very pretty soft cushion to help defray expenses of the class. Mrs. C. Moon reported for the Relief Committee.

After some discussion, Mrs. M. Smith moved that the society hold a travelling bridge party, seconded by Mrs. A. Smith. Several homes were offered and committees formed. Besdames Davis, Dymond, McCarey, Hart. Lunch committee, Mrs. Tanner, Major, A. Smith, McCarey, assistants, Mrs. L. Ashley and C. Moon. The roll call showed 31 members and 4 visitors present.

Current Events given by Mrs. B Tanner related many facts pertaining to royalty. Mrs. T. L. Nickle substituting for Mrs. Jas. Aylesworth, gave the topic, "The Christmas Story." In this the question, "Is commercialism pushing Jesus out of our Christmas relations?" was discussed at some length. Mrs. McCarey continued the lessons on Buymanship dealing with shopping hints and testing cotton.

The contest, which has been running since last May, closed with the December meeting with the following results: Mrs. Dymond 51 members and 418 points; Mrs. Burris 41 members and 324 points. Appreciation of the earnest efforts of the leaders was voiced by Mrs. Phillips and corroborated by a hearty clap.

A duet, "Silent Night" was sung by Margaret White and Betty Phillips, accompanied by Betty on her guitar. A vote of thanks, moved by Mrs. White, seconded by Mrs. Nickle, was extended to Mrs. Aylesworth and Mrs. C. Whytock for their splendid papers. Meeting closed and with Mrs. E. Phillips presiding at the tea table, lunch was served by the hostesses.

Aiken's Church Annual S. S. Entertainment

Miss Helen Card, teacher at the Hogle School, held the annual Christmas Concert at Aiken's Church on Friday evening last. Rev. H. B. Johnson pastor of the church, acted as chairman for the splendid program prepared by Miss Card and presented so capably by the pupils. Recitations of welcome were given by Ray Scott and Grant Kells, also a Welcome Song by the School.

Musical selections included a cornet solo by Gordon Spafford, a former pupil of the school; a piano solo by Miss Jewel Bailey and Carl Moon, and Mrs. Lee Grills and Mrs. Harleigh Hamilton, also a vocal solo by Dorothy Ray and a vocal duet by Evelyn and Dorothy Day.

The spirit of Christmas was manifest in the songs, the dialogues, the bell drill, pantomime and other exercises and much credit is due Miss Card and her pupils, also her assistants, Mrs. Percy Hamilton, Mrs. Gerald Brickman, Mrs. Leon McMullen, Mrs. Edgar Ray and Mrs. Harleigh Hamilton, who presided at the piano, and Mr. Wilmot Bailey who secured extra lighting for the church.

The proceeds of the entertainment goes to the school and the Busy Bee Mission Band of which Miss Card is superintendent.

Mrs. Clarence Hay spent a few days last week with her sister, Mrs. Selburn Westover.

Mrs. Bert Palmer left on Friday for Napanee where she will spend the next few weeks with relatives.

Mr. Everett Bowers spent the tea hour on Sunday with Mr. Arthur Bowers and family, Belleville.

Mrs. Albert Page and Mrs. Wm. McMullen spent a few days last week with the latter's daughter, Mrs. Earl Stickle, Johnstown.

Miss Vivian May and Mr. Bernard May entertained friends from Belleville on Sunday evening.

TRENTON

ALLEGED CULPRIT SOON CAPTURED

James Barclay, Owen Sound — Arrested on Charge of Theft

Trenton, Dec. 21 (Special)—When James Barclay, 19, alias James Martin, of Owen Sound, wants anything, he wants it very much. On Sunday morning he wanted an overcoat to replace his own shabby garment, so he walked into the basement of King St. United Church and into the choir room during morning service, calmly selected an overcoat the property of Claude Huffman, Dufferin Ave., a scarf belonging to Gerald Ireland, Victoria Ave., and a pair of gloves owned by H. R. Patterson of the R.C.A.F., and strolled away. When worshippers left the church an hour later and when members of the choir came down from the service the theft was discovered and the police were notified. But by this time James Barclay, in his borrowed finery, was far away.

Police officers immediately began a search, and acting on a hunch that the theft had been committed by a transient, and armed with a description of the coat, they began combing the town. Soon after Chief Bain saw a man walking down the C.N.R. tracks near the Dundas Street station with a garment similar, and a short time later with Constable Taylor, they visited the "jungle" near the water tower. Here Taylor surprised a lone hobo, who when searched was found to be carrying a revolver. He gave his name as Joseph Thompson, 25, alias David Mackenzie, no home, and was lodged in jail in Belleville awaiting trial on Friday.

By this time C.P.R. Constable Penlington had been notified to look over all wanderers near the railroad, and when he telephoned in a few minutes later that there was one man who refused to get close to him, Constable Taylor once again made a capture when he drove up in the police cruiser, removing his cap until right beside his man whom he nabbed in a hurry. Barclay will answer for his crime on Friday when he will face Magistrate E. J. Butler in local court.

The local police force is considered one of the most efficient in the province, judged according to the size of the town; and smart work like these Sunday captures, in which not only one culprit but two were brought in within three hours of the theft, gives a clear idea of the efficiency with which they operate.

Monday night saw the gala opening of the new Hummell Club on Dundas Street, in the Aziz block, with a large crowd inaugurating the opening of Trenton's new night spot. Receiving the guests were the proprietress, Miss M. M. Robinson, together with Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Ireland, Mr. and Mrs. Mark Tripp, Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Potts, Mr. and Mrs. H. Robinson and Mr. and Mrs. B. F. Joyce. Music, supplied by an R.C.A.F. orchestra, was excellent and the affair was most enjoyable. The new club will operate each night of the week from now on, with cover charge entitling each couple to food and dancing. Tables around the wall and dancing space in the centre give the club a cabaret appearance.

Members of the Moose Cub Pack plan to hold their annual Christmas concert in their hall on Friday evening, all funds thus raised going to make a summer camp fund for use next season.

Christmas markets will be held on Thursday and again on Saturday of this week.

Pupils of public schools are looking forward anxiously to holidays. As usual the closing of school will be marked with singing of carols at the post office and distribution of candy by Rotarians.

Mr. Elwood Swayne, Temagimi, who has been spending a few days with his aunt and uncle, Mrs. and Mr. W. S. Fairhead, North Front Street, returned home today, accompanied by his sister, Miss Marjorie Swayne, O.S.D., Trent Road.

Mrs. Harry Poste, Toronto, is home for the Christmas holidays visiting her parents, Mr. and Mrs. G. T. Woodley.

Mrs. James Harold, Hillcrest Avenue, has received word of the death in Minneapolis, Sunday night of her brother-in-law, Mr. William Harold.

In a beautifully decorated hall the Women of the Moose Belleville Chapter, 435, assembled for their meeting. Following a short business session presided over by Senior Regent York a social hour was spent and a visit was made by Santa Claus who arrived on skis, the jolly old man found a tree laden with gifts and each member received a gift and candy cane. Refreshments were then served with C. O. Worker Ashmore, Home Making Chairman in charge, ably assisted by Co-Workers of the Order. Plans were made for the Social Service Chairman to fill Christmas baskets for needy people, and an enjoyable evening came to a close.

Weddings

HOARD—McGEE

Hastings—A very quiet, but pretty wedding took place on Wednesday, December 14, at the United Church parsonage, Hastings, when Lila Edna McGee, youngest daughter of Mr. Wm. McGee and the late Mrs. McGee of Percy Township, became the bride of Mr. Ray Lawrence Hoard, eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. Harry M. Hoard, also of Percy Township. The Reverend F. Newell officiated.

The bride was gowned in violet blue chiffon velvet with matching hat and silver shoes and wore a corsage of Sweetheart roses.

She was attended by Mrs. Edward Rutherford, sister of the groom, who wore fuchsia chiffon velvet with black hat and shoes and wore a shoulder bouquet of Talisman roses.

Mr. Leonard McGee, brother of the bride attended the groom.

Later the wedding party had luncheon at the Clifton Tea room at Campbellford, after which the bride and groom left on a wedding trip to Belleville, Toronto and Guelph.

The bride's travelling dress was of wine embroidered crepe with matching hat and shoes and muskrat coat.

The happy couple will live at the groom's home near Campbellford.

Christmas Trees

CHILDREN at the Ontario School for the Deaf attended, in a body, a Christmas pageant, held in the Auditorium of the school yesterday afternoon when the story of the first Christmas was presented in tableau form, with a background of music beautifully rendered by lady teachers.

To many of these handicapped children much of their learning comes through vision and from the impressive scenes on the stage they could grasp, more clearly than through words, the wonderful story of the coming of the Saviour. Cleverly designed costumes, and special lighting effects added to the effectiveness of the scenes, all carried out in a most impressive manner by the children under the direction of Miss Helen Keeler. Mr. Alex Gordon acted as accompanist for the singing which was an important part of the pageant and the Scriptural story of Christmas was read by Mr. J. Hodgson.

With the only lights that of tapers on the piano and a spotlight illuminating the stage, the various scenes were enacted. The first of these showed Mary, bowed in prayer, as the Angel Gabriel delivered his salutation rendition of the Ave Maria.

In splendid voice the group of lady teachers took up the words of Christmas carols appropriate to the next scene, shepherds receiving the announcement of the angels. This was followed by a tableau in Herod's palace, as the Wisemen seek direction, Roman soldiers, Herod in royal purple and gorgeously arrayed men of the East made this scene very colorful.

The final tableau pictured the Wisemen, shepherds and angels, around Mary, Joseph and the Infant Jesus in the manger, a very striking scene, as the singers sang "Come all ye faithful."

Mr. W. J. Morrison, superintendent of the Ontario School for the Deaf, welcomed the visitors to the school and explained the purpose of presenting the Christmas pageant. He announced that holidays for the students would begin on Wednesday and Thursday morning would see two hundred children on their way home, many to such far distant places as Kirkland Lake. One hundred would remain at the school and for them special Yuletide celebrations had been planned. Tomorrow morning Santa Claus would visit all the classroom. Classes would be resumed at the school on January 4th.

EVANGEL TEMPLE

Children's Christmas Service of the Evangel Temple Sunday School was held last night the building was well filled. The Superintendent Mr. Harry Harris, acted as chairman. Miss Dorothy Morgan presided at the piano.

The program was as follows:

Congregational Hymn—"Hark the Herald Angels Sing"—42.

QUEEN ALEXANDRA SCHOOL

JOYOUS Christmas minstrelsy held sway at Queen Alexandra School last evening, the occasion being the annual concert given by the pupils. Dramatized fairy lore, the pageantry of the Christmas story, dancers in lovely costumes, and music both of popular and Yuletide variety made the entertainment completely satisfying to the audience of children and parents.

At the entrance to the auditorium a smart design spelled "Welcome" to the crowd while Christmas trees at each side of the stage added the brilliance of coloured lights to the scene. The program opened promptly and the first sight to greet the delighted eyes of the audience was a huge basket filled with girls and boys of grade two who sang "A Tisket a Tasket" and several other familiar numbers as well as contributing several specialties. The major actors in this number were:

Story of Snow White

The story of Snow White and Rose Red was engagingly portrayed by members of the First Grade the first scene taking place in the home of these adorable children, and the second in a woodland setting of evergreens, and star bedecked sky. There was a dwarf who had beard trouble and a bear, who was, of course, a Prince Charming in disguise, and who had in addition to his other attractions, a brother at home, who would have Rose Red for a bride, and so not separate the rose sisters. The dance of the red and white rosebuds, daintily costumed little girls, was a lovely finale to this number. Those in this play were:

Under the direction of Mr. George Maybee, who also acted as accompanist for the singing, the school choir was heard in a number of Christmas carols, and the beautiful voices of the children amazed and delighted the audience. The soloists were Hugh Simpson and Barbara Bews.

The choruses were:—"Good King Wenceslas"; "I Saw Three Ships"; "O Holy Night"; "If you Would Hear the Angles Sing".

'Stolen Dream'

In the 'Stolen Dream' by Grades Three and Four, the audience was introduced to the Dingle Dangle Gnomes in whose workshop the most difficult task was undertaken with zest and with success. So when the Queen of the Fairies asked for fairy lanterns ornamented with star shine, the Tattered Witch begged aid for a broken saucepan, and the Red Ogre demanded the return of his lost dream, the Master Gnome set his men to work, loyally assisted by Beauty, the black cat and the whole situation was well in hand. The Fairy Court in this act added to the beauty of the scene. The principal parts were taken by:

Christmas Story

The real significance of Christmas was interpreted in "The Christmas Story" where the old, old story, of the coming of the Infant Saviour, the Shepherds following the star, and the arrival of the Wise Men was dramatically told, with a massed choir singing Christmas hymns. The soloists were John Merklinger, Donald Beavis and Donald Muir. The characters were: 1st Page, Maxine McKenna, 2nd Page, Ruth Blatherwick; 1st Shepherd, Howard Mantle; 2nd Shepherd, Stanley Hagerman; 3rd Shepherd, Jim Bassingwaighte; 4th Shepherd, Campbell Cameron; Reuben, Billy Anderson; Gunar, (the blind man), Harry Abbott; 1st Merchant, Bert Trice; 2nd Merchant, Donald Boyle; Mary, Norma Haw; Joseph, Bruce MacRae; Six Angels, Margaret Williams; Barbara Miller; Audrey Correll; Barbara Lewis; Louise Patrick; Marjorie Hewston.

One of the most interesting numbers was "Lost, a Comet", an operetta in two scenes. The first part of the sketch took place in a country garden. The background of a garden enclosing a cottage was very beautifully and realistically presented, the setting being the work of Mr. Fowler and Mr. Wallace whose artistry made of the scene a perfect foil for the colorful costumes of those taking part. The Rainbow sisters in frocks of every dainty hue, the Potentates, the children of Mother Earth, all mourned the loss of a comet but after serious search it was learned that the comet was having a holiday and would return in seventy-five years. Mother Earth's reception made the second scene, the antics of the Dog Star and the singing of soloists and ensemble assured the success of the operetta. Among those taking part were:—Mother Earth, Muriel Semple; Atom, her official dog catcher, Bobby Dickens; Celia, Prima Donna, Meribeth Stobie; Sirius, the Dog Star, Kay Martin; The Potentates—Hugh Simpson, Cyril Smith, Billy Bankier, Gordon Bankier, Allan Gregory, Jack Rowsome; The Rainbow sisters—Mary Lyall, Barbara Bews, Shirley Smith, Barbara Reid, Joan Lashbrook, Margaret Anne McGuire, Gwen McBrien.

During the evening, Mr. W. G. Anderson, principal of the school, welcomed the visitors and spoke of the importance of dramatic work in the educational work of the new system. He thanked the staff, pupils, parents, Home and School Club for co-operation in making the concert a success, and extended to all present best wishes for a Happy Christmas. An announcement of special importance to the scholars was that through the permission of the chairman of the Board, classes would begin at ten in the morning.

ALBERT COLLEGE

"The Christmas Carol" lived again as a dramatized adaption of the Dicken's novel was presented by the Students' Council at Albert College in a very splendid manner which drew sincere praise from an appreciative audience.

The play followed the annual turkey dinner, an interesting instition at the College, when the guests include local Board members. Dr. Howard welcomed those present on behalf of the students and expressed wishes that all might enjoy a Merry Christmas. Three vocal numbers by Mr. Jack Deacon were keenly enjoyed. The arrival of Santa Claus was an amusing moment and the generous guest of honor had a gift for everyone present.

Under the direction of Miss Jessie B. Tuite, "The Christmas Carol" was interpreted in a way that reflected careful training and unusual dramatic ability. The characters were well sustained by the young actors who vividly portrayed the familiar personages who people this Christmas tale. The play was in two acts, and the many scenes were skilfully designed.

Those taking part were:
Scrooge—George Lofthouse
His Nephew—Tom Woolley
Mr. Cheerly—Douglas Buchanan
Mr. Heartily—Milton Lake
Bob Cratchit—Harry Atkinson
Dark Sam—Jack Munro
Euston—Wm. Hockin
Pawnbroker—Fred Beatty
Marley's Ghost—Ernest Suter
Ghost of Christmas Past—Carl Stewart
Ghost of Christmas Present—Jack Blackburn
Ghost of Christmas Future—Jack Crank
Mrs. Cratchit—Barbara Godfrey
Martha Cratchit—Mildred Melvaer
Belinda Cratchit—Elizabeth Hager
Peter Cratchit—Richard Semple
Johnny Cratchit—Ken Trafford
Tiny Tim—Donald Higgins
Ellen—Margaret Whiteman
Mrs. Dibbler—Helen Reddick
Mrs. Milden—Evelyn Halperin
Maid—Shirley Harris.

Carols during the play were sung in fine voice by the College Men's Chorus while between acts Miss Mary Smithrim sang "Birthday of a King" (Neidlinger) and Mr. Grant Rathbun contributed "Night of Nights" (Vandewater).

At the conclusion of the play, Mr. Milton Lake, president of the Students' Council took the opportunity of extending Christmas wishes to the Faculty, Board of Governors, and guests, and on behalf of the Council presented Miss Tuite with flowers as an expression of appreciation for her work in directing the play.

Waiting Room at Hospital Furnished By Auxiliary

The waiting room at Belleville General Hospital has been completely furnished for the convenience of those visiting patients, and the smart appointments were made possible by the proceeds of the splendid tag day held by the Women's Hospital Auxiliary. A new floor, soft toned leather furniture, Venetian blinds, floor lamps, book case and writing desk complete the smartly furnished room.

This is just one of the many projects planned by the Auxiliary and the proceeds of the Christmas dance in the Collegiate will assist materially in the work.

The function promises to be one of the most successful of the season. No invitations have been issued, and it was pointed out by the committee that formal dress was optional.

Little Benny's Note Book

Ma was looking at some names on a piece of paper, saying to pop, I have a list of last minute gifts that I still have to buy, Willyum?

Ye gods, there's no rest for the weary pocketbook at this glad season, pop said, and ma said, Now Willyum dont be pessimistic, all the big stores are holding off their December bills for a whole month, they're not going out till February.

February 1940? pop said, and ma said, This is a list of presents that are not really necessary but yet quite important, if you know what I mean.

I could try to guess but I dont think I will pop said, and ma said, Now for instants here's Mr. Calkins at the farmers market, he's been extremely nice and obliging, and I thought I ought to get him some little thing to show I appriciate his thoughtfulness without actually spending any great lump sum to do it. That's what I mean, Willyum, I thought maybe you could give me some suggestions and help me economize on this list. Now for example I thought I mite get Mr. Calkins a nice pipe for a doller and a half or words to that effect, what do you think, Willyum? she said.

If he's a pipe smoker he already has a pipe, so in that case why dont you get im a nice big box of matches? pop said. That's a good economical idea, he said, and ma said, It's the very thing, Willyum, I saw the loveliest little silver match cases for 3 dollers and 90 cents at Hookbinders, Mr. Calkins will be delighted. Now what's the next name on my list? she said.

Dont bother, that seems to be the only idea I have this evening, pop said.

And he quick got in back of the sporting page.

Top off a black crepe sheath with smart jackets and metallic blouses if you want many changes at a modest outlay. A grand jacket is a hip-length, molded model of red woollen, with gilt embroidered flowers, stem and leaves on either side of the gilt talon fastening.

Sumptuous is the only word to describe a short-sleeved dinner dress made entirely of dull gold sequins. It has a high back and low square neckline in front. The skirt is slit almost to the knee in centre front.

An ideal silhouette for the mother-to-be is the monastic frock with its flowing, bias lines. A nice model is in black crepe, its many folds gathered into an elongated sash that can be knotted and adjusted to the figure. Padded shoulders and an open neckline marked by a handsome pin are trimming notes.

Becoming and neat is a visored hat of black felt done on jockey cap lines. The trimming is an enormous, flat bow of rich cherry red velvet.

CHICKEN THEFTS NEAR BRIGHTON

Three Taken Into Custody Over Weekend by County Constable

Brighton, Dec. 21 (Special)—Prompt action on the part of Arnold Tackaberry, and Bruce Thompson, nineteen year-old Murray Canal residents when they tackled three men alleged to have taken chickens from the buildings of Jack Wilson, farmer of that district, resulted in the ultimate arrest of J. "Sunfish" Anderson, Gordon Wood and Jack Richardson, Trenton, over the week end. They will face charges of theft.

Anderson was placed under arrest after he had been tackled by the two youths, who discovered the men climbing over the canal bank allegedly carrying a bag containing six chickens. Hearing strange noises, Tackaberry and Thompson, hid in the bushes near the canal as the men emerged over the bank, immediately tackled them. They succeeded in subduing Anderson, and marched him to a store owned by Warren Powers approximately a mile from Lovetts Bridge where the theft is alleged to have taken place. They telephoned Brighton police who placed Anderson under arrest. Wood and Richardson who got away during the scuffle were taken into custody on Saturday afternoon by County Constable Frank Atkinson, of Brighton.

Sunday School of Tweed United Church Presents Pageant

Tweed.—A beautiful pageant, "The Light of the World" was presented by the Sunday School of Tweed United Church on Friday night. The cast was composed of more than one hundred characters.

A great deal of credit for the success of the pageant is due to the efforts of Mrs. H. L. Morrison who directed it, and the lighting effects as arranged by Mr. Alton Foster added a great deal to the impressiveness of the pageant. The auditorium of the church was filled by the large crowd which was deeply impressed by the solemnity and worshipfulness of the pageant.

A brief programme of musical numbers and recitations was given by the younger members of the Sunday School. Rev. H. L. Morrison acted as chairman during the evening.

Shannonville

Shannonville.—The thrill of a lifetime was realized by the children of the Trinity Church Sunday School on Monday night on the occasion of their annual Christmas entertainment. The young lads and lassies performed on the spacious platform before the proud eyes of their mothers and fathers and the somewhat envious eyes of their mothers and fathers and the somewhat envious eyes of their playmates. Each member of the Sunday School was detailed to a certain part in the concert and it was indeed proud boys and girls that marched to the platform immediately after their names were called. Such recitations as "See my finger, see my thumb, see my fist you better run" amused the crowd immensely. The Rev. W. D. Craig acted as chairman for the program and also made a short address.

The complete program was as follows:

Greetings from the Sunday School by Miss Mary Isabel Vivian, and Jim Kent; Recitation, June Knight; Dialogue, Jack MacFarlane and David Barnhart; Song, Jean Kent, Kathryn Mills, Lois Larone, Mary Isabel Vivian, Evelyn Cook, Helen Vilvan, accompanied by Mrs. Damon Hinchey; Recitation, "Jim" Hinchey; Chairman's address, Rev. W. D. Craig; Duet, Kathryn Mills, Helen Vivian; Reading, Jessie Little; Song, Ted Mills, Mary Isabel Vivian, Evelyn Cook, "Jim" Hinchey, "Jim" Kent, Boyce Cook; Short dialogue by three pupils of Miss Sine's School, S. S. No. 4, Eugene Stratton, June Knight, Betty Mastin; Duet, Helen Vivian, Lois Larone; Reading, Miss Lily Little; Chorus by the school. The evening's entertainment closed with a humorous dialogue entitled "In Broad Daylight." Those taking part in this well-executed dialogue were: Miss Jean Kent, Mrs. K. R. Vivian, Miss Bessie Sine, Mrs. Orval Stratton, Mrs. Jack Coukell, Miss Sine. Immediately following the dialogue everybody joined in singing "God Save the King." Due to unforseen reasons Santa Claus was unable to attend the entertainment and assist in distributing the presents. According to remarks emanating from the children, they were very pleased with their presents.

Mr. and Mrs. Leo Roluf of Point Anne were Sunday tea hour guests of Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Stewart.

The Misses Martha Stewart, Vera MacDonald and Doris MacDonald of Point Anne and the Messrs. Frank Scott and Everett Givins of Belleville were Sunday evening guests of Mr. and Mrs. Ted Breadman.

This week will see a continual round of Christmas entertainments in the village and community and according to those in charge of these interesting affairs they should be well-executed.

Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Houston were week-end guests of Mr. and Mrs. Louis Harvey of Belleville.

It used to be that when you wanted to sell anything you would have to have the best if you expected to make a sale. However, you can take it from Mr. Fred Fulford, local horse buyer and seller deluxe that it is impossible to sell good horses these days, but if a fellow happens to have an old horse around it is constantly in demand. The reason for this unusual and perhaps unbelievable demand is that fox farms are in constant demand of old horses and are quite willing to pay a good price.

2nd Thurlow

2nd Thurlow.—Mrs. Geo. Conners entertained the Past Grands of the Quinte Rebekah Lodge on Thursday evening.

Mrs. Moncrief of Omemee is spending the winter with her sister, Mrs. Arnold Mitchell.

Mr. and Mrs. W. Gray, June and Jack of Massassaga, had dinner on Sunday with Mr. and Mrs. Douglas Atkins.

Mrs. A. Milne spent a few days recently with her daughter, Mrs. Prichard, Belleville.

Masters Lloyd Greatrix and Garnett Mitchell attended the graduating exercises at Holloway St. Church on Sunday morning, Dec. 6th, and received beautiful Bibles.

Mr. and Mrs. W. Gray, June and Jack, Massassaga, had tea and spent the evening with Mr. and Mrs. Stanley Grills, on Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. A. Greatrix and Mrs. Snider had tea on Wednesday evening with Mr. and Mrs. F. Buskard, Shannonville.

Mr. and Mrs. Douglas Atkins spent Wednesday with Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Fargey, West Huntingdon.

Mr. A. Mitchell is confined to his bed with the grippe.

Mr. and Mrs. D. Whalen attended the funeral of their cousin, the late Dr. Cassidy, Toronto, who was killed in an accident. The funeral was held from his home, in Tweed, on Thursday.

Defencemen of Bruins Score All Goals Secured as Boston Blanks Amazing Amerks 3-0

RANGERS SWAMP WINGS

Patrick Snipers Put Six Past Tiny Thompson in Contest

(By Jack Calder, Canadian Press Staff Writer).

They may have to think up some excuse other than a strong supporting defence for what young Frankie Brimsek is doing to the sharpshooters of the National Hockey League.

Boston Bruins present a big, close-knit defence in front of sad-eyed Frankie, the rookie who was dropped into the difficult shoes of Tiny Thompson when the veteran goaltender was sold to Detroit. But it isn't a defence that tends strictly to its knitting, either, and the kid from Minnesota has had something besides a big stick, big pads and big breaks.

Defence Scores All Goals

Last night at Boston the defence did enough rushing to score all the goals when the Bruins defeated New York Americans 3-0, bringing Brimsek his third straight shutout and his sixth in seven games. Because his protectors were out hunting, Brimsek had to be especially good, and about 10 of the 23 shots he stopped were conceded difficult. The crowd of 13,000 realizing finally that Thompson wasn't an immovable necessity in Boston's goal, gave the youngster a warm reception.

Meanwhile Thompson had to weather another storm while the Rangers were trimming Detroit 6-2 at New York, rubbing it into the Red Wings from the time MacColville opened the scoring after a minute's play. The results left Boston six points ahead of the second-place Rangers, the Americans two points farther back and Detroit tied for last place with Montreal.

Brimsek was still 90 per cent of the news as he recorded his second sequence of three straight shutouts. Americans used five forwards through parts of every period and Brimsek turned back everything.

Allen Makes Good

Johnny Crawford, recruit defenceman, started the Bruins on the way to their 12th victory in 15 starts by scoring on the first period. Cooney Weiland helped on the other goals, both in the third, the first by Busher Hollett and the other by Eddie Shore, old warhorse of the blueline who scored for the first time this season.

George Allen, brought up from Rangers' International - American League farm club at Philadelphia made good in his first big-league start by scoring twice before the 7,500 fans at Madison Square Garden. Mac Colville and Alex Shibicky had given the Blueshirts a 2-0 advantage when he got his first goal. After Alex Motter had tallied for Detroit and Neil Colville for Rangers, he boosted the lead to 4-1 in the third, then helped in his club's final goal, by Cecil Dillon.

Syd Howe lessened the Red Wings' humiliation with a goal a minute from the finish. Detroit's defence, which lost Bucko McDonald through a sale to Toronto this week, was feeble throughout.

McDonald made his first appearance with the Leafs at St. Catharines, in an exhibition in which Toronto defeated three Ontario Hockey Association clubs 8-2 to open the new Garden City gardens. The Leafs played St. Catharines, Niagara Falls and Port Colborne for one period each.

Playing Hockey Easy Way to Earn Living Says Murray Patrick

New York, Dec. 21 (CP)—To the average sport fan professional hockey seems a tough occupation but Murray Patrick finds it a rather easy way to earn a living. Perhaps it's because the rookie defenceman of New York Rangers has tried boxing and bicycle racing that he finds the ice pursuit a sinecure. Both ventures wound up in injuries.

Only mark on Murray's handsome face is a split left eye-brow suffered in a six-day bicycle race in Montreal in 1937. He was pedalling 35 miles an hour down the straightaway and leaning forward to give partner Gerard Debaets a a starting shove when forced to swerve. That spill on the pine-boards required nine stitches and held up the race for half an hour.

Broke His Nose

Victoria-born Murray earlier had decided to follow a boxing career and was on the verge of accepting one of several professional offers when he had his nose broken in an amateur bout. The grief and expense that ensued before his breathing apparatus was adjusted properly changed his mind and hockey caught his attention.

Former Canadian amateur heavyweight champion, Patrick looked a trifle wistful as he said boxing skill was useless when fights start on the ice. A 200-pounder who knows how to slug, Murray admitted he couldn't break an egg when punching on skates. As if lack of traction wasn't enough handicap, somebody always wraps himself around you and down you go, he said.

Room Together

Murray, who signs his Christmas cards Muzz, played two years minor hockey with Philadelphia Ramblers before making the jump to National League company. His older brother, Lynn, a Ranger forward, surprised the experts by reaching the big time in his first professional year. The brothers room together on road trips.

OSHAWA G-MEN IN 2ND. PLACE OF SENIOR O.H.A.

Defeat Brantford 9-2 With Lex Chisholm Securing Five Points

HURST BRILLIANT

Goalie Continually Out-Guessed Incoming Forwards

Brantford, Ont., Dec. 21 (CP)—Oshawa G-Men dropped their hockey sticks today and took pencil in hand to figure out just how they stood individuality and collectively in the senior "A" division of the Ontario Hockey Association.

The easterners walloped Brantford Redbirds 9-2 here last night to move into second place in the league standing behind the undefeated Toronto Goodyears. The one-sided win over the cellar occupants also boosted G-Men scoring averages mightily.

The Brants, who have lost nine games and won but one this season, couldn't get started last night. Both their goals came in the first minute of the third period at the only time that Oshawa appeared a little careless.

The winners scored three goals in the first period, five in the second and one in the third. Leading in the scoring parade was flashy Lex Chisholm who gave an exhibition of high-class playmaking with five assists and a goal for six points.

Right behind Chisholm was Wee Winkie Smith who slipped through the perplexed opposition for three goals and two assists. Other marksmen were . Doug Maundrell, with two, Carl Maundrell and Scotty McAlpine, veteran rearguard, one each.

Hurst is Brilliant

Peg Hurst, former Whitby netminder, was a great handicap to the losers and his great display of outguessing Brant marksmen, especially in the second period, ranked with the best seen here this season. Sixteen penalties, including a major to Carl Maundrell, were issued throughout the tilt. The game was stopped several times after spectators threw paper on the ice in protest against decision of referee Beef McKay of Hamilton.

Al Allan, formerly of University of Western Ontario played a standout game for Brants and earned applause in gaining assists on both Brantford goals. George Cooper and Ab Conick, former Hamilton Tiger, scored the Redbird markers.

Meanwhile, over at St. Catharines, Toronto Maple Leafs of the National League beat three senior "A" teams by a total score of 8-2. The game, in which each team played a period against the professional Leafs, marked the opening of the new St. Catharines arena—The Garden City gardens.

Leafs defeated St. Catharines 2-0 in the first period, ousted Niagara Falls Chiefs 4-1 in the second, and edged out a 2-1 win over Port Colborne Sailors in the third. Amateur scorers were Tony Pavone of the Falls and Russ Waldriff of Port Colborne.

Sports Roundup

(By Drew Middleton, Associated Press Sports Writer).

New York, Dec. 21 (AP)—Maybe Dr. Townsend, the old age pension system advocate, owns stock in Brooklyn Dodgers....The daffy ones signed catcher Luke Sewell who has been in the big time since 1927....And the Brooks are after Al Simmons, the outfielder, a stripling of 35....There's no truth to a report Grover Cleveland Alexander will pitch the opener for the superbas however.....Quite a few beefs over the fact Johnny Vander Meer didn't rate higher in the AP poll for the No. 1 athlete of the year...."He pitched two no-hitters in a row, a feat 140 or so pitchers have been trying to do for 50 years and which won't be done again for another 50," writes Jerry Natale.

Sid Hulls of London has slapped a suit for 750 pounds (about $3,750) on Tommy Farr for evading a fight in London....How'd you like to hang by your thumbs till he collects....Ancil Hoffman, Max Baer's manager, is doing some trans-continental dickering with promoter Mike Jacobs now that the dancing Baer again is a key figure in Jacobs' manoeuvres....Claims he can put Maxie on with Tony Galento out on the coast and turn 'em away ...."Let him talk", quoth Mike, "this is where the dough is. He'll come along"

Tommy Loughran likes Lou Nova's left hand...."You don't see many like it, a real straight left, the kind the old timers had," said Tommy....A fellow reminded him the Louis' left was no powder puff ...."That's not a left, that's a battle axe," sighed Tommy, a great fighter in his own right .... The Hull-Daisetta Bobcats of Angleton, who have won 35 straight football games since the 1935 season, average 20 points a game and held the opposition to three points.

At the Waking golf course in England there are no distances on the tee boxes, no score cards and only one competition a year .... The golf monthly of Edinburgh says the course is "steeped in an atmosphere of dignity"....You can have the dignity chum, how far is that little tin cup from here???

Billiard Events Scheduled in U. S.

Chicago, Dec. 21 (AP)—Three-cushion billiards gained a new "angle" today as the United States Billiards Association drafted plans for a nationwide world's championship tournament, to be played in ten different cities.

Previously, championships of the scientific, angular game have been determined through a week or so of play in one city. Confident of reaching more fans and increasing spectator interest, the billiards association will sponsor a tournament which will open early next month and run twelve weeks.

Several of the game's greatest stars will be included in the field of ten players. The eligible list of cue experts contains such names as Welker Cochran of San Francisco, winner of the last world's tourney, held here in 1937, and Johnny Layton, the pink-cheeked veteran, who has held the title eleven times.

Between the Lines

Being it is so close to "the night before Christmas," when Santa Claus sometimes fills the hung-up stockings of all good little boys and girls, we have been forced to do a little eavesdropping about town and with the most surprising results. It was only after peeking in windows, reading other peoples' mail and placing our ear to keyholes, that we can really be of assistance to Santa Claus.

So in an appealing manner we hope "Old St. Nick" is one of our most ardent readers, because here are some of the Christmas requests local sport and athletic moguls desire most, they readily admit.

EDDIE THOMAS, manager of the Belleville Redmen: "I would like nothing better than one or two if you can spare them, good wing players. We could do with a senior "B" title, if it ain't askin' too much though."

"CAB" CARLING-KELLY, coach of the Flyers: "Dear Santa, please send us back Johnnie Lalonde and Ernie McNeeley, or at least two defencemen who can halt the opposition forwards occasionally."

PETE BEACH, Athletic Instructor at Albert Colege: "My wants are small this year, Santa, all we want at Albert is a good senior Interscholastic grouping in the C.O.S.S.A." P.S.—"You didn't do so well by us in football, remember."

GEORGE LAUGHLIN, Athletic Director at the B.C.I. & V.S.: "Just a little more co-operation in our inter-form sports activities so we can get back in C.O.S.S.A. activities."

JOE SHORTT, Secretary of the Y.M.C.A. and mentor of basketball, "just a little more interest and assistance from veteran hoopsters will satisfy our cause."

FRANK SEDORE, skipper of the Point Anne softballers: "No more draws against Oshawa softball teams, thank you."

BOB BROWN, President of the Badminton Club: "See what you can do about the provision of more courts for our idle players, whose inactivity is increasing each playing night at an alarming rate."

"TOOTS" HOLWAY, coach of the Quinte juniors: "All I want is some ice, but Santa we've got to have it quick,please."

WM. A. FRY, mentor of rugby football in these parts: "More support of the autumn classic locally, with a couple of good players tossed in for 1939 and bigger crowds for better football."

IVAN SCOTT, President Quinta Skating Club: "Our wishes are not great, please Santa, some fine weather for our ice carnival."

B. A. FANNING, skipper of the Belleville ball team: "Dear Santa, things in baseball are so bad locally, that we'll take anything you have to offer. Beggars can't be choosers, we know, but no matter what you leave it will be more than we have at present, and lastly, please—no more softball interference when our play-offs roll around."

JACK McVEIGH, guiding light of junior baseball: "Well Santa, you gave us a grouping last year, but it didn't do much good as the Oshawa kids pinned our ears back aplenty."

CHUCK BARNETT, skipper of Corbys A.C. softball nine: "There's much we desire, Santa. No more Kingston umpires, some assurance of the city softball championship after we head the league all season and lastly how about some action by our league executive for 1939?"

MAURICE CALLAGHAN, President of the Yacht Club: "Just a little more interest in the sailing races next summer. Of course Santa, we would appreciate ice boating here too and less talk and more work at our meetings."

JOHN SHAW, lawn bowling prexy: "More interest by our members for 1939."

GEORGE GAY, manager of the Hume Arena: "Not much this year Santa, but please send some cold weather quickly, or it's curtains for us."

CLAUDE D. TICE, our genial City Editor: "I don't want anything for myself, but you can drop an artificial ice plant down the chimney at the Hume Arena during your rounds. Thank you."

JOCK MITCHELL and TIM LITTLE, local golf pros.: "Some more youthful golfers like Harry Ridley and Tom Carruthers and more replacing of turf from those awful furrows dug on our greens last season."

JOE CATHER: "Just one hole in one, please."

BOB WRAY and WALTER BELAIR: "Any spare curling rinks available?"

TWIGG WOODLEY: "Just one 30 pound maskinonge, and landed in the boat, mind you."

SONNY GREEN: "A .300 batting average."

Now we have carefully taken care of all the desires and wishes of local sportdom, it is safe to tuck the lads and lassies in their bunks and hope for the best.

Insofar as we personally are concerned all we ask of Santa Claus is a little more personal and outward display of interest by local sports fans towards sports in general in Belleville. If the fans will show a little more interest in our city's sporting activities we are sure Santa Claus will do his share. You're welcome.

HODGE PODGE — Young Frankie Brimsek is up to his old tricks, the Boston goalie registered his sixth shutout since joining the Bruins, when Art Ross' gang blanked the Americans 3-0 last night. ....It was Brimsek's seventh consecutive victory and it looks as through Tiny Thompson will soon be forgotten....The Rangers walloped the Red Wings 6-2 to fortify their second place position in the N.H.L. as well....Jack Adams is planning to fly the Red Wings around the circuit....He should not have much trouble there, the Detroit squad has been 'up in the air' nearly all season as it is....Failing to get a managerial spot in the majors, Babe Ruth may turn to broadcasting of games next summer....This guy Tommy Farr can sure take it, now he is to meet "Red" Burman, of Baltimore pug....No doubt they'll eventually find a punch-drunk, slap-happy leather pusher who Farr might beat.

Show-Off Susies And Fancy Dans Being Developed?

New York, Dec. 21 (AP)—Sonja Henie is undoubtedly a pretty girl and an accomplished skater but at the same time the fair-haired ice queen seems to have turned United States skaters into a lot of show-off Susies and fancy dans.

Before the Norse maid showed up in her skimpy costumes to do splits and whirls to spotlights and soft music, the average soul regarded skating as fun—a means of skimming over the ice with a minimum effort.

Now it is a serious business. On the Rockefeller Centre pond they are out there day and night cutting didoes, and dressed up fit to kill. None has yet been seen wearing plain, every-day ice skating clothes and simply skating around and around the place as though it was a pleasure.

The skaters ranging in age from about five to 6, got at their school figures and dipsy-doos as though a movie scout lurked behind every foot of the hedge surrounding the pond.

Some performers look as though htey could do with a lesson or two in plain round-and-round skating. They wobble badly on the fancy stuff. As they pirouette they leave something to be desired, and don't resemble Sonja Henie except in their earnestness of effort. Probably they never will.

The Old Sunday School At Fox Church, Eldorado

by MAUDE FOX

While thinking of other days, my memory travels back to the old Sunday School at Fox Church, Eldorado, which I attended from 1884 until 1898. Sunday School was held in the little old white church about one mile north of Eldorado just across from the cemetery.

Sunday School was held at 1.30 p.m. just before the preaching service. Those were the days when the horses were hitched to the democrat, or sleigh if there was sleighing and we always had a good attendance. I think Mr. Joseph Christie was the superintendent when I first attended that school. Other superintendents that followed were Mr. Robert Maynes Sr., Mrs. Joseph Christie, Mr. S. F. Weaver and Robert Maynes Jr. These have all passed to their reward, except Mr. Weaver who moved to Bancroft and I do not know if he is alive or not.

The Sunday School had a splendid library and Fr. Lester O'Hara was a very efficient librarian. He passed away in 1932.

Some of the Teachers

Among the teachers of the senior classes of that time I remember were Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Christie; Mrs. (Rev.) R. H. Leitch, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Maynes Sr. and Mrs. Lester O'Hara, Mr. and Mrs. Thos. Hatton taught intermediate classes. Of these the last three alone survive. Mrs. O'Hara lives in Madoc and Mr. and Mrs. Hatton lives at Hilton.

As there were four appointments on that circuit every fourth Sunday there was no church service after Sunday School; and during the three years that Mrs. Leitch was there, 1886-1889, she would play the organ, and lead the singing while we sang hymns for an hour, on the Sundays there was no church service.

Sometimes Mrs. Pope would read stories to us from some English books she had. I will remember one of them while the rest have slipped from my memory. She read of somewhere in England, where those who delivered milk would carry it in two large pails from house to house until their supply was exhausted. About half way into town was a large stone with a flat top, called "the milk stone", because the milkmen always set their pails of milk on it to rest their arms.

Son Repents

One old man who had become of no use, just in the way, and unable to work, was told by his son that he must go to the poor house. His son got him on his back and started; but when he reached the milk stone, he unloaded the old man on the stone to rest his back. The old man began to cry, and when asked by his son if he did not want to go, replied, "It is not that that makes me cry, but I remember just thirty years ago, I set my father on this stone to rest my back when I was carrying him to the poor house." "Is that the way it works," said the son, "then I will take you home again, and what little I have we will share it together. I do not want my son to carry me to the poor house."

There was no lack of workers in these days. If any could not be in their places, a substitute could easily be found to carry on.

I think Mr. Joseph Christie was the superintendent at the time I first attended that Sunday School. I think the three hymns he gave out most frequently were "What a friend we have in Jesus", "Down at the cross where my Saviour died" and "Father bless our school today."

Mrs. Christie was superintendent for a number of years. They moved to Madoc and Robert J. Maynes Jr. was the next superintendent. He held the office until his death in 1912.

"Commentators Say...."

Mr. Robert Maynes Sr. taught the Bible class for a number of years, and he used to put a great deal of study on the preparation of the lesson. He had Dr. Ad[illegible] Clarke's Commentary, and during the teaching of the lesson ,would often say: "Commentators say...." so and so. One day a spirit of mischief entered into me, and I said, "Mr. Maynes, wouldn't those be early roses? They are the most common taters we have." He replied, "O. Maude, Maude, you are terrible." After that if he started to say "com" he was sure to see a smile on some one's face, and he would change and say, "Folks who give their opinion on the Bible."

THE OLD SUNDAY TEACHER

I wonder if he remembers,
That good old man in Heaven,
The class in the old red schoolhouse
That was known as "he noisy seven."

I wonder if he remembers
How noisy we used to be,
Or thinks we forget the lessons
Of Christ of Gethsemane.

I'd like to tell him how Stephen
So brimming with mirth and fun,
Now tells the heathen of China
The tale of the crucified one.

I'd like to tell him how Harry,
The merriest one of all,
From the bloody field of Shiloh
Went home at the Master's call.

I'd like to tell him how Robert
And Philip, and Jack, and Jay,
Are all trying to follow
That Christ of Gethsemane.

I'd like, yes, I'd like to tell him
What his lessons did for me,
And how I am trying to follow
That Christ of Gethsemane.

But perhaps he knows it already,
For Harry as told, maybe,
That we are all coming, coming
Through Christ of Gethsemane.

Told of Trip to Egypt

I do not think I shall ever forget those old teachers, nor the lessons they taught.

In the summer we usually had a Sunday School picnic in Mr. Jas. Chamber's grove; and I remember one picnic that Rev. S. G. Rorke, Rev. George Nickle and Rev. S. Childerhose were guest speakers. Rev. Rorke had been on a tour to Egypt and the Holy Land, and had brought home a number of relics. He put on a long robe of yellow quilted satin, and a fez; and then he looked much like an Arab. He showed us a mummy's hand, and some shells he had brought from the Sea of Galilee. I believe Rev. George Nickle is superannuated and living in Toronto; and Rev. S. Childerhose was drowned nearly thirty years ago, while riding on the trains, when the train went through the bridge over the Spanish River.

The scholars of that Sunday School are scattered far apart, but I often wonder if their thoughts ever return to the old Sunday School of their childhood, or remember the lessons taught by those faithful old teachers.

Friends Honor Popular Couple

Moira—On Tuesday evening the home of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Herity was filled with friends who gathered there to honor them on the occasion of their recent marriage.

Rev. W. H. Tristram called the gathering to order and Mrs. Albert Clare read the following address:

Moira, Dec. 13, 1938

To Mr. and Mrs. Frank Herity,
Dear Mary and Frank:

We, your friends and neighbors of Moira, and community, have invaded your home tonight to extend our best wishes for "Bon voyage along the Sea of Matrimony."

We have taken this method of reminding you of the fact, that we sincerely appreciate the way you both have worked for the good of the church and community in general.

Mary, we regret to lose you as teacher in our school, for it will be hard to get another teacher, who will take so much interest in the religious training of our children, as well as in their academic instructions. However, we want you to know that we deeply appreciate it and also the guidance you have given them in building fine, noble, honorable characters.

Frank, you represent one of Moira's pioneer families, and we are glad that you are going to remain among us, and we also are not forgetful of the spirit in which you have accepted positions in our church whose duties were not always easy to fulfil. We have found you to be a good friend both in business and social life.

We now ask you to accept this gift not for its intrinsic value, but as a visible reminder of our esteem for you.

We will meet from time to time
To see you in your home, and also in the store
To sing awhile
And perhaps to chatter some
And now we'll end our little rhyme
With wishes all sincere
We hope you like our present
And ever use it with good cheer.

Signed on behalf of the Moira community, Edgar Foster, Wallace McInroy, Angus Mumby, Joe Williams, Albert Clare, Nelson Welsh.

The newlyweds were presented with a beautiful piano and each in turn graciously thanked all present for the gift.

The first speaker of the evening was Dr. Harold E. Welsh, M.P.P. of Roslin, who is one of Moira's past residents and of whom we are justly proud. He expressed the sentiments of all in a few well-chosen words, when he outlined the sterling worth of Mr. and Mrs. Herity to this community. A few impromptu speeches followed, after which Mrs. Nelson Welsh in her usual splendid manner sang that lovely old song "The Sunshine of Your Smile."

At this juncture a delightful lunch was served and a social hour brought the evening to a close.

Christmas Entertainment

On Friday evening the annual Christmas entertainment was held in the church. Rev. W. H. Tristram acted as chairman for the following program:

Welcome, Doris Mumby and Elmer Thompson; Chorus by school, "Silent Night"; Recitation, Mac Scott; Chorus by Jr. Room, "Here We Go Round the Mulberry Bush"; Chorus, Clock Song; Recitation, Dorothy Thompson; Chorus, Kris Kringle; Recitation, June Williams; Rhythm Band, Jingle Bells and Good Night Ladies; Dialogue, Sparkin Mary Jane; Girls' Star Drill; Boys' Tramp Drill; Trio, June, Connie and Joyce Williams; Dialogue, Henrys' Mail Order Wife; Between acts, song, by Dorothy Thompson, Grace and Don McInroy; Solo, Mrs. Nelson Welsh; Boys' Dialogue.

The arrival of Santa Claus at this time caused much merriment among the children when the distribution of toys and bags of candy took place.

Much credit for the success of the evening is due the teachers, Mrs. Frank Herity and Mrs. Albert Clare, and the music teacher, Mr. Wm. Morris, particularly so the latter, who has the children exceptionally well trained in the manipulation of stringed instruments, as well as vocal training. A goodly amount of credit is also due the following School Trustees, Mr. Wallace McInroy, Mr. Angus Mumby and Mr. Albert Clare for their untiring efforts all through the year and who are always on hand to make the Christmas entertainment a decided success.

Ragged Boy Finds Begging Profitable

The boy is perhaps not over six years of age, wise beyond his years, and dressed in patched overalls and other clothing calculated to arouse the motherly instinct of feminine passersby and the kind-hearted generosity of the male shoppers.

Along Front Street, he parades, a tiny forlorn wanderer whose only cry is: "Please, Mister (or Missus) will you give me a nickel!"

To those unaquainted with the diminutive beggar who circulates through the crowded streets, with one small eye cocked warily for the appearance of police, the plea seems genuine. A world of pathos is conveyed in the plea. But to Front Street merchants the "racket" played by the youngster is real enough.

"That kid was up and down Front Street yesterday about twenty times. He stopped everyone he could stop and asked them for a nickel, right from the upper bridge to the lower one. And about one-half the people he asked many gave him a nickel or a dime, sometimes a quarter", stated one store manager, who has watched the performance for the past few days.

"That kid must be making from five to ten dollars a day with that little racket," the manager estimated.

JUST THREE CASES SCARLET FEVER LISTED

Few if any sickness quarantines will be maintained in the city over the Christmas holidays, it is hoped by the local Board of Health, and the city will enter the holiday period comparatively sickness free, it is believed, following the report this morning that at persent just three cases of scarlet fever were listed by the department. Other diseases have been correspondingly low.

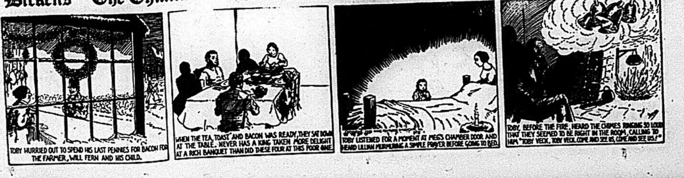
Dickens' "The Chimes"—A New Year's Fantasy

Part 4

By William Sherb and David Vormelker



TOBY HURRIED OUT TO SPEND HIS LAST PENNIES FOR BACON FOR THE FARMER, WILL FERN AND HIS CHILD.
WHEN THE TEA, TOAST AND BACON WAS READY, THEY SAT DOWN AT THE TABLE. NEVER HAS A KING TAKEN MORE DELIGHT AT A RICH BANQUET THAN DID THESE FOUR AT THIS POOR ONE.
TOBY LISTENED FOR A MOMENT AT MEG'S CHAMBER DOOR AND HEARD LILLIAN MURMURING A SIMPLE PRAYER BEFORE GOING TO BED.
TOBY, BEFORE THE FIRE, HEARD THE CHIMES RINGING SO LOUD THAT THEY SEEMED TO BE RIGHT IN THE ROOM, CALLING TO HIM "TOBY VECK, TOBY VECK, COME AND SEE US, COME AND SEE US!"

RE-ORGANIZATION

of the Council, and Earl Winterton, Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster will retire from the cabinet.

Another rumor given wide circulation is that Leslie Hore-Belisha—reported the principal target of "Insurgent" junior ministers—intends to resign on the grounds that the War Office which he heads needs compulsory service to secure the necessary strength of personnel.

However, in this connection, Mr. Chamberlain advised the House not to "attach too much importance to rumors in the press", when questions were raised yesterday in regard to reports that the war secretary's resignation had been suggested by the junior ministers.

These ministers who are understood to have laid before Mr. Chamberlain their dissatisfaction with the speed and score of rearmament, are Robert S. Hudson, Overseas Trade Secretary, Lord Dufferin, Colonial Under-Secretary, and Lord Strathcona, Mr. Hore-Belisha's Under-Secretary in the War Office.

Voluntary Enlistment.

The government's voluntary national service register, sponsored by Sir John Anderson, Lord Privy Seal in charge of civilian defence, is an attempt to fill gaps in the active defence forces as well as the air raids precautions service by voluntary enlistment. Machinery is to be placed in readiness for a compulsory register at the outbreak of war.

Sir John told the House the plan "is not a stepping stone to conscription or to control of industry or anything or that sort.

A rumor that was believed not well founded had it that Mr. Chamberlain would go to the country shortly to seek a fresh mandate to carry on with his rearmament and appeasement plans.

The national service debate, in spite of the near-unanimous vote, showed there was a cleavage of opinion in the House. Labor and Liberal spokesmen opposed putting registration on the basis of force and most Conservatives agreed with them. But a small bloc of Conservatives stood firm for compulsion, claiming it was needed to put the nation in readiness for war as it is waged under modern conditions.

ANOTHER ARREST

"Well, what are you going to do for me?" the man asked when Musica told how high he had risen since the days of the infamous human hair swindle of 1913 and the dubious dealings in alcohol during prohibition.

"Why didn't you know?" Coster replied. "This very minute you became—" and he named a post in McKesson and Robbins.

On For Five Years.

Simon has been on the corporation's payroll at $6,000 a year and expenses for five years, and Assistant U.S. Attorney General Brien McMahon said last night:

"I assume he was drawing $6,000 a year for what he knew instead of what he did."

Simon himself said vaguely that he "did various jobs". What he knew, among other things, McMahon said, was that three men connected with McKesson and Robbins—all hiding behind aliases—were brothers of the shrewd, Italian-born master manipulator.

There was a question as to whether Simon knew that the address of a non-existent midwife on the faked birth certificate filed for Coster-Musica in Washington in 1935 was his own address in the Bronx, 1840 Grand Concourse.

Simon Questioned.

Before his arrest, Simon was questioned by Securities Commission investigators and yesterday his name was mentioned by Frederick Wingersky, Boston lawyer and a vice-president of McKesson and Robbins, in connection with an uncompleted arms sale.

Wingersky told a State Attorney General's inquiry that he drafted an arms and ammunition contract for Coster and was told to give the papers to "Ben Simon", but the deal never was consummated.

Rifles For China".

Other witnesses confirmed report of armament negotiations — one, Thomas Amadeo Bruni, saying that an order of rifles was intended for the Chinese General, Chiang Kai-Shek, though never delivered — but James Caffrey, Regional Securities Commission Administrator, scoffed at them. "It's a lot of ballyhoo over nothing," he said.

Furtherance of the investigation disclosed, McMahon said, that "the Musicas' ill-gotten gains are mostly gone". It was supposed that the 1929 crash stripped Coster and it was estimated that in the first place, he and his brothers took little more than $3,000,000 from the pirated firm in ten years.

coal. Will Madagascar please call us. We hope for help. Confirm. We forty-eight aboard L'Isle Bourbon."

No further word has been received.

In Deserted Spot.

The closest French warship to the island was reported to be at Saigon, French Indo-China, about 3,000 miles away. Officials indicated the government probably would hire a freighter by radio to change its course and go to the colony's aid.

The colonial saga began last May when 33 persons, including six women, set out from Saint Malo, France, on the 580-ton trawler, Isle Bourbon to establish a lobster fishing colony on the island.

Quarrels broke out before they reached Port Said and at Djibouti, the next port, the original members of the crew split. At least three of the six women, including the wives of the ship's doctor, wireless operator and engineer, remained ashore with their husbands. Other members of the crew also quit.

Whether the wife of Captain Hohn de Boers and the other two women continued their journey still was a mystery in Paris. One of them was Colette Mouradain, young blonde niece of the late Paul Cahabas, painter of "September Morn".

Confirmation Lacking.

At Madagascar it was reported more members of the original crew quit, but confirmation was lacking. What happened after the vessel sailed from Madagascar Sept. 12 was not known.

New crew members were recruited at Djibouti and Madagascar. On the basis of the SOS message, it was presumed that these brought the expedition's personnel up to 48.

Captain de Boers, who was granted a 30-year monopoly on fishing in St. Paul's waters by the French government, was reported to have spent 2,000,000 francs (about $52,000) preparing for the expedition. He planned to use the ship to market lobsters at Reunion Island and transport the supplies to the colony.

St. Paul Island is a forbidden volcanic formation almost perfectly round save for its tiny harbor. Undersea volcanoes which it made left a crater in the centre, which now is a lake.

"Hard to Get"

"Torchy Gets Her Man"

Dick Powell and Olivia de Havilland, an entirely new romantic duo are teamed in the leading roles of "Hard to Get", a breezy fast-moving comedy with many farcical complications, produced by Warner Brothers, which is one the Belle screen tonight and Thursday, matinee daily.

The name of Dick Powell means of course, that there is some music in the production, but is far from being a musical picture of the routine type, for Dick sings only two songs and they are both introduced plausibly into the action of the piece.

In fact, Dick is not, as usual, playing a singer in his latest picture. He is an ambitious and aggressive young business man who, at the outset, is shown as the manager of a combined gas station and auto camp, and most of the interest as well as the farcical complications—arise from his efforts to interest some capitalists in his plan to establish a chain of auto camps across the country.

Olivia is a spoiled and petulant heiress who buys gas and oil at Dick's place and then finds she is without a cent to pay for it. Whereupon Dick, who doesn't of course, know who she is, uses physical force to compel her to work out her bill by sweeping out and making the beds in the ten bungalows of his auto camp.

Her father heads the company which employs Dick, so she attempts to get papa to discharge the young man, but her parent only laughs at her story, so she changes her tack and tries to get her revenge by tricking Dick into laying his plans before as hard-boiled a group of capitalists as has ever been annoyed by a young promoter.

He suffers many indignities, both physical and mental, but eventually he puts over his plan, and he gets the girl too, for Olivia has meanwhile fallen in love with the brash young fellow who gave her such a rousting about upon their first meeting.

Besides Dick and Olivia, the other important members of the cast—and it is to be noted that they're all expert comedians —include Charles Winninger, Allen Jenkins, Bonita Granville, Melville Cooper, Isabel Jeans, Penny Singleton, Gray Sutton and Thurston Hall.

"Torchy Gets Her Man"

A comedy-drama of race tracks and counterfeiting dens, called "Torchy Gets Her Man" and starring Glenda Farrell and Barton MacLane is announced as the companion feature. This is another of those extremely popular movies dealing with the adventures of the vivacious blonde reporter, Torchy Blane, and her detective lieutenant boy friend, Steve McBride.

All of these Warner Bros. thrill-and-laugh movies have been successful and have pleased audiences everywhere.

The Belle News of the day will be presented tonight only.

"A Christmas Carol"

The producers of "David Copperfield" now bring you Charles Dickens' finest heart story! Every beloved character . . . every cherished word . . . come to you as he penned them in "A Christmas Carol" to be presented at the Belle Friday and Saturday with Freddie Bartholomew and Judy Garland in a laugh crammed story "Listen Darling".

The Stars Say—

For Thursday, December 22

By GENEVIEVE KEMBLE

THS day's astrological auguries are conflicting, judging by the lunar transits. While things may be particularly lively and full of excitement, with a very sudden benefit seeming to "drop from the sky," there also may be just as definite a setback or obstacle to reaping such heralded advantage. It might be a grave danger to an elder, illness or bereavement. A financial loss also is indicated. Nevertheless, new projects are greatly accelerated, with support from influential sources. Deal with the young rather than elders.

Those whose birthday it is may experience a year of conflict and contradictions. Important benefits accrue from initiative, determined effort and the aggressive attempt to launch new and important projects. At the same time, there may be a definite setback, due to illness, bereavement, grief or some other frustration. Safeguard funds against loss.

A child born on this day may be energetic and aggressive, and may attract the attention of important persons. Yet, it may suffer from an impetuous and overstrenuous nature.

AT THE CAPITOL

"Cassidy of Bar 20"

A fast-moving story of romance, rustling and revenge in the New Mexico cattle frontier is well told in the latest Hopalong Cassidy, "Cassidy of Bar 20," which starts tomorrow at the Capitol, with William Boyd again in the role of the fighting cowboy.

Cattle-rustling and the efforts of cattlemen to meet this threat to their lives and security forms the background for the Clarence E. Mulford plot. Robert Fiske is the undisputed boss of the New Mexico country until he makes the bold attempt to increase his holdings at the expense of a girl rancher, Nora Lane, an old sweetheart of Hopalong's.

In his efforts to save Nora's cattle and to stamp out the rustlers at the same time, the Bar 20 foreman runs the gamut of high adventure. Before he can even reach Nora's ranch, Fiske has him arrested on a fake charge, after which he and his saddlemate Russell Hayden, are put under the rustler's custody by a crooked Alamogordo judge.

Fiske's increasing boldness, which comes to a head when he murders Nora's foreman, makes Hopalong risk his neck to gain his freedom. He reaches Nora's ranch, a picturesque replica of an old New Mexico hacienda, and gathers his Bar 20 men together for a battle with Fiske's Texas outlaws which turns the tables on Fiske.

The exciting Mulford story is well acted by an experienced cast which includes Frank Darien, John Elliott, Margaret Marquis and Gertrude Hoffman.

As its 2nd feature on the program the Capitol presents "Tarzan's Revenge," with Glenn Morris and Eleanor Holm, two Olympic champions. Story by Edgar Rice Burroughs.

AT THE McCARTHY

"The Main Event"

The boxing-ring forms the background for the smash action-hit which will have its premiere showing in Belleville at the McCarthy Theatre, beginning tomorrow.

Robert Paige and Jacqueline Wells, new screen finds, head the excellent cast in this exceptional screen comedy-drama entitled "The Main Event."

The story woven around the boxing events, the highlight of the film is packed with action-thrills and suspense to completely satisfy all lovers of entertainment which keeps them sitting on the edge of their seats. Danny Dare, the director, has ingeniously kept "the film moving at a breakneck pace and has provided an unusual climax, as well as hilarious comedy relief. "The Main Event" is a production that lacks nothing in super entertainment and, after the opening day should be the talk of Belleville.

The chapter play, "The Spider's Web," and Ray Whitley and his Bar 6 cowboys in a western musical featurette "The Buckaroo Broadcast," in addition to a splendid "Screen Snapshots" will be presented daily in advance of the feature presentation.

The Country Store

A novelty stage attraction on Thursday evening at 9 p.m. to help the Belleville Firemen's Christmas fund, will be presented at the McCarthy Theatre. Fourteen valuable prizes ranging from a half a cord of wood, a turkey, chickens, sugar, flour, to potatoes and well filled baskets of groceries. "The Country Store" idea has not been presented here in a number of years and as it has to do with the raising of more needed money for needy families, to bring them a happier Christmas Day for 1938, the McCarthy Theatre should be filled to capacity. You are requested to please come, this will be your last opportunity to give the Belleville Firemen your much needed assistance this year.

Lee Tracey's latest starring production, "Crashing Hollywood," an exciting comedy-drama with Hollywood and motion pictures serving as background for the story, will be presented at the McCarthy Theatre for the last times tonight. Joan Woodbury and Lee Patrick, two popular feminine stars have the leading romantic roles in this excellent hit.

Jacqueline Wells featured with Robert Paige in "The Main Event," coming to the McCarthy Theatre.

WALL STREET CLOSE

New York, Dec. 21—(AP)— The year-end downdrift picked up speed in the stock market today and many issues gave way for losses ranging to around two points.

Near the final hour prices were about the lowest of the day but trading was quiet on the decline. Market observers could find nothing explicit in the news to account for the drop.

Transactions were about 1,100,000 shares.

TORONTO STOCKS

Toronto, Dec 21—(CP)—Western Oil group and Broulan Porcupine of the Junior Golds featured the trade today on Toronto Stock Exchange. Oils were showing substantial gains at early afternoon. Base Metal and Industrial shares also ruled higher. Golds were down slightly.

Broulan traded about 225,000 of the aggregate 511,000 shares moved in the first three hours and the price advanced to 78 for an overnight gain of 20 cents. Naybob and Bobjo were other strong juniors. Payore stock was delisted today for "failure to comply with exchange regulations."

Home Oil advanced 30 cents to 2.82, Okalta 10 to 15 cents and most of the cheaper Western Oils were strong and active.

In the Industrial Section Food, Senior Oil and Liquor shares posted fractional gains.

County Court

District police raided the home of Alfred E. Beckwith, Trenton, where they found an illicit still in operation and a quantity of moonshine liquor on the premises. Headed by the R.C.M.P., Trenton authorities augmented the raid, when a large four gallon copper still, worm and mash was confiscated, along with several bottles of alleged illicit liquor.

Beckwith was arraigned before a Justice of the Peace at Trenton last night charged with the manufacture of illicit liquor and the operation of a still. Beckwith was later admitted to bail to appear in town police court at Trenton on Dec. 27th.

Raymond Joyce, Deseronto, appeared before H. J. Eade, Indian agent at Deseronto yesterday, charged with supplying liquor to Indians, contrary to the Indian Act. A fine of $50.00 and costs was imposed. The charge was preferred by the R.C.M.P.

Wallace Boomhower, Flinton, appeared before Magistrate J. L. Lloyd in County Police Court at Tweed ecently charged with the possession of illicit liquor and parts of a still suitable for the manufacture of illicit liquor. In default of payment of the assessed fine, Boomhower was sentenced to serve three months in the common jail.

On a subsequent charge of driving a motor car while intoxicated, Boomhower was sentenced to serve seven days in jail also. The cases were presented by the R.C.M.P., who were assisted in their investigations by Chief J. C. Hayes of Tweed.

Clarence Dafoe, 21 of Tweed, was remanded to the custody of the county jail yesterday when he appeared before a Justice of the Peace in Tweed facing an extremely serious charge under section 202 of the Canadian Criminal code. Chief Hayes, who effected the arrest and preferred the charge stated bail had been denied the accused yesterday.

Livestock

Montreal, Dec. 21 (CP)— Bacon hogs showed a 25 cent gain on Montreal livestock markets today but there were scarcely enough sales in other sections to establish prices, the Dominion Department of Agriculture reported.

Receipts: Cattle 43; calves 21; hogs 245; sheep and lambs 7.

Cattle: Heifers ranged from $4-$5.50. Common to medium butcher cows were $3-$3.50, canners and cutters $2.50 and common bulls $3.25-$3.75.

The few calves offered were medium veals and made $9-$9.50.

Hogs: Bacons, fed and watered, brought $9.50. Selects drew $1 per hog premium with the usual cuts on off grades. Sows were $7.25-$8.

Toronto Butter Prices Easier

Toronto, Dec. 21.— Butter was easier, eggs firm and cheese unchanged on the Toronto open produce market yesterday according to reports issued by the Dominion Department of Agriculture.

With Western regraded butter sold on spot locally at 21 1-2c, the market for Ontario creamery solids was depressed. Trading was slow and spotty. Offerings were not heavy, but proved ample for current demand. Ontario solids sold at 21 1-2c for No. 1 grades, 20 3-4c for 38 score and 20c for 37 score.

The egg market maintained a firm tone as light offerings cleared readily. Prices remained unchanged in all divisions. Graded shipments moved at 33c for grade A-large, 28c for medium, 27c for pullets, 25c for B's and 22c for C grades. Retail business was holding up well.

Butter Steady

Montreal, Dec. 20—(CP)—Despite inactive trading, butter prices held steady on open produce markets here the Dominion Department of Agriculture reported. Other products remained unchanged, barring a few variations on the egg section.

Creamery butter prints to retailers were 22 1-2c to 23c and solids 22c to 22 1-2c. Western butter delivered in Montreal was offered at 21 3-4c for regraded.

Graded egg shipments in used free cases were offered at 35c a dozen for A-large, 29c for A-medium, 28c for A-pullets, 24c to 25c for B-large and 21 1-2c for C. Receipts—508 cases.

DR. J. A. THOMPSON DIES SUDDENLY

Well Known Dentist is Stricken With Heart Attack

Tweed, Dec. 21 (Special)—Dr. J. A. Thompson, dentist of this village, died at his home suddenly at eight o'clock this morning as the result of a heart attack. He was in his 68th. year.

Dr. Thompson came to Tweed from Havelock about twenty-five years ago. Prior to his entry into the practice of dentistry, he had been a successful school teacher. Mrs. Thompson preceded him to the grave about fifteen years ago.

Dr. Thompson was a prominent Oddfellow, a member of the Tweed United Church and several years ago chairman of the High School Board. He was much interested in sports of all kinds.

He was widely known and his death is mourned by an extended circle of friends.

Three daughters survive, Helen, Maxine, nurse-in-training in Toronto and Edith at home.

After a short service at Tweed on Friday, the body will be taken for burial to Omemee where his wife was buried.

Dr. Stothers will continue in his capacity of school inspector in Prince Edward County however, but will devote only one week of his time to this duty. He takes over his new position on January 1st next year.

SPLENDID SKATING ON BAY HARBOR

The joyous shouts of children in play can be heard nightly on the Belleville harbour, where splendid skating is being enjoyed by children and adults alike these fine December nights. Last night a goodly number of skaters were seen gracefully gliding over the ice enjoying their favorite winter recreation. The clubhouse of the Belleville Yacht Club has been opened for the accommodation of the public where skaters may change their shoes. The Yacht Club members have also marked out a good sized skating rink, where all are invited to enjoy the out-of-doors fresh air and a healthy skate. President Maurice Callaghan, of the Yacht Club, stated today the ice was quite safe for children to venture upon in the harbour, but did not recommend skating out towards the government dock or on the open bay. The ice is in splendid skating condition on the harbour, it was stated by skaters today.

ENTRANCE MADE IN SHELL OFFICE

Forcing an entrance through a rear window, thieves broke into the office of the Shell Oil Company warehouse some time last night.

The midnight intruders escaped with a number of keys and a pair of gloves. An attempt to break into the office safe met with apparent failure, but the thieves succeeded in smashing the knob of the combination before giving up the attempt.

Police are investigating.

WITNESSES STATE

Officer Sam Ervine was entered as exhibit one.

Godfrey Scott, Belleville, identified photographs he had taken on Sunday at the scene of the accident, under the direction of Constable Ervine, and these were also entered as exhibits, together with photographs taken on Pinnacle Street, Belleville, of a car from Riggs garage which had been impounded by Constable Ervine near the scene of the accident, and close ups of the right headlight showing broken glass and the absence of a bolt of the top of the hood.

Traffic Officer Heard

Constable Sam Ervine in his testimony said that he had received a call at 6.03 Saturday Dec. 3rd and had arrived at the scene of the accident at 6.10. The night was cloudy, the moon appearing at intervals. There was no rain before the accident. It was necessary to have car lights on at 15 to five. Near the Simonds' home he found numerous pieces of glass, he picked up a bolt with a nut and washer and these were all entered as exhibits. The officer found blood stains three or four inches across on the road near the bolt and washer. These were halfway between the east and west driveways of the Simonds' home.

The witness testified that he had found a car a mile and a half south of the accident on Highway No. 14. It was a Chevrolet coach of which the right headlight was broken. Constable Ervine found the upper part of a broken bolt which had dropped on the fender of the car, and scattered glass on the car.

Car Taken to Garage

He told of having the car towed to Riggs' Garage, Belleville. The lights on the car did not work but the brakes were in a very fair condition. He identified pictures taken by Godfrey Scott and further exhibits including a battered pail under the car driven by Mr. Smith were entered. The car was registered in the name of Luther Alyea, R. R. 1, Carrying Place, son of the accused witness told the court.

Later the accused and his son, Luther, had called at the Belleville police station inquiring about the car.

"They did not know about the accident they said", the witness testified. Orbey Alyea was driving the car, witness was told, and had remembered a jolt. The lights of the car were not working, so accused abandoned the car, thinking it was not safe to continue.

Dr. Frankish, medico-legal expert of the Attorney-General's Department, Toronto, identified the part of a bolt found near the scene of the accident as being a continuation of the bolt found on the fender of the Alyea car.

Car Struck Pail

Mr. Smith, Kingston, stated on the stand that he found Simonds lying along the road at the scene of the accident. He was driving along that part of the highway, when he felt his car strike something lying diagonally across the road. Getting out of his car, he discovered the injured man lying nearby. He immediately telephoned a doctor. There were no cars near the scene at the time witness told the court.

Mrs. Cora Salisbury, who lives on the Massassaga Road stated, that she was returning from Belleville on foot, with her son, Douglas. A car without lights passed her on the bridge that runs over the marsh on the highway, she said. A little while later another car with its lights on passed her. She heard a scraping noise, afterwards identified as being caused by a pail caught beneath the Smith car.

Court was adjourned at this point for lunch.

Two Men to Spend Winter in Isolation On Main Duck Island

Isolated from the outside world, with four months of lonely habitation on the "Graveyard of Lake Ontario", as it is termed among mariners of the Great Lakes, staring them in the face, and with the only communication with the mainland being a small radio receiving set, Jacob Dreive and James McKenna, left for the Main Ducks Island yesterday to take charge of the twelve hundred acre storm-buffeted piece of land that lies in Lake Ontario off Prince Edward County.

The men will be cut off from their fellow-men until next March when lighthouse tenders will arrive for duty. No wireless message can be sent to the mainland, the only transmitting apparatus on the island being the radio beacon transmitter located, in the fog station near the lighthouse, and this is closed down until navigation opens in the Spring.

The men will care for fifteen head of stock, the property of Mrs. Claude Cole of Cape Vincent owner of the island. They will in their spare time harvest a large supply of ice for summer requirements.

They were taken to the island by tug, which carried supplies, tobacco, books, sufficient to fill their requirements until Spring.

Wanted in Belleville Arrested in Milton

Wanted by police in Belleville, Picton and Trenton on charges of obtaining motor vehicles by fraud, to wit worthless cheques, D. C. Tauffkarch, alias Dawson C. Tufgar, said to be a native of Hamilton, was arrested in Milton, Ont., yesterday by Provincial Constable Oliver on a similar charge of obtaining a truck by fraud.

City and Provincial Police throughout the Quinte district have been seeking the whereabouts of Tauffkarch, alias Tufgard for some weeks following complaints from several motor car dealers regarding having sold used cars and trucks to Tauffkarch, who tendered cheques in payment, which the dealers allege were returned as worthless.

Provincial Police at Belleville today notified the authorities at Milton relative to the charges locally and asked to have Tauffkarch held on a warrant issued in Belleville.

OBITUARY

MRS. DORA GOODMAN

After an illness of several months' duration Mrs. Dora Goodman, widow of Harry D. Goodman, passed away this Wednesday morning, December 21st., at her residence 307 1-2 Front Street.

The late Mrs. Goodman was a resident of Belleville for many years and was well respected. To her friends her death has brought sincere regret.

Surviving her are two sons, Mr. Jacob Goodman and Mr. Samuel Goodman, both of Belleville; two sisters, Mrs. Charles Springer, Belleville, and Mrs. A. Albert, Lindsay.

The funeral will take place in Toronto on Thursday, December 22nd.

CLUB MEMBERS ENJOY FINE SOCIAL EVENING

In a typical pre-Christmas atmosphere, members of the Belleville Club gathered in the Pinnacle Street club rooms last evening to enjoy the first of the season's social gatherings. About seventy-five members and friends enjoyed the cards and games and the social hour which was followed by an excellent supper.

Budget of Turkey Dinner for Family At Christmas Averages 4 - 5 Dollars

Heads of families figuring the Christmas dinner budget at the present time are finding that costs this year are not above those of last year and in a few cases, will be slightly below the per pound price of 1937 in Belleville.

Turkeys, geese, chickens and ducks which will rank upon local tables in that order of popularity, as estimated by one Front Street butcher, are just about the same price as last year. Chickens and ducks may be slightly lower but not noticeably so, a matter of but a few cents only.

The dinner will be fitted to suit the family purse, but a good, average check was made by the local retailer.

The turkey will cost at least $2.50. If the meal is begun with a fruit or vegetable cocktail, sufficient tomato juice or pineapple juice should be obtained for a family of five for ten cents. Add celery at ten cents; cranberries at 25 cents, a tin of peas at fifteen cents and lettuce and tomatoes at twenty and fifteen cents respectively and much of the first purchasing has been concluded.

Bread to stuff the turkey costs eight and ten cents the loaf. Onions will cost twenty-five cents a peck. The plum pudding, if one is purchased will average thirty cents the pound, three pounds at least being needed. Added to this are potatoes and other vegetables which will run the cost up to fifty cents more. Then there are grapes, nuts and candies.

"The dinner should cost at least four or five dollars to be in the tradition of Christmas", it was explained.

However, many a family will forego the turkey in favor of chicken for the main course, it was stated by the dealer who reports a heavy demand for this latter class of fowl.

"When Knights Were Bold"

By Pauline E. Blackwell

Madge dropped her book with a sigh. "Why, oh, why, are not the men of today like that?" she mused.

She turned again to the passage which had excited this comment, and read it slowly aloud — with dramatic emphasis.

"The brave Sir Roebling seized his glistening lance, mounted his fiery coal-black steed, and advanced to do battle for his lady—his armor glinting silver in the sun, and his scarlet pennon flying, while the fair maid of Aberwyn stood watching at the castle gate, her bright hair glistening in the sun, her eyes—"

"Gee, Madge, why the heroics?" broke in a deep, amused voice at this point.

Madge came back to earth with a thud, and whirled, stammering: "Why, why, Dick, where did you come from?"

"Just dropped in to take you for a spin—that is, if you'll go." He smiled boyishly. "I can't promise you the coal-black steed or the rest of it, you know."

And Madge, with a half-smothered sigh for the prancing stallions, gleaming armor, courtly knights and stately castles, hurried out of the little roadster and the pleasant-faced young chap in well-worn knickers at the curb.

It was always the same. For a moment she rose to the heights of Olympus, only to be dashed rudely to earth by the commonplace things of life. So she mused, managing, nevertheless, to enjoy the crisp, sparkling air, and the delightful scenery through which they were passing. If Dick noticed her preoccupation, he made no mention of it. He was used to her moods, and philosophically decide to wait until she was ready to speak.

After some time she told him—as he knew she would—with whole-souled ardor pouring out the story of her dreams.

Dick listened attentively, as he always did. And, being a practical young man, he resolved to do something about it.

Now not even his worst enemy could accuse Dick of being an idealist. His plans were always severely practical, and business-like in the extreme, and thus, in his usual manner, he proceeded to carry out what he gathered to be her wishes in the matter.

The next day found him at Madge's door with two sleek chestnut mares (the nearest he had been able to get to coal-black chargers) stamping impatiently in the rear. Madge was astonished, but game.

To be sure, Dick's smart tweed riding suit was scarcely equivalent to gleaming armor, but it was undoubtedly more becoming. After a scarcely perceptible hesitation, Madge came slowly out to inspect the mounts.

Now Madge had never ridden a horse before, but after some time she managed, with Dick's determined assistance, to mount the back of the less wild-looking of the two horses.

Dick swung onto his mount with a little less difficulty, and off the two started.

In a very few minutes Madge was balancing precariously in her saddle, and swinging dizzily from side to side. She called frantically to Dick, but that gallant young escort was by this time having troubles of his own, an he did not even hear her. Thus they continued for some minutes, at the end of which time poor Madge loosed her frantic hold on the horse's mane, and slipped helplessly to the ground.

The intelligent animal stopped a few rods farther on, and Dick, risking one fleeting backward glance, saw the empty saddle.

With a herculean effort he managed to arrest somewhat the speed of his own mount, and at the risk of broken limbs, jumped from the still galloping horse.

He ran swiftly back to the small, huddled form, and lifted her from the ground.

"Madge, oh Madge, please speak to me," he pleaded.

Madge obliningly opened her eyes.

"What—what happened?" she choked.

The next night a certain familiar little roadster drew up before Madge's gate, and a pleasant-faced young chap in spotless flannels rapped briskly on the door.

Upon hearing this Madge rose—rather painfully, to be sure—from the chair, seized an apparently harmless leather-covered volume, and threw it with well-directed aim into a far corner of the library.

"Just a minute, Dickie," she called gayly, and in slighly over the alloted minute she was seated by his side. Glancing roguishly up to him, she murmured softly:

"They can have their old prancing steeds. We'd rather have this, wouldn't we?"

And Dick nodded silent assent. He was still very lame.

Try These Recipes To Vary Yule Menu

THESE RECIPES

By ALICE LYNN BARRY

"THE NIGHT before Christmas" s the conventional time for hang- g the stocking over the fireplace r even over the gas or electric ove), but wise homemakers get heir socks filled up ahead of time, lled-up with new menu ideas and cipes. While the rest of the fam- y lights candles, hangs up the istletoe and gets poised to stick umbs in plum puddings, it is the ome-maker who has to strive to ve up to all those great food ex- ectations of the holiday season.

The regular Yuletide menu, from he fruit cup through to the cran- rry sauce, is something that is retty familiar to all of us, so we re glad to offer a few suggestions o give holiday menus a new zip. hey are ideal for any part of the holiday season. First of all, for a elicious fruit cup arrange grape- ruit segments around sides of a herbet glass, with thin slices of red pple between. Pile tangerine seg- ments in centre and top this ealthful cup with sprig of fresh int.

Cheese Croutons

Cheese croutons in a clear soup ffer a pleasant alternative to the heavy creamed soup. To make he croutons, cut stale bread in ne-eighth-inch slices, spread thin- y with softened butter and cream- d American cheese. Cut with ound cutter one and one-half in- hes in diameter and fry in deep at at 375 F. until delicately brown- d.

Tangerine cranberry jelly will dd a new note to the turkey. It akes a quart of cranberries, three ups water, two and one-half cups ugar, one-quarter cup lemon juice, wo cups tangerine sections, one-quarter teaspoon salt, one envelope plain unflavored gelatine and one cup cold water. Cook cranberries in water until soft. Force through strainer. Add sugar, lemon juice, tangerine sections, salt and bring to a boil. Soften gelatine in cold water and add to hot mixture, stirring until gelatine dissolves. Cool and freeze.

Pumpkin Tarts

Orange pumpkin tarts offer a nice variation on the pumpkin pie theme. To serve 12 you will require two and one-quarter cups cooked pumpkin, one and one-half cups brown sugar, three-eighths teaspoon salt, one and one-eighth teaspoon cinnamon, one and one-half cups evaporated milk, three beaten eggs, one-quarter teaspoon mace, one and one-half taspoons vanilla, three-quarters cup fresh orange juice and one and one-half teaspoons grated orange rind. Line small pie pans with rich pastry, building up the edges about one-half inch. Chill. Mix the ingredients in the order listed and turn into pastry shells. Bake at 425 F. for 25 minutes or until custard is firm.

Holiday fruit logs are grand nibbling! One package dates, one and one-third cups shredded cocoanut, one-half cup nutmeats, three-quarters cup dried apricots, one-quarter pound figs, one tablespoon orange juice and one teaspoon orange rind will make one and one-quarter pounds. Chop dates, cocoanut, nut meats, apricots and figs, or run all through food chopper. Knead in orange juice. Divide fruit paste in halves. Roll into long strips one-half inch in diameter. Roll in toasted cocoanut or chopped nuts, cut into one-inch logs. Tie each log with red ribbon.

CO-OPERATIVE JOB IS DISH WASHING

By ELEANOR ROSS

CLEARING the table and washing the dishes should be a co-operative job in households where there is no paid help to do the cleaning up. But there's such a thing as having too much assistance. When one person helps, under average home conditions, dish washing time can be cut in half, but when three or more start to bustle about the kitchen, the law of diminishing returns starts to take effect.

In an experiment conducted by the College of Home Economics at Cornell University, records were kept of the time spent in washing dishes for a family of four over the period of a month. "Dishwashing" included clearing the table, putting away left-overs, disposal of the garbage, washing the dish towels and cloths, and washing the breadbox once a week. Ordinarily, dishes used for breakfast and lunch were washed together and left to drain, except for silver and glassware.

Three Women in Test

Throughout the test period the same three women did the work, either alone or with the help of one or two others. The equipment they used was the simplest—a scraper for the dishes, running hot water and soap. A checkup revealed that dishwashing for each meal required a little less than 16 minutes, or about four minutes for each member of the family. Two persons were able to work together at approximately the same speed, but a third made it necessary for one of the others to slow down. In either case, the dishes were washed easily and efficiently in less than half an hour a day.

Time saving was not the only factor to be considered in home dish washing, the survey concluded. In many households the pleasure of working together might justify a slight loss of time. When all the members of the family are busy, it is undoubtedly more efficient for one person to do the dishes, but if one other person is at leisure, then there are advantages in team work.

The main thing with dish washing, as with all other tasks, is to work out a system and adhere to it. During the preparing and cooking of food, all utensils should be washed and put away or filled with hot water so that washing will be a simple affair after dinner. The china, silver and glassware do not present such a formidable array. It is the bowls, the dishes, the pots and pans used in cooking that present the biggest task and make dish washing the bugaboo it is to so many housewives. Procrastination is the soul of evil in dish washing, as it is in so many things. So try dividing the period into two halves, one for utensils, the other for tableware.

Fear of Sickness Often Cause of It

By LOGAN CLENDENING, M.D.

ONE OF the most common causes of illness is fear of sickness itself. Unscrupulous doctors fatten on the victim of such fears. Often the most thorough-going examination by a competent diagnostician fails to relieve the anxiety. If one fear is allayed, another springs up to take its place. Mothers, especially, are constantly haunted by the fear of illness in their children. Not content with administering to the child all the vaccines and antitoxins that the most enthusiastic hygienist could suggest, on the slightest pretext they wish the child put to bed and dosed.

The dread of sickness is much worse than a stiff brush with sickness itself. The mother is in danger of giving her child an invalid reaction which can warp and embitter life more than sickness. A lusty child may rebound from these cares in his behalf, but many a one of them is bent to the parental mold and lays the foundation for life-long invalidism.

Related to Inhibitions

These fears or phobias are closely related to the inhibitions. The incapacity for action and decision gives evidence of a greater lowering of nervous potential than does the impulsion. These cases are also difficult to treat once an inhibition gets started. It is easier to control a force than to create one.

As these neuroses proceed they become progressively more difficult to treat. The victims are less accessible to suggestion and persuasion, less capable of an ordered life. The paralysis and anaesthesia of the greed-neuroses are not very far from the delusions of persecution often conjured up by the paranoiac to justify his weakness.

Can't Distinguish

There are no definite criteria by which the insane can be distinguished from the sane. In dreams one is quite insane. One is lost to the sense of proportion and reality. In dreams one has hallucinations, hears voices, is unreasonably lively or is filled with dread or horror; one fancies oneself to be a great and distinguished personage, or suffers unspeakable humiliations.

So in waking life, the line between sanity and insanity is often very narrow, and no one on earth is able to say whether a person who exhibits eccentricity is really technically insane or not.

And we may come back to the thesis with which we began the series this week and say it is equally impossible in these people to state whether the body is more affected than the mind. Certainly treatment or rehabilitation demands measures which are directed towards the body as well as towards the mind that controls it.

An Adventure in Shadowland

Punch Is Great "If" Man

By MAX TRELL

KNARF and Hanid were very pleased the other night to find Mr. Punch and his wife, Judy, sitting in the playroom. Both of them were puppets—they often played in little puppet-shows for the amusement of the children.

"Sit down: make yourselves comfortable," Mr. Punch said gaily to Knarf and Hanid. "Take the soft chairs—they're the best."

"Nonsense," said Judy.

"Nonsense, my dear? Why do you say nonsense?" Mr. Punch inquired. "I don't see anything nonsensical about asking our good friends, Knarf and Hanid, to sit in the nice soft chairs."

Knarf and Hanid wondered, too.

Are No Soft Chairs

"Of course it's nonsense," said Judy. "There aren't any soft chairs for them to sit in. You'd better sit on the floor," she told the two shadows. "Try to make yourselves as comfortable as you can."

Mr. Punch laughed. "Well, if there had been soft chairs you could have sat in them. Are you hungry?" he asked at the next moment.

The two shadows shook their heads. "We had a very big dinner," Hanid said.

"But you'd like some nice cookies, wouldn't you—crisp almond cookies with apple jelly?"

"Well, down in our pantry," he continued, "in a large china pot with a cover on it there are—"

"Nonsense!" said Judy suddenly. "There isn't a cookie in the house. You ate the last crumb for breakfast this morning."

Wrong Again

Mr. Punch sighed. "You see, there aren't any. But if there had been I'm sure you would have enjoyed eating them."

"Oh! that's all right, Mr. Punch," said Knarf. "We really didn't want any—much."

"Take the soft chairs."

Mr. Punch felt happy again. "Do you know," he said, "Judy is one of the smartest persons in the world. She never lets me say anything that isn't exactly right. You might think I'd get insulted," Mr. Punch went on. "But not me—no sir. I don't like to say things that aren't true. Why! goodness knows what sort of silly things I might say! But Judy always stops me. Judy's the smartest, the cleverest, the nicest, the—"

"Nonsense, Mr. Punch!" Judy broke in sharply. "You're saying the silliest things again!" But this time Knarf and Hanid could see that she was smiling even though she didn't lift her head from her darning.

Marriage Meddlers -:-

A Sequel to "Married Comrades"

By ADELE GARRISON

SYNOPSIS: With Noel Veritzen and his young wife, Mary, again reunited in a New York hotel through the success of a plot engineered by Madge Graham to thwart Noel's father Philip Veritzen, famous producer, in his efforts to keep the young couple apart while Mary is training for a role in a new Veritzen play, Madge now finds herself facing another problem. Although she had planned to spend some of the time during their stay with Noel in rehearsing Mary for the stage role, Madge suspects that Noel is determined to oppose the idea. Before she retires for the night, Madge is visited by Mary, who confirms her suspicions about Noel's antagonistic attitude. Anxious to relieve Mary of her fears, Madge tells her that she has a scheme, and asks Mary to be ready to catch the cues she will feed her when she talks to Noel the next morning.

MARY'S EYES, attentive and worried, lost their tension and mirrored relief as I told her that I had a scheme for mollifying Noel which I thought would work, and asked her to catch the cues I meant to feed her the next morning.

"Will I ever catch them?" she queried, dashing at me and enveloping me in one of her breathless [illegible]. "Watch me! Just watch me!" she implored. "And tell me now just what you want me to do."

"Nothing except entertain Noel and keep him contented and happy until I give you the signal that I'm going into action."

She looked at me with sudden mischief in her eyes.

"I'll tell you what," she said. "Wrinkle your nose at me. Always when you do that, you have something amusing in the offing."

"It may be anything but amusing, Mary," I warned her. "But I think it may interest Noel, provided he's in the right mood."

Her eyes clouded perceptibly.

Right Mood?

.."Ah! that's the trouble," she said ruefully. " 'The right mood!' I wonder if he'll ever be in 'the right mood' as long as I—"

She broke off abruptly and went to the door, waving me an airy farewell.

"But I'll do my little best," she promised, and opened the door upon the word. When she had closed it after her, and there was no more need for me to pretend nonchalance I lay back upon my pillows and gave myself up to morbid, anxious fears for the morrow, and futile regrets that I ever had planned this scheme of giving Mary and Noel a secret reunion.

For if I read Mary's mood aright, she was distinctly pessimistic concerning Noel's present—and future—attitude toward her work. Her unfinished sentence made me wonder what her own counter reaction would be should he carry his present palpable jealousy of her time and attention to the point of seriously interfering with her career as an actress.

Why was it, I wondered miserably, that to many men marriage meant cruel possessive jealousy of a wife's soul as well as of her body?

I had seen it happen so many times, witnessed the slow crushing of a wife's individuality beneath the relentless domnance of her husband. And, in all justice, I knew that much of the jealousy at the root of the domination was subconscious, as I was sure it was in Noel's case. For Noel, ordinarily, as I had told myself more than once, was a gentle and tender soul.

Women Have It, Too

That women also have this cruel, possessive jealousy, I had to admit, but that problem was not the one now before me. Mary could be intensely jealous of Noel's interest in another woman, but where his career was concerned, I knew that she would never dream of interfering with it, and that she would accord it the enthusiastic admiration—and aid—which she would like to have him extend to her own work.

One thing, however, was increasingly clear—and certain to me. There was nothing whatever I could do about the problem before morning. With this fact looming large before me, I resolutely put all troublesome conjectures concerning Noel and Mary into the farthest compartment of my brain, and picked up a magazine to begin that most fascinating of all pastimes to me—reading myself to sleep.

Retires For Night

It did not take long before the magazine dropped from my hand to the floor, and the resultant mental jolt sent my hand to the lamp switch to turn it off. A minute or two of delicious drowsiness and I was sound asleep, to awaken only at the tinkle of my alarm clock which I had put within easy reach of my hand.

I snapped the alarm off before it reached the shrill stage, and then wakened myself gradually with "stretching exercises." Then I reached for the telephone and ordered breakfast to be sent up in half an hour. By the time it came I was showered, dressed for the street and thoroughly awake. I breakfasted a bit more amply than is my custom, scanned the morning papers, and then, donning my hat and coat, went down to the street, turning in the direction of the nearest branch postoffice.

ODD FACTS

A bullet fired from an army rifle was caught by a man 40 yards away with his teeth at the Piff Paff Poofers' annual convention in Fort Erie, Ontario. He whirled and fell to the ground. Then he got up and dropped a warm bullet from his mouth into a policeman's hand. The policeman identified it as the one he had fired.

CHAPTER XV

"I am taking Jan to lunch," said Dr. Curtis, "and she tells me that she already has a luncheon date with you—so we've decided to make it a threesome."

Jan laughed nervously. "I am sure Tony will be delighted," she said before the glowering Tony could speak.

For answer Tony jammed the chauffeur's cap back on his head. "It suits me perfectly,' he announced—"because I just had a piece of bad news for your little friend, Doctor. I was just waiting around, Jan, to tell you I have to call our date off. Important business for Mr. Deverest. But I will be glad to drop you—and your friend—wherever you want to go. Will you help Miss Payson in, sir?"

Tony stood at attention as Dr. Curtis opened the rear door of the car and handed Jan inside. He was about to follow when a violent kick on the ankle from Tony caused him to utter an involuntary cry, and Jan looked up questioningly. "I just barked my shin — clumsy of me...." the doctor told her, climbing in hastily and slamming the door. Tony, looking immensely pleased with himself, took his place behind the wheel. A few minutes later they were in front of the restaurant Dr. Curtis had suggested, and Tony, hardly waiting for their thanks, shot off almost before they were well on the sidewalk.

Jan would have been uncomfortable about Tony if she had not found Dr. Curtis such a pleasant companion. He was more at ease with her—more than Tony had ever been. It was highly flattering and Jan expanded in his company, just as Dr. Curtis had intended she should. Jan found herself talking gayly, when she had felt at first that she would not be able to utter a word. She even described some of her adventures with Tony.

"You like this young chap, don't you?" the doctor asked presently.

"I — I — hadn't thought much about it, Doctor," said Jan.

"The name is 'Brad,'" said Dr. Curtis. "Do you think you could learn to call me Brad instead of Doctor?"

"Easily," said Jan—"Brad!"

They laughed together and the talk went on. But somehow, by the time they were drinking their coffee, Jan had the conviction that Brad Curtis did not exactly approve, well—that was the only way she could put it—of her friendship with Tony Williams, Mr. William Anthony Deverest's chauffeur.

When she got to the hotel apartment she took out the little pale blue covered note book in which she had promised Dora to write down "Everything Pussy-puff Says and Does." It was going to be called "Pussy-puff's Diary," but this was the first moment she had had to start it. Under the date she wrote slowly:

"I feel so sad today I could mew all the time. My dear Dora is away in the hospital, and although I know when she comes back we will have more fun together than ever before, I do miss her terribly ...." She went on until she had covered almost two pages.

There was a big crowd at the show that night. The young people were home from school and college for the holidays, and pre-Christmas festivity filled the air. Jan's song was applauded with gusto—and she had to give two encores after the Jingle Bells number. Later Paul Harris sent word to her that a group of prominent business men had taken a table and were anxious to have her and some of the other girls share it with them.

There was nothing to do but obey. "Maybe I won't have to stay very long,' she thought as she looked about for the table. Three of the girls in the dance ensemble were already there—the tall blonde they called "Mickey" — a lively brunette named, of all things, "Matilda"—and the third, Alice Hurley.

Jan found herself between a man who introduced himself as "Mr. Frazier, a right smart lawyer to you," and Clem Haliack, the big "brooch and bracelet man" introduced to her by Mickey.

Jan smiled a little wanly, and shook her head in response to the insistent, "Have a drink, Cutie" "What'll it be?"—"Here, let's have a wine list, waiter."

"Oh, no,—no. Please. Nothing to drink," murmured Jan hastily, and pushed away the card the waiter offered her.

"Bring her an old fashioned," Mr. Frazier insisted, "she doesn't want anything to drink, and that's just a fruit salad with whisky flavoring.... Won't do you a bit of harm—not a bit."

Jan laughed in spite of herself "Well, if I have to...." These people were honestly trying to be nice!

"Sure you have to," Clem Hallack, the jeweler, shouted, "Sure you do.... liddle drink never hurt anyone," suddenly joining vigorously in the conversation.

With a pudgy forefinger he reached out and touched the bracelet gleaming on Jan's wrist. "Nice liddle junk pile there."

"It is pretty, isn't it?" agreed Jan. "I think it's wonderful the way they can imitate diamonds nowadays."

"Imitation!" cried the now wide-awake and astonished Clem. "That's no imitation, sister. Looks to me like something out of the Rajah's jewel chest!"

By this time their talk had attracted the attention of the rest of the able. "There's been a mistake, and she made it," Matilda murmured ironically.

"If I were in the mood I could tell where that shining bauble came from," observed the grinning Mickey. "If you look closely you will probably find the initials W. A. D." she broke off suddenly and a look of pain crossed her face. Alice Hurley had pinched her hard under the table—and it was Alice who now abruptly changed the subject.

The rest of the evening was a nightmare to Jan. Sick with horror, she had no idea how she finally managed to get away from the others and escape to her apartment. She unfastened the beautiful bracelet and flung it into a drawer as if the very touch of it burned her fingers.

Mickey's reference to the supposed initials inside her bracelet had not disturbed her. She had steeled herself to such references, feeling that it was part of the role that, for Dora's sake, she had to play. It was the knowledge that the bracelet Tony had given her was valuable that frightened her.

Now she understood everything: Mrs. Mallord's legacy, the club house for Jackie and his friends, Tony's fine evening clothes— his invitations to her to dine and dance in smart places and, finally, this gift that she had accepted so happily. Why, Tony could not afford any of them! She had wondered how he could have done so much to please her on his chauffeur's salary. Of course— he wasn't doing it on his salary at all! A man in his position—the trusted employe of a millionaire — must have unusual opportunities for... Jan winced away from the word 'theft,' she would not even think it!

"Oh, he needn't have done it — he needn't have done it," she sobbed over and over again.

"I didn't want anything! I never wanted anything....but.... him!"

CHAPTER XVI

"Some party last night."

Molly, the telephone operator, turned eyes full of eager curiosity toward Jan, stopping her as she tried to pass her switchboard. Jan smiled, but refused to be drawn into the conversation.

"I didn't stay long," she said.

"You didn't?" Molly's vast astonishment became, swiftly, pleased satisfaction. She herself was now the one to do the talking. "You should 'a' seen that fella they called Clem trying to dance with Alice Hurley!" she began, plugging calls industriously. "He—"

"Sorry, Molly, I have to rush," apologized Jan, and fled up the lobby.

Outside, it was unbelievably cold. Polar weather had descended on the city during the night and Jan found herself, after a few minutes slapping her hands together to keep her fingers from freezing. Her thin kid gloves offered no protection against the icy wind. Tony had promised to meet her at the hospital—they were to go in to see Dora together. Jan wished she were not going to meet him so soon, and was glad that she could say what she had to say and get it over so quickly. She felt confused, one emotion struggling with another—everything was so discouraging! Except, of course, Dora and her operation. And Dr. Curtis.

Jan didn't feel nearly so cold as she thought of Brad Curtis's face across the luncheon table; she was conscious of a sudden warm surge around her heart. It was silly, but she had a feeling that Dr. Curtis—liked her. A prominent surgeon like that, a man at the top of his profession!

Her mind was so full of Brad Curtis that she had forgotten Tony and the problem that confronted her as she entered the hospital reception room. Tony, standing by the window, whirled at the sound of the opening door and was puzzled as he saw the light go out of Jan's face.

"Hello, Tony," Jan said lifeless-

"Hello, Tony," Jan said lifeless- his habitual greeting accompanied by a hand snapped upward in salute. "Let's get going. Dora's probably waiting."

Tony obediently followed her as she passed quickly through the door he held open, and they went on to Dora's sunny room without exchanging another word. Tony had brought an enormous box of flowers which he waved at Dora and then, when she reached out thin hands for it, he turned it over to the nurse.

"No hard work for you yet," he told her. "Save your strength for opening Christmas presents, I've heard," he dropped his voice to a whisper, "this is strictly between you and me, that Santa Claus has been working overtime this year fixing up presents for Dora Payson."

"Only for me?" Dora laughed, delightedly entering into the spirit of Tony's make-believe. "None for Jan?"

"There'll be one or two small parcels for Jan," Tony assured her.

When he had gone to the door to take the flowers from the nurse who was half concealed among the flaming red roses which filled two vases, Dora, her hand in Jan's drew her sister's face down close to her own.

"He's sweet, Jan," she murmured softly, "you should have let me see him before, I was worried about him."

Jan smoothed Dora's pale hair where it lay on the pillow. "Don't you worry about anything," she said, smiling.

"Worry? I should hope not!" cried Tony, coming back. "Look at these roses—do you think they bloomed this way by worrying? No sirree! And girls who don't worry get to look like roses in next to no time. Provided, of course, that they eat their spinach. You eat your spinach, don't you, Miss Dora Payson? You don't, by any chance, lie on your face and kick your feet up and down and bawl 'Wah! I do' wanna eat my spinach." Do you?"

His banter kept Dora giggling softly until it was time for them to leave.

"Bring him again," the sick girl begged Jan as Tony left them alone for a good-by moment.

"Of course, darling," Jan promised.

The uneasiness that had gripped her earlier in the day enveloped Jan again like a cloak as she stepped into the car. Tony used this car as if it were his own. The thought stabbed her consciousness, so that she spoke sharply before Tony pressed the starter.

"I've decided not to go shopping." Tony had planned that this was to be a shopping day.

"You haven't time?" Tony asked.

"I have to do something else." She fished around in her bag and drew out the bracelet that the odious Clem had admired the night before. "Take it back, Tony. I can't bear to think that you—"

"That I what?" said Tony, mystified, making no move to take the bracelet. She slipped it into his overcoat pocket.

"Let's not talk about it," said Jan, "Only—only don't give me anything like that again. Please, Tony."

That wasn't what she had meant to say. She had meant to be stern, and at the same time pleading. She would coax him to tell her the truth about the bracelet, make him promise to return it however he had managed to come by it

She had made up her mind to this program just as the dawn came after last night's weary, heartsick hours. Now, with Tony beside her, Jan found it hard to speak at all.

There was a silence. "Okay," said Tony finally. "If that's the way you want it."

He was not a real criminal, of that Jan was sure. He couldn't have held this job so long without discovery if he really were a thief No, it was simply that he had been led by the desire, probably, to please her, into some kind of shady transaction that netted him enough money to show off, as he had been doing.

"If you don't want to go shopping, maybe you have time for a ride?" Tony asked.

"I think not," said Jan. "You've run up a lot of mileage on my account. I think that had better stop, too."

For answer Tony shot past a red light, and a few seconds later turned off Fifth Avenue and began weaving his way to Riverside Drive.

"If that's all that's troubling you—"

"No, that's not all," said Jan quietly.

"Well, what else then?" Tony demanded.

"I don't believe I have to tell you that."

Tony kept his eyes on the road. So she knew who he was. Knew, and distrusted him because he had kept the truth from her. Evidently she believed he had been amusing himself with a romantic interlude out of his own class; that he had not told her who he was because it meant nothing to him, that he meant to disappear from her life when it suited him.

He could get her point of view clearly enough.

"Fool!" he said to himself. "You seven kinds of an idiot! You might have known this would happen.'

CHAPTER XVII

It had seemed a good idea in the beginning though, to Deverest. He had never before known any girls who took him for anyone but William Anthony Deverest, millionaire designer of sailing boats. All these girls had discounted the boat designing, about which he was serious, and thought only of the millions, about which he was indifferent. Jan was the first girl who had ever known him as just "Tony" a young man who liked to barge around finding adventure in adventurous places. It had seemed a lucky accident when she mistook him for his own chauffeur—a real break for him, a chance to find out what a girl was like when there were no millions in sight to dazzle her.

The setup was wrong though, he now admitted to himself. Too dangerous—risking discovery before he had had time to make the necessary explanations. Now the worst had happened; discovery had come and had roused distrust in her. On an impulse, Tony spun the car into what Jan had once called a "bay window"—a parking place high on the Drive where cars were premitted to linger while traffic whirred and flashed behind them and the Hudson, below them, took its dignified way to the sea.

"Listen, Jan." Tony ran up the window beside him, shutting out the cold, yanked off his driving gloves and caught both her hands between his two palms. "You understand why I did it, don't you?"

"I suppose I do," said Jan faintly.

"You don't sound as if you mean it," Tony accused her.

"Well, what do you expect me to do? Shout with joy?" Jan, fighting to keep back her tears, took refuge in anger. "It's not something that—that can be overlooked," she floundered.

"You'd overlook it if you loved me."

With a sudden movement she pulled her hands free. "It's not a question of l-love," she managed "It's a question of c-character."

"Then you don't think that love —it is love, Jan!—explains anything that a man might do?"

"I don't think it is love unless—unless it ennobles a man, or a woman either," explained Jan, gently. "I don't think it should be used to condone—well, dishonesty."

"You yourself can't condone any dishonesty?" Tony's voice sounded a little grim. "Not when I say I love you?"

"I can't believe that it's love."

"Jan!"

His voice was low with an urgent note in it. Involuntarily she turned her hand. In a swift gesture he kissed her, and for the space of a pulse beat she clung to him—this was as it should be, her heart sang to her.

"Darling, I'll prove that I love you. I'll give you everything in the world—pearls for your lovely throat—"

"No," cried Jan wildly, pushing him away, her hand against his chest. She had made things worse, not better. She was inciting him to further theft—he would go on and on, end up in prison! She could not—would not—love a thief!

"Take me home," she said brokenly.

"Right—!"

Tony backed the car, his face white and set, headed it toward down town Manhattan. As they neared the Devon Arms he inquired: "Shall I stop as usual, down the block?"

"Please do."

He drew up to the curb.

"Don't get out." She had the door open and was on the sidewalk before he could move. "Good-by, Tony."

"Good-by."

That was all. Jan heard him start the car as she hurried away. This was the first time in all these meetings that he had left her without arranging to see her again.

"Guess what Dr. Curtis said.

Dora was able to sit up now and Jan, spending every possible moment at the hospital, looked over at her propped up against her pillows, Pussy-puff's diary in her thin hands.

"That you look like a Christmas angel in that lacy bed jacket?" asked Jan absently. "Who sent that huge basket of fruit?" She pointed to an enormous bright red basket piled high with oranges, pomegranates and strange tropic fruits she could not even name.

"Paul Harris," confessed Dora, "wasn't it nice of him? But listen, Jan, to what my doctor man said—"

"I'm listening, darling. What did he say?"

"He said I'll be home by New Year's!"

"Not really!" Jan hugged her. "I can hardly believe it."

"It's going to be merry Christmas this year, all right," said Dora with satisfaction.

"It certainly is!" Jan assured her, so heartily that she was afraid she was overdoing it. But Dora didn't notice.

"Paul brought the basket himself," she offered.

A nurse brought in Dora's luncheon. Later Jan went shopping for Christmas presents for Dora—and a list of gifts made out by Dora for Pussy-puff, including a catnip mouse and a red rubber ball. It was nearly four o'clock when Jan returned to the hotel.

She had started to fit the key into the lock when to her surprise the door, which apparently had not been quite shut, swung open. The housekeeper was in the sitting room directing a maid and a man Jan recognized as a handyman around the hotel. New curtains had been hung at the windows, the girl noted in one startled glance. The housekeeper was motioning her two helpers to place a small divan in front of the fireplace.

"Oh, there you are, Jan!"

Paul Harris, stepping from behind a screen, set down the Christmas wreath he was carrying close to pile of evergreens on the table.

Jan's face paled. Paul had given her suite to someone else! A wave of anger swept over her suddenly. How could a man think of a girl to visit her every day and take presents to her, as Paul had done for Dora—and at the same time be plotting such a trick!

"Somebody else taking these rooms?" she asked, trying to keep the quiver out of her voice.

Paul, to her astonishment, moved across the room and pinched her cheek.

"Always the little worrier," he commented. "I'll have to begin giving you lessons, Jan, in looking on the bright side of things. We have to have the place looking nice for our Dora when she comes home, and of course we want you to be pleased too, Jan."

Jan stood mute as he went on: "The Devon Arms must take good care of its most important guests." He clapped his hands as a gesture to his housekeeper and her aides to follow him, and left the room.

Why the Weather!

By Major A. H. Thiessen

Science Service Meteorologist

A long night! Darkness is with us on this date longer than on any other of the year, for the sun has reached its most southern point. At midday the sun's elevation is the lowest of the year. It will now commence to come north again, and constantly increase in elevation. But while the sunshine hours will increase slowly the warmth of the northern hemisphere will not increase for some time yet, as the heat received from the sun will be less than that lost by radiation. This is the date of the winter solstice, and like the equinox of spring and fall, it has no weather significance.

ITALIAN GOV'T SAYS 1935 PACT 'NO LONGER VALID'

French Foreign Office Declines to Indicate Its Course of Action

TUNISIAN ISSUE

French Experts Claim Demand Must be Based on Treaty

Paris, Dec. 22 AP)—The foreign office announced today that the Italian government had notified France through Andre Francois-Poncet, Ambassador to Rome, that Italy considers the 1935 Mussolini-Laval convention concerning Tunisia "no longer valid".

Officials declined to disclose the text of the Italian communication or to give any indication of what action the French government might take.

The convention assures Italians in Tunisia their right to Italian citizenship until 1965. It also defines the borders between Tunisia and Italian Libya and the borders between Italian Eritrea and French Somaliland in East Africa.

Although it never has been ratified by the French parliament, French diplomatic experts consider it has been in force since it was signed at Rome Jan. 7, 1935. They contend, therefore, that any Italian demands concerning Tunisia or French Somaliland must be based on the treaty.

STATE TROOPERS SEEKING SLAYER

Attractive Young Girl Strangled and Thrown Into Creek

Tunkhannock, Pa., Dec. 22—(AP)—Fifty state troopers were called into a search of this isolated snow-covered countryside today for the slayer who strangled attractive, 19-year-old Margaret Martin and attempted to conceal her nude, battered body in a creek.

Investigators expressed belief the slayer either was a sex maniac with a cruel, distorted mind or a round-up man for a white slave ring, who killed the girl when he feared he would be caught.

Slashed and mutilated, the body of the brown-haired business school graduate was found yesterday in a burlap bag, partially submerged in three feet of water under an abandoned bridge.

A hand, protruding from the crudely sewn sack, caught the attention of a trapper.

The discovery ended a search that had been made through all north-eastern states since the girl left her home in Kingston, 30 miles away, last Saturday to keep a daylight street corner appointment with a man who had telephoned her an offer of a job.

Coroner Ray Greenwood said Miss Martin "definitely was murdered." An autopsy performed last night disclosed that death resulted from strangulation.

The girl had been slashed across the abdomen and bruised. Her body was bound with a clothesline. Fingerprints were found on her neck, the physicians said.

Mass Arrests to Crush Purported Espionage Plot in Spain, is Report

Hendaye, France, Dec. 22 (AP)—Mass arrests to crush a purported espionage plot in Insurgent Spain were reported today.

Dispatches passed by the Insurgent censor told of many arrests in San Sebastian and elsewhere. Travellers crossing into France on semi-official business placed the number between a minimum 200 and a possible 2,000.

An Insurgent communique issued at Burgos charged that military information intended for the Barcelona government was found in the valise of the British vice-consul at San Sebastian when he reached the frontier to enter France.

British sources at the border indicated a suspicion the documents were planted. Among the many rumors was one that Insurgent police used seizure of the valise to cover leakage of military information from among General Franco's own staff members. (The foreign office in London said yesterday that Insurgent authorities absolved the San Sebastian Vice Consul, Harold Goodman, of any connection with the matter.)

"Curfew Law" For Beer Parlors And Vendor Stores

Toronto, Dec. 22—(CP)— The Ontario Liquor Control Board announced in detail last night a "curfew law" for Christmas eve governing the sale of beer, wine and liquor throughout the province.

Issued by Commissioner E. G. Odette, the edict, in addition to closing all beverage rooms, brewers' warehouses and native wine shops at eight p.m. Dec. 24, stipulates that all vehicles used in the delivering of beer and wine must be off the streets by the same hour—eight p.m.

Liquor stores in Toronto come under a special ruling which sets seven o'clock as the closing hour Christmas eve.

All Provincial outlets for the sale of beer, wine and liquor, with the exception of licensed hotels, will remain closed Dec. 26 and Jan. 2 under the special ruling, and in municipalities where boxing day is to be observed the same rule will apply.

Among Ontario municipalities officially observing boxing day—Dec. 27—are London, Brantford, Stratford, Port Colborne and Sudbury.

Beverage rooms will be closed Jan. 2 in Toronto and in other municipalities holding municipal elections on that day.

PREMIER DALADIER GIVEN MAJORITY OF ONLY 7 VOTES

Given Mandate to Reorganize French Finances by Decree

QUITE OPTIMISTIC

Paris, Dec. 22 (AP)—Premier Daladier's plan to reorganize French finances by decree received approval for the second time today by the slim majority of seven votes in the Chamber of Deputies.

The Chamber ratified by a vote of 291 to 284 the inclusion in the 1939 appropriation bill of a section carrying implied approval of all the decree laws issued under the new five-year economic plan.

Daladier, who staked the life of his government on the vote, made little attempt to hide his opinion that the cabinet had barely squeezed out of a tight place.

He declared, however, that he was optimistic over the formation of a "faithful majority" upon which he could depend. As he left the Chamber he told the Deputies that "if I had been overthrown I would have demanded immediate dissolution" of parliament.

The new test of Daladier's strength, the second since parliament convened earlier this month came unexpectedly when the Premier demanded that the 1939 appropriation bill be passed unchanged.

The opposition sought to cancel one of the government's decree laws, included in the bill, imposing a two per cent general tax on all income over 6,000 francs a year.

BORN NEAR BELLEVILLE

Regina, Dec. 22—(CP)— Avery Casey, 68, prominent barrister in Regina since 1907, died in hospital here yesterday. Mr. Casey was born near Belleville, Ont., of United Empire Loyalist stock, graduated from Trinity University in 1885, and practised law in London, Ont., several years before coming west.

JAPAN PREPARED TO HELP CHINA IN HER TROUBLE

Would Abolish Foreign Concessions in That Country

FULL INDEPENDENCE

Government of Chiang Kai-Shek to be Replaced by Protectorate

Tokyo, Dec. 22 (AP) — Premier Fumimaro Konoye declared today that Japan is prepared to help China abolish foreign concessions and extra territoriality, the system of special privileges enjoyed by some foreigners in China for nearly a century.

In a formal statement on the future of Japanese-Chinese relations the premier concluded:

"Japan not only respects the sovereignty of China but is prepared to give positive consideration to the question of the abolition of extraterritoriality and of concessions and settlements, matters which are necessary for the full independence of China."

By China the premier manifestly referred to the state Japan already has announced she expects to emerge from her current conquests, linked in a strong political, economic and cultural bloc with Japan and her protectorate, Manchoukuo.

Such a state, under Japanese direction, is expected by Japanese leaders to replace the Chinese government of General Chiang Kai-Shek, which now has its capital at Chungking.

Embodies Decisions Reached.

Prince Konoye's statement was believed to embody decisions reached in November by the Imperial Conference, super-government organ for prosecution of the China war, meeting in the presence of Emperor Hirohito.

The statement coincided with a press campaign for abolition of foreign concessions, including even the retrocession of Great Britain's colony of Hong Kong to the China of the "new order" of Japan's plans.

The statement reiterated the government announcement of Nov. 3 that Japan proposed to form a Japan-China-Manchoukuo bloc "for common defence against Communism" and for "economic cooperation".

He said that "Japan frankly desires that China shall enter in to complete diplomatic relations with Manchoukuo of her own free will" and also that Japan demands that China enter into the anti-Communist pact of Japan, Germany and Italy.

(Manchoukuo, formed out of Chinese provinces conquered by the Japanese army in 1931-33, already has announced gradual abolition of foreigners' special status.

(The principal foreign concessions in China, besides the Shanghai settlement, are the French Concession of Shanghai, the British, French and Italian Concessions in Tientsin, the French Concession in Hankow, British and French Concessions on Shameen Island at Canton and an International Settlement at Amoy.)

INSPECTOR BROWN HAMILTON CHIEF

J. R. Crocker, Inspector of Detectives Named Deputy Chief

Hamilton, Ont., Dec. 22—(CP)—Inspector Thomas Albert Brown was named chief of Hamilton police force at a special meeting of the Police Commission today. Inspector of Detectives J. R. Crocker, was appointed deputy chief, the appointments to become effective Jan. 1.

Inspector Brown succeeds the late E. K. Goodman. The office of deputy chief had been vacant, no appointment being made several years ago when Chief Goodman assumed office.

The Police Commission will hold a conference later to discuss other appointments in the department.

Chief Brown was born in Armagh County, Ireland in 1880 and came to Hamilton as a boy with his parents. He joined the police department in 1904. He was one of the men chosen to go overseas to represent the 13th Regiment at the Coronation of King Edward.

Deputy Chief Crocker is a native of Cornwall, England. Born in 1885, he came to Canada in 1910. He joined the police department in 1913. Not long after he became a detective and finally rose to be Inspector of Detectives.

Peace of Family Disturbed by Hotel Witness Testifies

Cornwall, Ont., Dec. 22 (CP) — Mr. Justice Norman Urquhart granted overnight adjournment yesterday in the trial of an action for unstated damages brought by J. Nazaire Gosselin against Alfred Lefebvre, proprietor of the Royal Hotel.

Gosselin, who lives next door to the Royal Hotel, declared before a crowded courtroom in four hours of evidence that the peace and rest of his family had been disturbed and the value of his property reduced by the proximity of the hotel. The adjournment was granted to allow possible out-of-court settlement.

Gosselin examined by Walter Schroeder of Ottawa, acting for the plaintiff jointly with J. B. Woods of Hawkesbury, escribed alleged "wild parties" in hotel bedrooms and declared profanity, loud talking and singing from bedrooms and beverage rooms interfered with his family's sleep. He produced rubbish which he said was flung to his lawn from bedroom windows. "There was loving, necking and drinking beer" in the rooms, Gosselin declared. One night in October, 1936, he said, he was able to stop the noise in one hotel room by squirting water from a hose against the window-screen.

ALLEGED GUNMAN CAPTURED AFTER HOLDING UP STORE

Series of Holdups Reported in Toronto During the Night

ONE CARRIED GUN

Toronto, Dec. 22—(CP)—Police paid tribute today to two Toronto men who captured an alleged gunman following a drug store holdup late last night. The holdup, one of the four in the city last night, brought the 1938 total well above the 200-mark.

Harold Hancock, 23, Toronto, captured by Fred McCullough, 27, and Martin Siegel, is charged with armed robbery and having a weapon dangerous to the public peace. Police said a loaded revolver and a second round of ammunition were found on Hancock's person.

McCullough and Siegel were in the dispensary of the pharmacy talking to the proprietor when two men entered, one of them carrying a revolver.

The bandits fled with $1 from the cash register as McCullough and Siegel ran out the rear door of the store and around to the front in an effort to apprehend them.

One of the men had disappeared but they sprinted after a second man who was running up the street. They said he turned into a bowling alley and that they, assisted by Al Booth, a service station proprietor, overpowered him as he came out of a phone booth. Search for the second man is continuing.

Attendant Threatened

A polite, well-dressed gunman walked into a downtown cake shop a few hours earlier, threatened the attendant, Mrs. Marguerite Meredith, with a revolver and opened the cash register. When he saw the small amount of money in the till he said he was sorry but that he was "a married man with a family and I'm out of work," according to Mrs. Meredith. He did not take the money.

"Then he asked me if I'd mind giving him a few minutes to make his getaway before calling the police," she said. She refused and the bandit forced her to the back of the store before fleeing.

Two men, one armed with a revolver, jumped in a delivery truck operated by Robert Martin, 34, forced him to keep driving and relieved him of $59, he told police. A few blocks later the thieves jumped from the slow-moving vehicle and disappeared. No attempt was made to take any of the parcels.

Thomas Offen, driver for a wholesale tobacconist, was the fourth victim. He told police a man walked over to his truck and demanded "that package of tobacco." The man pointed an object at him from an overcoat pocket.

Offen handed the man a large carton of cigarettes valued at $25. The man fled in another car. Offen said the man didn't ask for any money.

120 FOWL STOLEN

Caledon, Ont., Dec. 22 (CP)—More than 120 ducks, geese and chickens were stolen from three farms here the other night. The poultry had been primed for the Christmas market.

THAW SWEEPS ACROSS BRITAIN CRISIS IN COAL

Frenzied Householders Seek to Keep Out the Dampness

EARLY TRAINS LATE

Heavy Snowfall Brings Work for Thousands of Shovellers

By GUY RHOADES

London, Dec. 22 (CP)—A thaw swept across the British Isles today, ending a five-day frigid spell. But a coal crisis arrived simultaneously with mercury's climb above the freezing point.

Frenzied householders seeking to keep dampness from their homes were told coal dealers would not fill orders until after New Year. One dealer said would-be customers told him they would have to spend the next fortnight in bed if fuel were unobtainable.

Some retailers promised to supply coal if the customer would carry it away himself but said they could not deliver any for two weeks.

Terrible In Subways.

Early trains ran late for the fifth day and subway lines were balked frequently when doors froze when open, cutting off the current.

A heavy snowfall yesterday and last night brought work for thousands of shovellers but there will probably be no total gain in employment as the weather caused a suspension of work in the building trades.

London streets were covered with five inches of grimy slush through which traffic crawled, splashing pedestrians. The sky was heavily overcast by smoke, and fog enveloped some districts.

The coldest spots during the night were Wick, Dalwhinnie and Andergrove, where the temperature was 16.

STORY OF ARMS IS INVESTIGATED

Attorney Says Nothing Yet Uncovered to Connect Musica

Boston, Dec. 22 (CP)—Assertions that 1,000,000 Canadian-made rifles lay hidden near New York for sale to foreign governments interested United States authorities here as they pressed an inquiry paralleling the New York investigation of F. Donald Coster-Musica, suicide head of the huge McKesson and Robbins drug firm.

John Canavan, United States Attorney conducting an investigation of alleged attempted arms sales, said last night he had learned from C. R. Ekholm, a Boston broker, that a New York lawyer had offered to provide all the guns Ekholm could sell.

Ekholm was attempting to interest a Russian trade commission in the purchase of munitions when the offer was made a year ago, Canavan said the broker told him. The transaction fell through.

Million Rifles Stored?

Canavan said Ekholm quoted the lawyer as saying that 1,000,000 Lee-Enfield rifles had been made in Canada and stored near New York, and a quarter of them already had been disposed of.

Thus far, the Federal Attorney said, he had uncovered nothing to link the asserted arms transactions with Philip Musica, veteran swindler who rose to head the McKesson and Robbins Company under the name of Coster and shot himself to death when his real identity was disclosed.

The United States Attorney further related that he was told the Admits Scheming to Ship Rifles Illegally to Spain

New York, Dec. 22 (AP)—A man who helped "F. Donald Coster" hide his swindling past was held on conspiracy charges today after investigators said he admitted scheming with the self-slain head of McKesson and Robbins Corporation to ship 2,000,000 rifles illegally to Spain.

Brien McMahon, Assistant United States Attorney General, said the man was Benjamin Simon, 49, a Bronx salesman who worked with "Coster" as a Great War spy investigator and knew "Coster" was really Philip Musica, ex-convict and central figure in a $1,000,000 swindle in 1913.

Simon told him, McMahon said, he provided "Coster" with his new identity by filing fake birth certificates in Washington, D.C., for "Coster", his three brothers, and one of their sisters, Marie Musica Girard.

Clarification of some of the problems puzzling investigators is expected when Samuel Reich, Musica's attorney, makes public the text of a note left by the drug firm head when he shot himself to death last Friday in his luxurious home at Fairfield, Conn.

Ickes' Words Represent Feeling of Vast Majority In the U. S., Says Welles

Germany Told Request Came With Singularly Ill Grace

RELATIONS STRAINED

Welles Flatly Refuses to Consider Matter Further

Washington, Dec. 22 (AP)—Sumner Welles, Acting Secretary of State disclosed today the United States had rejected Germany's demand for an official apology for Interior Secretary Ickes' speech in Cleveland last Sunday attacking dictatorship.

Welles told Dr. Hans Thomsen, the German Charge d'Affaires, that the request came with singularly ill grace and impropriety from a government which har so persistently permitted its controlled press and officials to attack American leaders including Presidents Wilson and Roosevelt and present members of the cabinet.

Feeling Quite Prevalent.

The Acting Secretary of State advised Thomsen that Ickes' remarks represented the feeling of an overwhelming majority of the American people who had been profoundly shocked by recent events in Germany.

Welles' statement to the German envoy was couched in strong and uncompromising terms which the United States rarely uses in diplomatic discussions with a friendly government.

He told Thomsen that the German government must now surely know that the recent policy pursued in Germany had shocked and confounded public opinion in the United States more profoundly than anything that had taken place in many decades. Welles warned Thomsen that expressions of public indignation such as Ickes' were inevitable.

Ickes' Words.

Ickes had said Germany's treatment of Jews carried that nation back to "a period of history when man was unlettered, benighted and bestial". The Interior Secretary also criticized acceptance of German decorations by Henry Ford and Charles A. Lindbergh.

Welles said in talking to Thomsen that this criticism of Ford and Lindbergh was a purely domestic question in which Germany could have no concern whatever and which he would not discuss.

And, Welles added, so long as attacks against American officials continued in Germany the German government had no right to suppose that attacks of the same character would not continue in the United States.

The exchange brought an extremely sharp new strain on the United States-German relations already tense from the recent withdrawal of ambassadors of both countries and Germany's response to increasingly insistent recent American notes. The State Department considered the latter unsatisfactory.

Thomsen had told Welles he trusted the government of the United States would make public an official expression of regret for Ickes' statement. This Welles flatly refused to do.

The Acting Secretary replied that for several months he had closely followed the German press and had rarely read more unjustifiable criticism or open attacks on members of another government than had been made therein. Welles mentioned recent attacks on President Roosevelt and members of the cabinet. He bluntly said he was sure the German Charge d'Affaires could hardly dispute the German press was completely under the influence and dictation of the German government.

Two Prize Geese Stolen From Pen

After watching for many months the splendid development of two prize geese and fattening them in anticipation of a delightful Christmas dinner, Arthur Irish Rednersville farmer, will have to purchase his Yuletide repast after all, because last night sneak thieves stole Mr. Irish's two prize geese and eight Muscovy ducks in addition.

One wear ago poultry thieves stole valued poultry from Mr. Irish's barn. Last night they repeated the operation. Provincial Police were notified of the thefts today. The two geese weighed approximately 25 pounds each, Mr. Irish informed the authorities, while the eight Muscovy ducks were prize show birds, which had taken prizes at surrounding fall fairs.

DUCHESS LOSES SCOTTISH SEAT TO CONSERVATIVE

Duchess of Atholl's Defeat Seen as Encouragement for Chamberlain

ELECTION AS TEST

Crieff, Scotland, Dec. 22—(CP)—The Duchess of Atholl today was defeated by 1,313 votes in the Kinrosh and West Perth by-election.

The Duchess who resigned her seat in the House of Commons in order to re-contest it as Independent in opposition to Prime Minister Chamberlain's foreign policy, lost to W. McNair Snadden, Conservative.

Mr. Snadden polled 11,808 votes against 10,495 for the Duchess.

Snow covering the outlying constituencies held down the votes. Mr. Snadden, a Porthshire farmer, ran as a supporter of Mr. Chamberlain government's foreign policy.

"The result will be great encouragement to Mr. Chamberlain as a vote of confirmation from a representative division of the Scottish people," the victorious candidate declared.

"It is evident of a clear desire on their part that he should continue his splendid work of bringing the nations of Europe together in creation of a lasting peace."

Duchess Sees Danger.

The Duchess, wearing a sprig of white heather in her hat stood in the snow outside the building where the votes were counted. She shook her head sadly when the result was announced.

"I still think the government's foreign policy is leading us into grave danger," she said. "My letters from members of all parties throughout the United Kingdom and from many in the Empire and other countries in Europe and the United States show that many share my views.

"I think there should be a general election soon when I expect to stand again. Perhaps events between then and now will prove to the electors that I was right."

The Duchess had held the seat for fifteen years. In the Baldwin government, from 1924 to 1929 she was parliamentary secretary to the Board of Education, being one of the first women to hold ministerial office.

Her differences with the Conservative party began with the Spanish Civil War. She became a staunch champion of the Spanish Government's cause, visiting Spain and pleading at home for a more friendly attitude on the part of Great Britain towards the Barcelona regime.

She felt the activities of Germany and Italy in Spain to be a menace to Great Britain. Germany's annexation of Austria and the Cecho-Slovak Sudetenland increased the score of her criticism of the Chamberlain Government.

She resigned the government whip in the House of Commons, announcing that henceforth she would follow an entirely independent line and not vote with the government majority as a matter of party discipline.

Christmas Trees

Queen Mary School

Presentation of prizes merited by the students during the past school term were presented to a number of winners yesterday at Queen Mary School following an inspection of the classrooms which were open to the many visitors attending on this auspicious occasion.

The parents and friends were welcomed by Principal C. I. Frederick who explained that no large Christmas entertainment was being undertaken due to lack of auditorium space but that on Thursday afternoon the junior school would present a program.

In announcing the prizes, Mr. Frederick said that these did not represent all the awards won by the school but others would be given out on another occasion. The coveted Board of Education medal for highest marks in the Entrance examinations, won by Miss Nad'ne Hall, and the second prize awarded by St. Julien Chapter, I.O.D.E., won by Miss Helen Roper brought the highest awards to Queen Mary School. Inspector Clarke in his remarks during the presentation of a number of prizes po'nted out that the gold medal, in the eleven years if its competition, had been won eight times by Queen Mary School, which this year had also obtained first and second Hayes awards and two of the f've dol'ar prizes also donated by John Hayes, president of the Laura Secord Company, as a remembrance of his old association in Belleville High School with Inspector Clarke.

Choruses by the School

The program of the afternoon included music by the school band under the direct'on of Mr. Cooper and choruses by the school choir which had been carefully trained by Mr. George Maybee whose work was warmly commended by Mr. Charles Hyde, chairman of the Board of Education when he addressed the scholars and parents.

Many awards were won by the cadet corps and Mr. Fairman, one of the most efficient cadet instructors in the Prov'nce of Ontario was congratulated by the speakers of the afternoon.

In presenting the W. C. T. U. prizes for posters, essays and health books, Miss Baker drew attention to the fact that several girls won not only prizes in the city contest but in the county competit'on while Miss Patricia Thurston captured poster prizes for the city, county and province-wide contests.

The afternoon's program follows:

Boys' Band.

The Choir—(a)—"I Saw Three Ships." (b)—"Good King Wenceslas. Soloists—Bruce Burns, Joan Wright.

Young Women's Guild

The December meeting of the Young Women's Guild was held in the apartment of Miss E. Adams in the Library on Monday evening, Dec. 19th, a large number of members and their friends being present. Mrs. Mills, the president, was in the chair. The worship service was read by Mrs. Bews, who stressed the need of a true Christmas spirit in these troubled times.

Instead of the usual discussion on World Affairs a radio play was presented, under the direction of Mrs. Carl Read. The play was entitled "Twenty-five Cents" and dealt with the effect of the depression on one family. Mrs. Carl Read took the part of Maggie Fisher, a whiny, hardbitten person, whose only outlet was the occasional movie. Mrs. Fisher had saved up 25c to go to the movie and was determined to hang on to it in spite of the demands made on her. Kate Swanson, a neighbour and ardent movie fan, was played by Miss Marjorie Hill. Bill Fisher played by Mr. McClelland, was a hard working man who would rather starve than go on relief. Bill wanted the 25c for some tobacco. Gertie Fisher, played by Miss Muriel Wardner, got in with some bad company and she needed 25c desperately. Bennie Fisher's only way of getting any money was by winning at pool. One night his luck was against him and he was compelled to borrow from the pool room till to meet his debt. He needed 25c to pay some of this back. Bennie Fisher was played by Malcolm McClelland. The policeman who comes to see Bennie about the money was played by Jack Dewar. Miss Marjorie Lashbrook acted as narrator.

At the conclusion of the play Miss O. Elson led a short discussion on the Moral and Physical effects of the depression.

Miss Elson quoted figures to show that low wages and unemployment increase crime, encourage slum conditions and fill up our hospitals an mental asylums.

Mrs. Frank Gardner was hostess convener for the evening.

The funeral of Mrs. George Keilty took place from her late residence at Stoco, on Wednesday morning, December 21st., to St. Edmunds' Church where Requiem Mass was celebrated by the Very Rev. D. A. Cullinane, who conducted also the committal service at the graveside in St. Edmunds Cemetery.

The bearers were Messrs. Ambrose Whalen, Franklin Healy, Joseph McWilliams, Francis Keilty, Dorian Cassidy and Joseph Cassidy.

ROBERT PARKS

(Coe Hill)

The funeral of Robert Parks, late of Coe Hill, who died in the Belleville General Hospital on Tuesday, December 20th., at the age of 76 years, took place this Thursday afternoon from the Martin Funeral Home, Church Street, Belleville. The service in the chapel and at the graveside in Victoria Cemetery, in Thurlow Township, was conducted by the Rev. F. Wicks of Coe Hill.

The late Mr. Parks is survived by three sons, Rodolphus Parks, Coe Hill; Frederick Parks of Centre Dummer, and Frank Parks, Coe Hill; one daughter, Mrs. Joseph Parks, Bancroft; two, brothers, Joseph Parks, Apeley and Watson Parks, Paudash Lake; two sisters, Mrs. Jane Donohue, Madoc, and Mrs. Sarah Gunya, Madoc.

Makes Contribution To Firemen's Fund

As a contribution to the Christmas fund of the firemen of Belleville, Mr. George Aselstine, manager of Aselstine's Shell Service Station, corner of North Front and Moira Streets, is donating a good share of the profit on all sales of gasoline, oil and accessories made at the station up to Friday night of this week. The sharing has been in progress for some days. The firemen appreciate the co-operation shown by Mr. Aselstine.

$100 GIVEN BY KIWANIS CLUB

Money Will be Used to Provide Christmas Cheer

Instead of preparing baskets for distribution at Christmas time the Kiwanis Club at their weekly luncheon on Tuesday at the Queens Hotel voted $100 to the Firemen's Christmas Fund and Kiwanian Bill Lynch assured the members the money would be well spent and used to bring Christmas cheer to a number of families. An old member of the club who has been seriously ill for some time as well as his family will be remembered by the club on Christmas morning.

The usual special address was not given on Tuesday but the members very much appreciated the musical program that was arranged by Leo B. Riggs, able pianist of the club. The Belleville Four, Harry Moorman, J. Arnold Thomson, Albert Evans and James Bankier, delighted with a number of Christmas Carols, while Mr. Bankier sang the "Holy City." The members lustily sang the community songs of a Christmas nature, they being led by Harry Moorman. President Albert Boynton expressed the appreciation of the club for guest artists.

Eddie Shapiro told of visiting the Kiwanis Minstrel Show of the Picton Club and hoped that the Belleville Club would secure this stellar attraction after the New Year. P. C. MacLaurin heartily endorsed the venture. Owen Herity, Secretary-Manager of the Chamber of Commerce and booster of the day, distributed several pamphlets including a map of Ontario, booklets from the publicity departments of Ontario and Quebec, a map of Canada and a booklet showing the advantages of Canada as a whole as a tourist attraction. Owen never fails to put in a boost for his Province and Dominion and the members will be better informed of their country if they read the pamphlets in their entirety.

Seven Simple Rules For Good Health

During the last 21 years The Bell Telephone Company of Canada has paid out over $3,600,000 in the form of sickness benefits to its employees. A study of the more than 40,000 cases of illness involved has revealed that ailments of the respiratory system—such as colds, laryngitis, influenza, bronchitis, and tonsilitis—were responsible for, by far, the greater part of this expenditure.

If the experience of this company is to be taken as a criterion, the seven simple rules for good health during wintertime—about which Bell employees were reminded recently—should be of general interest. They follow:

1. Keep room temperatures around 72 degrees.
2. Keep air moist — fill radiator pans with water regularly.
3. Sleep with windows open, but keep out of drafts.
4. Keep fresh fruits and vegetables on your daily menu.
5. Wear enough clothing when outdoors—not too much when inside.
6. Avoid going out into the cold when you are perspiring.
7. If you have a coal fire, be sure gases are burned off before closing dampers for the night.

TRENTON and DISTRICT

Trenton, Dec. 21 (Special)—It's Christmas leave and home for several hundred R.C.A.F. members in a few days, and literally thousands of dollars were poured into C.N.R. and C.P.R. ticket office tills yesterday as members of the force received their final December pay cheques and hurried to arrange transportation home. Many will travel as far east as Halifax and as far west as the Rockies during the ten days allowed, and others whose homes are on the Pacific coast would gladly go also if time allowed. Leave begins officially on Saturday and lasts until January 3rd.

Icy Roads Blamed

Police blamed greasy, icy pavements for two minor collisions that occurred yesterday, the first coming in the morning on Front St., and involving a truck owned by the Ontario Metal and Waste Co., and a coupe driven by Henry Plummer. In the accident the truck is alleged to have sideswiped the Plummer vehicle, ripping a fender and bending the axle of the lighter car. In the evening cars owned reportedly by R. A. Goodrich and the Mallory taxi service collided at the intersection of Dundas and Byron Streets, minor fender and grill damage resulting. Owners of new cars are discovering that fenders and grills are costly things to replace, and especially is this true of 1939 models. No charges were laid by police.

Perjury Charge Laid

Appearing in local police court yesterday afternoon Alfred Williams, 38, who was sentenced to two years in Kingston penitentiary on Dec. 16th, on charges of attacking police officers, was remanded for further investigation on a perjury charge, which was laid as a result of evidence said to be falsely delivered by the accused at his earlier trial.

Provisional School

A class of ten or more corporals and sergeants and four or more lieutenants will begin study in the local armouries on or about January 6th in a provisional school of instruction carried on under the supervision of Major H. D. Graham, O.C., "A" Coy, of the Hastings and Prince Edward Regt., according to information released here today. Members of the larger group will undertake the course of instruction necessary to qualify as sergeants, and will include several corporals and a half dozen privates; while the four lieutenants will seek qualification as captains. Instructional lectures will last until March when written and verbal examinations will be given.

Shannonville

Shannonville—A delightful affair was held in the Shannonville Orange Hall on Tuesday night when a miscellaneous shower was held in honour of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Gilroy (nee Verna Latchford) who were recently married and are now residing in Belleville where Mr. Gilroy is employed. During the evening dancing was enjoyed to Clayton John's Orchestra. At the midnight hour a delicious lunch was served following which Mr. and Mrs. Gilroy were given seats of honor at the front of the hall at which time the following address was read by Miss Bessie King to which an appropriate reply was given by Mr. Gilroy. Following the presentation dancing was again enjoyed until the early hours of the morning.

The address read as follows:

Dear Verna and Arthur:

It is with the utmost pleasure that we, your friends and neighbors are gathered here tonight.

We offer you our most sincere congratulations and heart-felt good wishes on your recent advent into matrimony.

We hope that your marital bliss may be blessed, by all the understanding and good-will so necessary to its perpeuation.

May we say to you Verna, that although you have been with us for such a short space of time we feel sure that the sincerity and warmth of personality which has won so many friends for you in this community will be hastily rewarded, and no less appreciated by a host of new friends in your new home.

To you Arthur, we extend our profound gratitude for your willing and unfailing assistance in our communities affairs, both social and otherwise. Your generosity in these matters has been much appreciated and our loss of you to another community will be deeply felt.

We ask you both to accept these gifts which we have brought. We feel sure that you will accept them as we intended to have them received not for their monetary value but as tokens of the esteem in which we of this community hold you.

Signed on behalf of the community, Leslie Seeley, Alex Leitch, Bert Ross, Walter King.

DEMOCRACIES AND LAUGHTER

"There is no right a democracy ought to cherish more tenaciously than the right to laugh at anything and anybody it thinks is funny," is a remark in the New York Times noting the comment of David Low, English cartoonist, published in the official organ of the BBC: "Undoubtedly there is more that is inherently absurd in the world today than ever before, if only because of the greater contrast between man's vastly increased power and his use of it." Mr. Low thinks that good ideas can stand being laughed at and endure. Christianity withstood ridicule in its early days, the motorcar and the income tax survive smiles and criticism.

The Times further quotes Mr. Low to the effect that "the leader who sets himself up as a god is asking for it". Personalities are more vulnerable. In democracies there is a large measure of freedom but the Times points out the fact of the absence of "the rude artists" who formerly helped bring a sense of proportion into the political life of Germany. It also notes that no one dares, no matter how much his fingers tingle, distort Il Duce's lower maxillary. In the United States artists have done wonders with the Rooseveltian chin.

The Times comments, "Low hints that this right may not be safe in England. One would mourn its loss there or in France, far more than its loss in Germany. Territories may be lost, spheres of influence may be contracted, the road to India or Tunis may be threatened, but civilization can survive if a joke continues to be called a joke and is not disguised as a great man or a great idea. For appalling as some of the world's "great men" and "great ideas" are, they are also funny. It is tragic laughter that would ring around the world today if all mankind were free to look at its predicament in its proper light. But it would be healing laughter."

Man must laugh for his own health. When he sees the incongruous, the contrast between the pretention and the fact, the serious and the ridiculous, he must express the fun he sees in it.

DR. VIZETELLY AND WORDS

The "romance of words" is no mere phrase. Words are living things, expressing as they do the finest shades of change in the social and economic life of people. In an expansive age such as the present, words are added rapidly to the language from many sources, indeed from as many sources as go to make up the stream of life of which language is the expression.

Dr. Vizetelly, the famous maker of dictionaries, who died yesterday of an attack of pneumonia, combed every region of words. It was more truly a hunt for him than the chase of deer to most men, for in language he was dealing with the expressions of the thoughts and the soul of mankind. Hence he could not leave out slang.

The wider a language extends through commerce or other means the finer are the shades of meaning.

Today the English tongue is so great that no man knows every word. Many men use more words than Shakespeare did (Dr. Vizetelly places Shakespeare's command at 23,009 words), some even use fifty thousand—those are learned men. Many doctors use 25,000 or more. But none of these have the command of words that Shakespeare possessed. John Milton used but eight thousand and was one of the lords of language, all because of his supreme command of the words he used. Phrasing and psychological content of words count much in the command of language.

Dr. Vizetelly's authority on words and his influence were manifest in his granddaughter, Jeanne Vizetelly Cochrane, who reached the age of six years in 1935 with the remarkable vocabulary of 10,000 words. Some adults never get beyond six hundred or thereabouts. Great as a language is in its accessions, many feel that in the case of English the Anglo-Saxon basis is mainly essential to the average man or woman for it is these words they use in ordinary life.

Once, in an address before the Phonetic Society at Columbia University, Dr. Vizetelly urged a new English alphabet, arguing that the one in use was inadequate to express the multiple sounds in the language.

An educated man, he remarked on another occasion, ought to know 50,000 words. One of the words, the origin of which attracted his attention when it hit Broadway and new popularity, was "Whoopee". That expression, the learned doctor concluded after research, was about five centuries old.

"Alexander the Great, reflecting on his friends degenerating into sloth and luxury, told them that it was a most slavish thing to luxuriate and a most royal thing to labor."—Barrow.

"Each heart is a world.—You find all within yourself that you find without.—To know yourself you have only to set down a true statement of those that ever loved or hated you."—Lavater.

"There are many ways of being frivolous, only one way of being intellectually great; that is honest labor."—Sidney Smith.

"Language is the armory of the human mind, and at once contains the trophies of its past and the weapons of its future conquests."—Coleridge.

"Language most shows a man; speak that I may see thee; it springs out of the most retired and inmost part of us."—Ben Jonson.

"I find successful exertion is a powerful means of exhilaration, which discharges itself in good humor upon others."—Chalmers.

YESTERDAY'S COLUMN WAS FILLED VERY ACCEPTABLY BY OUR CUBAN CORRESPONDENT, a former Hastings County Boy, who occupies a high executive position with the United Fruit Company in Cuba. As promised today's column will be devoted to Cuba, the same writer sketching some interesting phases of life in the Pearl of the Antillas for the entertainment and information of the Sidelights Family. Are y' listening?

Pearl of the Antillas

The weather at present is entering its most pleasant phase. Daytime temperatures from now until April should range from 70°F. to 85°F. and nighttime temperatures from 50°F. to 70°F. with any temperature below 60°F. considered unusual. The lowest temperature experienced in this section of the island during fourteen years' residence has been 48°F. Any temperatures below 60°F. cause considerable hardship amongst the poorer nationals, as no provision is normally made for warm clothing, heating of houses and such measures as are taken by people in the temperate zones to provide for cold weather.

Grapefruit 60c Hundred

The second food crop of the year is just coming into production and oranges, bananas, grapefruit, green corn, yams, sweet potatoes, plantains, peppers, tomatoes and the usual run of garden vegetables are to be had at very reasonable prices; for example, bananas are twenty-five cents a bunch and oranges and grapefruit sixty cents a hundred. However, apples are five cents each and pears are two for fifteen cents, locally grown Irish potatoes are four cents a pound and imported potatoes from Nova Scotia retail at five cents a pound, prices which would be pleasing indeed to the Canadian growers.

Sugar Cane Harvest

The sugar cane crop, after unusually slow growth through the summer on account of dry weather has taken on a new lease of life since the commencement of the fall rains. Growth measurements of as much as an inch a day were recorded on the plantations, although the average growth, over large areas was from three to four inches a week. Now, with cooler weather, the growth is slowing down and the cane is beginning to ripen and will be ready for harvest in January or February.

Hooked An Octopus

The fishing is very good along the coast with a variety extending from a half-pound rock fish to the fifty pound king fish or sea mackerel. Of course, there are bigger fish in the sea, but your correspondent hasn't connected with them. However, he did have the pleasure of hooking a conger eel and an octopus on his last two fishing trips. The latter was quite by chance as the devil fish or octopus is very seldom taken on a line and hook. On this occasion, after arising at 4:30 a.m., motoring nine miles through the warm tropical morning and sitting through the dawn and early morning hours in a small boat near the breakers coming over the reef and hauling in only four red tails (an edible fish weighing from two to three pounds) and cogitating at length as to the advantages of being a fisherman over being a plantation superintendent, it was decided that after all, this wasn't a good day to catch fish, although it was a relief to get away from telephones and sugar cane and cattle and the thousand and one things that turn one's hair prematurely grey. Possibly the excessive ruminations on the low price of sugar, the inroads of the latest banana disease, the problem of stopping the march of the army worm on the newly planted cane fields caused the line to sag and the hook to drag on the bottom; anyway a quick tug and then a peculiar twisting motion of the line told the story of something unusual. In came the line with the same previously inexperienced wreathing and twirling motion and to the surface of the sea came the ugly, writhing figure of a devil fish about thirty inches in diameter with the body more or less the size of a big turnip. Remembrances of Victor Hugo's "Toilers of Sea" flashed across your correspondent's mind and a quick transfer of the line to the hands of the more experienced Cuban fishing companion left him in the role of a spectator. As soon as the octopus touched the boat, the eight arms clamped on the wood by means of the double row of suckers with which each is equipped. A few well directed blows from a club on the beak and sac-like central body caused the octopus to emit an inky fluid and to attempt a caterpillar type of locomotion but the struggle was soon over and there was one less devil fish in the sea and one more fishing experience for the diary of your correspondent.

Then there was the experience of landing the conger eel but as the late Rudyard Kipling wrote, "Tht is another story".

Cuba's Colonel Batista.

The reception given to Colonel Fulgencio Batista, Cuba's outstanding man, in his recent visit to the United States has been very gratifying to Cuban Nationals and to all residents of the "Pearl of the Antillas". The likeness which appeared in a press photo in the Ontario Intelligencer was a good one. The career of Colonel Batista who has risen from the humble surroundings of a plantation laborer's home on the outskirts of Banes, Oriente, to his present position as a recognized social leader of his people is one to stir the imaginations of Canadians and Americans. With the benefit of but little formal education, this remarkable self-trained man has through his native intelligence, ability and resourcefulness, literally lifted himself by his own bootstraps to a position of recognition not only in Cuba but in all the Americas.

GLEANINGS FROM OUR FYLES OF BY-GONE YEARS

20 YEARS AGO

Dec. 22nd, 1918.

At the Royal Cafe last evening a supper was given by the Belleville High School Rugby Team in honor of Mr. Andrew C. Haynes, B.A., and Mr. Allan G. Cumming, M.A., who have severed their connection as teachers in the High School. Those present were loud in their praises of Mr. Haynes and Mr. Cumming and sincere regret was expressed at their departure from Belleville. They have been exceedingly popular throughout the school and have been a great help to the rugby team. As a slight token of appreciation each was presented with a gold-headed umbrella, suitably engraved. Earlier in the day Mr. Haynes was presented with a gift from the form over which he presided in the school.

CHURCH MEMBERSHIP

True it is that mere membership in a church does not make a man or woman religious or spiritually conscious or good. Neither does membership in a church make one better per se than his neighbor. All depends upon how far one carries his religion into his daily living, for "Faith without works is dead." But his membership in a church does not indicate that the individual has experienced the urge for better things and that he recognizes the church as the way and the voice.

He who will join the church—any church — and walk thereafter according to its teachings will attain thereby a better life and find therein something of peace for the spirit. No such peace can be attained except through right conduct toward one's fellow man, and it is in the churches that we find the leadership toward that course. So it is good news when statistics show that half of our population are church members. — Portland Oregonian.

PROGRESS

——U. S. patent No. 2123981 (Ernest G. Whipple, of Stratford, Conn.) concerns a super-bullet especially designed to penetrate bulletproof vests, and merely goes to show that mankind is getting nowhere. It doesn't matter how cunningly one man contrives to preserve his, and our, hides; another man comes along and just as cunningly plots to undo him.

All this has been going on since the dawn of history, and probably explains why we are not sitting in some nice cool cave worrying a bone instead of cowering in a hot city worrying about air raids.

There is undoubtedly a moral in all this, but to us it merely means that some enterprising man, who is now a babe in arms, is going to come along with a super-bulletproof vest that will be immune to super-bullets, and then mankind is going to find itself face to face with the horrible dilemma of not being able to kill itself off.—The New Yorker.

TAME ALGOMA

——And so another wolf story blows up!

Game Warden D. E. McMillan of Oba, took the trouble to look into the yarn sent out from Hornepayne about a wolf attacking a bushman—"jumped for his throat," and the other familiar frills of the wolf story teller—and found it was the old familiar tale of a man with an axe meeting a wolf much to the wolf's sorrow. Mr. McMillan kindly reported the facts to this paper and wound up his letter with endorsing Old Sam Martin's dictum that still stands four square to all the winds that blow—

"Any man that says he's been et by a wolf is a liar."

Why do imaginative folks make up these silly yarns? In this case it looks as if the bushman had no hand in cooking up the story. The "reporter" seems to have deliberately added a good deal of color to a routine bush event.

It doesn't do the North any good to send out stuff that gives people an idea there is any danger in Northern forests. The truth is a baby would be perfectly safe anywhere, probably safer than in any Ontario village. And it should be remembered that a lot of people feel foolish at being held up as wolf heroes. Because it requires no more courage to meet a wolf than to face a rabbit.—Sault Ste. Marie Star.

That Body of Yours

By James W. Barton M.D.

Few Doctors Die of Diabetes

I have spoken before of one of four brothers—the only one who reached the age of three score and ten. When asked why he had lived to seventy years of age and his three brothers had died in their early fifties, he replied that he guessed it was because he had always had a poor appetite. It was this inability to overload his stomach and give his heart, bloodvessels, and kidneys too much work, that had preserved his life.

While it might be better for most of us to eat less food, a combination of a little more exercise with less food would prevent that all too common ailment—diabetes. It is only too true that despite all our knowledge, diabetes is increasing.

There is, however, one class of citizens, in whom diabetes is not causing great havoc these days. This class is the physicians.

An interesting advertisement of one of the large insurance companies published in Hygeia is headed "Few Doctors Die of Diabetes".

Few doctors who have diabetes die of the disease. Why?

Because they know how to keep it under control. Insulin is the greatest modern defence against death from diabetes. It is now so dependable that many doctors feel justified in promising adult diabetic patients almost as long a life with the disease as without it. With insulin, a diabetic child can grow, study, and play with other children in nearly even terms.

"Diabetes is most frequent among middle-aged overweight persons and in those in whise family there is a history of the disease. But many people predisposed to diabetes may escape it by keeping underweight throught correct diet and exercise."

It is a sad fact but true that many cases with a mild form of diabetes, because it is mild, neglect to follow the diabetic diet and absolutely refuse to take insulin although the new form of insulin—protamine insulin—need only be injected once a day. A great many of them die needlessly. The patient with severe diabetes, on the other hand, because it is severe, follows his diet and takes insulin daily, thus living out a useful, happy life.

"The usual reward for obedience to the doctor's orders is added years of comfort and life. Doctors know this and that is why few of the die of diabetes."

The Gentle Art of Reading

It is a blessed and wholesome thing that facts have a way of rising in judgment on pessimists. Not long ago one of those psychologists who have a habit of "viewing with alarm" came out to say that what with the growth of radio, the movies and picture newspapers and magazines, the human race would eventually stop reading altogether. But now comes word that the November circulation of books from the Ottawa Public Library reached an all-time high, with more people reading more books about history, civics and politics.

During November, 51,421 books were taken from the Library. Considering that Ottawa has in addition a number of commercial lending libraries, that many people use the Parliamentary Library, and that thousands of others buy books, this, for a city the size of Ottawa, is an extraordinary record. Nor do the figures of the Ottawa Public Library take account of the thousands of persons who use the reference reading room of the institution.

The truth is, of course, that no matter how often they go to the movies, they turn all the more to the printed word. Indeed, it is reasonable to suppose that the radio and the movies (and even the picture magazines) help to turn them to the printed word. From the radio and the screen they get impressions; only from the actual printed word can they get considered thought; the opportunity to reflect, to check, to debate and discuss and challenge.

That is why radio broadcasting, no matter what its value(and nobody can deny its value) can never take the place of the written word. The book, the newspaper, will remain to convey thoughts and statements that can be studied, to interpret, to instruct, to amplify and to entertain. As true now as ever is the line from Byron:

"But words are things, and a small drop of ink,
Falling, like dew upon a thought,
Produces that which makes thousands, perhaps millions, think."

--Ottawa Farm Journal.

AFTER DEDUCTING

——A Tabor, Alberta, farmer who evidently keeps in close touch with affairs, political and otherwise, recently asked Premier William Aberhart a quite pertinent question. He sent his letter by registered mail and later handed a copy of it to the Lethbridge Herald, which printed it. Here it is:

Tabor, Alberta, Aug 23, 1938,
The Hon. William Aberhart,
Premier of Alberta.

Dear Mr. Aberhart: I am a farmer in the Tabor district, and have approximately 100 acres of crop. Fifty acres is cut and yielded about six bushels per acre, the other fifty acres will probably yield less than this amount, giving me a maximum yield of 600 bushels. Your Department of Agriculture has filed a motion of lien with all the elevators for the amount advanced to me for seed grain for last year as well as this year, a total of $147.51. The market price of wheat today is 49 cents a bushel, if it grades No. 1. The total value at the most is $294.00. After deducting the cost of combining at $1.25 per acre, I will have left $179, and after deducting your liens from this amount, I will have the sum of $31.85 to support me, my wife, and four children, from now until next Fall, and will have no seed, unless your Government is generous enough to furnish me with seed again.

Three years ago you told me and other citizens that we could not exist on less than $25 per month per adult, with addition for children. Will you please let me know how you expect me to live for the next 12 months on $31.85?—Calgary Herald.

SCIENCE DOES IT

It is good to know that science and the inventive arts are not given entirely to the business of making this earth unsafe for human beings. Thought is being given also to the comfort and convenience of the people, and to the saving of labor.

As, for example, in this triumph of invention that is reported from Switzerland. It's a self-heating hot-dog. The weiners, in this process, come in tins. Each tin has a false bottom containing certain chemicals and when the bottom is punctured they generate such a heat as quickly to turn out the wieners steaming hot, ready for the buns. And what could be simpler for a picnic, a hunting party or the informal supper?

The American rights to the invention are held by Carl Laemmle, the movie magnate, and he says there's millions in it. He may be right. It is in line with the demands of a generation that wants a lot of service, and its service on tap. It belongs to the era of remote-control of radio receivers, electric toothbrushes and clocks that don't have to be wound up.—Ottawa Journal.

LESSON IN COURAGE

Pope Pius XI is setting the world a rarely inspiring example of courage and devotion to duty. Physical pain has been his constant companion for two years, and his pangs of spiritual anguish for the woes of humanity have been keener still.

One of lesser fortitude might long ago have said, as Simeon said, "Lord, now lettest Thou Thy servant depart in peace."

But the 81-year-old man in the Vatican lives on. In gentle defiance of his physicians he leaves his sickbed to go ahead with his work. Obviously he has no desire to prolong the life which has become an almost insupportable burden or to conserve his little store of strength. His is the purely selfless thought of service.

The world has many reasons for gratitude to Pius XI, and not the least of these reasons is that, in a time when such a lesson is greatly needed, he is showing how brave and good it is possible for mankind to be.—N.Y. World-Telegram.

IT'S THE SPIRIT

The spirit of Christmas, thank God! still survives — even in countries which sternly disapprove of displays of sentiment. The human heart is not to be regimented and tortured out of existence at the behest of dictators, or the poetry of life destroyed in a brutal over-emphasis of racial patriotism. There will be greetings and gift-giving in Germany and Italy and if accounts are to be credited, in Russia the essential devotional instincts of the people are reasserting themselves with a return to appealing religious customs that no amount of dragooning have been able to stamp out. It is natural for humanity to feel and respond to the need for love and sympathy.—Hamilton Spectator.

Christmas Trees

QUEEN VICTORIA SCHOOL

IN settings of beauty and originality, the various numbers of the annual Christmas concert of pupils of Queen Victoria School last evening demonstration remarkable talent of the children in dramatics, dancing and singing. Attended by a large number of parents and friends, the entertainment was one which will long be remembered by all who had the pleasure of witnessing the program. The last play especially impressed the audience for it told in an inspiring and beautiful manner the story of the first Christmas.

On behalf of the school a welcome was extended by the Principal, Mr. A. C. Wilkin, at the beginning of the program. The concert about to be presented was a development of the regular work of the course, and was of great educational value to the students as well as a pleasure for the parents. The first part of the program was devoted to numbers by Grades 1 to 4 while the operetta and finale number were by Grade 8 scholars. Later in the evening, Mr. Wilkin announced that the chairman of the Board of Education, Mr. Charles L. Hyde and the chairman of Queen Victoria School, Dr. J. W. Kinnear who were present had agreed that the students might begin classes at ten Thursday morning instead of nine o'clock.

Directed by Mr. Cooper

Under the direction of the instructor, Mr. Cooper, the school band opened the program. The gaily decorated Christmas tree at each side of the spacious stage made a brilliant frame for the pictures made by scenes in the program.

Ten tiny girls in costume of every pastel hue were revealed as the curtain parted for the first stage presentation. This was "A Tisket a Tasket" and a small tot in yellow holding a yellow basket was the centre of a pretty dance after the words of the popular song had been charmingly sung by Barbara Diment. Those taking part were:

Shirley Clarke, Shirley Mott, Lenore Griffin, Grace Barker, Pauline Russell, Barbara Diment, Sheila McKewen, Loreen May, Barbara Cornell, Joan Toms.

One of the most amusing numbers of the evening was "In Grandmother's Day" and youthful grandmother and grandfather, a stately couple were seen sitting solemnly in a shay drawn by an almost life size horse. Various other old fashioned couples were introduced, to the accompaniment of old time songs, and finally a whole chorus of gentlemen in frock coats and white wigs, and ladies in their Sunday best silks took part in a delightful dance number. The characters were Young Couple, Mary Firman, Alan Mallory; Bride and Groom, Margaret Casey, Jimmie Barron; Put on Your Old Gray Bonnet, Annie Swoffer, Billie Clarke; Old People, Beulah Wilson, Floyd Cummings, Betty Belch, David Roberts, Rae Johnson, Donald Dolan, Valerie Fleming, Bobby Alexander, Doris High, Billie Lazenby Violet Benford, Jack Patrick, Joyce Firth, Larry Buskard, Doreen Ashman, George Clarke, Joan Russell, Billie Taylor, Lois Griffin, Jack Bruyea, Lillian Clarke, Arthur Newman, Eva Nickle, Arnold Comrie.

Number to Santa Claus

In keeping with the season there was a number dedicated to Santa Claus when all the story book folk decided to serenade him. Mother Goose's children, in costumes perfectly designed for each well known character, decided to wait up for Santa Claus. However when that rotund gentleman arrived his would-be serenaders were fast asleep but he gives the little ones their chance to greet him. This number was very well done and was highly praised by the audience. The cast included:

Miss Muffet, Joyce Howard; Jack and Jill, Billie Scryngeour, Thelma Ruttan; Bo-Peep, Marilyn Kerr; Curly Locks, Lois Barlow; Jack Horner, Jimmy Dowsett; Simple Simon, Lloyd Faulkner; Boy Blue, Billie Davis; Humpty Dumpty, John Dafoe; Santa Claus, David Lockyer.

Specialty dance and song numbers by Madeline Walden, Beverly Asselstine, Barbara Diment and Mary Lou Pigden, added to the success of the entertainment and were greatly appreciated.

In the second half of the program, Santa Claus was again given a prominent place. The first number was "Santa Claus' Christmas Party". Christmas carols by a group of children in the background of the scene was an interesting part of this number, while the singing by the soloists was also outstanding. The musical numbers on the program showed the results of the careful training under George Maybee, musical instructor in the public schools, and the last number with the soft sweet voices of the children blending in the familiar hymns of Christmastide, the effect was very striking.

Story Revealed

The story of the operetta revealed that Santa Claus has a special place in his affections for those who are firm in their confidence of him, and that Christmas is for all, for no boys or girls are bad at Christmastime, and the poor waifs have a real claim on Santa Claus. The lyrics and music of the operetta were very interesting and the whole number was keenly enjoyed. The characters were:

Santa, Jack Shaddock; Boy, David Lockyer; Snowman, Bobbie Davidson; soloists, Fay Wellman, Jean Valleau, Shirley Mott, Ruth Meades, Doris Woods.

"The Star Flower" a Christmas mystery drama by the pupils of Grade 8 closed an unusually fine program. This number took its audience in fancy to a hillside at Bethlehem and finally to the Cave outside the Inn on the first Christmas eve and morn. Talented young actors enacted scenes which represented travellers through Bethlehem, an angel revealing the tidings of the coming of the Saviour to a little girl, the innkeeper's daughter, and the prophet announcing the same thing to her father. The scenes on the hillside were beautifully reproduced, the second showing the Shepherds around their campfire seeing the star and the Kings and following them to the Cave. The last scene was of wonderful beauty, with the tableau in the Cave seen as through a mist, and the adorers grouped about it. The little Rosda finds that the star flower she planted has blossomed, while her father tells his hearers that the star is Christ who should blossom in all their hearts. The singing throughout this number was splendid. The children in this drama were:

Angels, Eleanor Mallory, Nellie Davidson, Gwen Wheeler; Rosda, Jean Mills; Miriam Grace Pepper; Sophia, Dorothy Walker; Mahor, Norman Pigden; Simeon, Clark James; Marcus, Jack Lazenbee; Prophet, Douglas Soule; Shepherds, Murray McIntosh, Kenneth Staples, Walter Wardhaugh, George Meades, Balthasar, Donald Boyce; Three Kings, Bobby Haggerty, Bobby Fisher, Donald Boyce; Pilgrims (all the cast), Marjorie Kennedy, Jean McCabe; Betty Bary, Phyllis Whitmarsh; June Empey, Gwen Wilson, Rita Rollins, Dorothy Walker, Dorothy Muir, Doris Hanna, Walter Gardner.

AVONDALE SCHOOL

Aspiring young thespians, pupils of Avondale School, in Sidney Township, last evening letter perfect after weeks of training under their teacher, Miss Hansler, presented their annual school concert before a capacity audience of parents and visitors.

Larger, with more ambitious stage and scenic effects than in previous years, this season's entertainment was registered as the most successful, nearly fifty pupils taking part in the various acts and skits.

Mr. Fred Denyes of Avondale School Board, acted as chairman of the evening, introducing first the full class in chorus, "We're Ready to Begin," which was followed by an amusing recitation by James Bos, "Lisping." One of the most efficient performers of the evening, Ruth Hagerman, well known and popular tap dancer, won well earned applause for her tap dances and recitations. A tableau, the Fish Story, the Six Little Milkmaids, and the Sunbonnet Drill were portrayed with full realism and interpretation of the mood of the evening. Most amusing were recitations by Priscilla Struthers, "Ma, and the Auto;" by Muriel White, "Betty and the B'ar;" by Delbert Coles, "A Christmas Tragedy;" by Phillip Flagler, "The High Hat," and by others.

Mr. Fred Wilson, also of the Avondale School Board, thanked visitors for their attendance and support of the concert, and paid tribute to the work of Miss Hansler, and the effort that had been displayed in arranging the annual concert. Just previous to the conclusion of the evening's entertainment, the presentation of an electric lamp, a gift from the school board and pupils, was made the teacher.

The program in full was as follows:

Chorus—"We're Ready to Begin."
Recitation—James Bos, "Lisping."
Tableaux—"A Fish Story."
Tap Dance—Ruth Hagerman.
Song—"Six Little Milkmaids."
Dialogue—"The Lazy Elf."
Recitation — Priscilla Struthers, "Ma and the Auto."
The Sunbonnet Drill.
Recitation—Ruth Hagerman.
Chorus—"Waiting Up for Santa."
Recitation—Muriel White, "Betty and the Bear."
The Jockey Drill.
Dialogue—"The Spelling Match."
Song—"Where Are You Going."
Recitation — Delbert Coles, "A Christmas Tragedy."
Spade Drill.
Song—"Gid-dap Napoleon."
Dialogue—"Making a Cake."
Song—"I'm Nothing but an Old Rag Doll."
Indian Drill.
Dialogue — "Getting Even With Sister's Beau."
Chorus—"Good King Wenceslas."
Recitation—Priscilla Struthers.
Pantomime — "The Old Rugged Cross."
Recitation—Phillip Flagler.
Red White and Blue Scarf Drill.
Recitation—Ruth Hagerman.
Camp Fire Scene.
Recitation—Muriel White.
Play—"A Perplexing Situation."
Chorus—Christmas Stockings.

Following the last act a jolly Santa Claus made his appearance on the stage, and from the large and heavily laden Christmas tree presented pupils with scores of gifts marked with their names, not even forgetting the tiniest pupils who formed the guard of honor for the beaming Santa.

An Ontario barber who ventured to cut a man's hair for 25 cents instead of the regulation 35c, has been sent to jail for 15 days. West Lake

West Lake—Mr. and Mrs. R. S. McQuade, also Mr. and Mrs. Herbie McQuade and Mr. and Mrs. Beaumont, attended the funeral of the late Mr. Maitland McQuade at Oshawa on Wednesday.

Mr. Alex Brewster left on Sunday afternoon for his home in Saskatchewan, after spending the summer with Mr. and Mrs. D. Maitland. Alex made many warm friends during his stay here, and will be missed.

What Brand of Bridge is Yours?

Expert bridge, chatty bridge, and bridge for amusement only—every known brand will be represented at the bridge party in connection with the Yuletide entertainment of the Women's Hospital Auxiliary. The play will not be progressive. The convener of the bridge is Mrs. J. W. Imlah, and tables may be arranged by consulting her.

While an interesting evening has been planned for those who play cards, the dance committee has been very active preparing for this part of the affair. Incidentally members of the committee will wear sprigs of holly in their hair, at the dance. The double gym will provide plenty of floor space for the large crowd that is expected for citizens can show in this tangible, and pleasant way, their co-operation with the Auxiliary's plans for assistance to Belleville's Community Hospital.

DR. DAFOE'S COLUMN on the Quintuplets and the Care of Your Children

Healthy Stock—Great Heritage of the Quints

Yesterday, in the course of my discussion on heredity, I suggested that young people about to get married would do well to give some thought to the background of the respective mate, not only of the individual but of his or her family as well. It may help later on to overcome weaknesses or defects which would otherwise be very serious.

I think one of the greatest social developments of the last couple of years is that various States have adopted regulations requiring blood tests before marriage licenses are issued. I do hope that these requirements will become nationwide throughout Canada and the United States. Even if these tests can't be made 100 per cent effective they will still have a tremendous influence on marriage and on the health of the resultant offspring.

Most people who get married will be glad to have these tests; they will be glad to show that they are healthy, particularly when they realize that if they aren't it will be reflected in any children they might have.

I think this matter of healthy children requiring healthy parents is very, very important. I know that right from the time the Quintuplets were born I told the newspapermen that if the children lived, it would be their great heritage of health that would do most for them, for that is what they had on both sides of the family—a long line of sturdy, healthy ancestors free from disease.

During past generations parents had a lot to do with the marriages of their children, and in its way I think it was a good thing. By that I mean that the parents' only desire was the welfare of their child. In smaller centres, this was a great factor because everybody knew everything about everybody else.

This state of affairs is largely past today. Young people now make up their minds and so they must abide by their own decisions. Naturally, this does lead to a lot of grief, but in time it will correct itself. Calm and clear sight is difficult in times of social change, especially when so many have fallen away from religious beliefs.

Beliefs in the santity of marriage is another thing which has largely disappeared, and so we have the present high rate of divorce. I think one of the troubles is that people today haven't the patience to wait and see if the marriage will work out. The first time it is put to the test they throw up their hands and quit. Another fault, too, I think, is that people wait too long after marriage before having children, and these childless marriages lead to a breakdown of affection and of home life.

In time, I am confident, public opinion, will lead to the formation of regulations—I am referring to legal regulations —as to what is desirable in our marriage laws. With the regulation of marriages, then the divorces will take care of themselves.

Your Christmas and You

Thank-You Notes For Christmas Gifts

At this time, there is always present the question of good form in writing your notes of thanks for Christmas presents. But on the other hand, some pre-thinking about these notes may help you in capturing the spirit of the presents that are sent. It may, as you open your gifts, give you an inspiration of some especially charming and appreciative thing that you can write to make the gifter happy.

What is the great force that is behind this wonderful giving of gifts all over the world? The Spirit of Christmas. We talk about the spirit of Christmas, but too often we think in terms of the things that are given us. The Great Gift to the World was a gift of spirit. A bit of this spirit should be in every gift that is given. Look for this spirit behind the gifts that you receive . . . .teach your children to look for it, too. In the majority of gifts, it is there. In the others, you put it there.

When you take your pen in hand to thank for your Christmas gifts, thank first for this spirit, this kind thought that prompted a friend to send you a gift or a card or a note of good wishes. Don't be so earth-bound, so thing-bound, that your entire note is a thank-you note for the gift, with no mention of the thought behind the gift.

Such a bleak and unimaginative note of thanks for a thing reads too often like this:

Dear Jane,

Thank you so much for the scarf that you sent me. How did you know that that was just what I wanted for Christmas? The scarf is lovely, and I shall enjoy every minute of wearing it.

Sincerely,
Mary

No mention here of the kind thought behind the gift, no expression of understanding of the spirit of giving . . . . . . just a thank-you for the scarf.

On the other hand, if we begin our notes with a high-hearted something about "your kind thought of me", "your goodness to me", "your generous thought of me at Christmas-time". "You made my Christmas very happy by your thought of me", it will start your letter on a heart-warming theme. Of course what you say and the way you say it are determined by the closeness of the friendship.

After this gracious bow . . . . one sentence will make it . . . . thank for the gift itself. Mention the gift specificaally; don't vaguely write "your gift", as if you had forgotten which one it was she or he sent. Chat about the gift, appreciatively. If its reason-for-being is purely one of beauty, speak enthusiastically of this; if it is for use, say something about that, about its adaptability to your needs. If it is for both beauty and use, you can have a fine time indicating that you appreciate in it both these qualities.

An example of a thank-you note might be:

Dearest Mary,

My heart is singing thanks to you for your glorious Christmas thought of me. What a masterpiece of a friend you are! And what a genius you are in expressing your thought in the perfect gift.

All my life I have wanted a fitted traveling-bag, but never did I dream of owning one so handsome as the one you sent me. It is a beauty, outside and in, with every accessory that one could wish for, and with such a beautifully-designed monogram. I need brand-new words to say adequate thanks to you for this wonderful gift. Let's go on a cruise together . . . so I can "show off".

I hope your holidays are being gay and merry, and that every day of the New Year will be full of dreams come true. You so richly deserve all that life can give you, dear Mary.

Dearest love to you, deepest thanks,

Affectionately,
Claire

Cold Water Good Tonic For Skin

HELEN PARRISH

Knows value of cold water as a skin tonic

By HELEN FOLLETT

COLD WATER is a skin tonic and an astringent. But maybe you hate it. Lots of girls do. Does it give you goose's flesh and shivers? Pull yourself together and be brave you may happen to be a beauty quester who needs it.

When the facial tissues are no longer firm and there are signs of lines, you can no longer neglect your beauty rites; not unless you are willing to accept the ravages of time and let your face go to seed. That's fatal; not only to appearance but to one's spirits.

Use warm water and soap at night, washing the face thorougly. Rinse with tepid water, dry, spread on a massage cream. Use the fingers like little hammers. Force as much cream as you can into the flesh. Get an ice cube, friction it over the skin while the cream remains on. Don't be a cowardly-custard and cover the cube with gauze. Use it as it comes out of the refrigerator.

In the morning apply clear cold water, dry and lave the skin surface with an astringent made by combining one ounce of witch hazel one-fourth ounce of boric acid and one-half pint of camphor water.

Are you fed up with bright red nail polish? You should be. What everybody's using gets to be a terrible bore.

Try out some of the new shades. You'll find them in lovely red-blues, raspberries, petunia tints. There are pink-blues, too, and mauves and lavenders. If you want to be a few steps ahead of the beauty gang, use shell-pink or dead white.

When the nails are short and stubby, apply the nail veneer clear to the tips, covering the nail eaves. It makes the talons look longer. Also file the nails to a rounded point instead of an wide oval; it gives a better shape when nails are of the tabloid type.

Famous Authority on Problems of Love and Marriage.

Fathers Worry More Over Spinster Daughters Than Girls Themselves

Bachelor girls who make good incomes in professions and business worry very little whether they marry or not. If something superlative in the way of a suitor comes along, it's probable that they'll say "yes", but statistics show that the more successful a woman is, the more deliberate she becomes about choosing a life partner.

Perhaps she sees too much of the storm and stress of the small income marriage going on around her. She may have a sister she has to help out one who has a sizeable brood clamoring for shoes and balanced rations. Perhaps she enjoys life on her own terms. Success may have made her too hard to please, but there's no arguing about it. Statistics show that successful women are inclined to celibacy.

Fathers and brothers find it hard to grasp the why and wherefore of this decision on the part of their successful daughters and sisters. They tell you they'd be glad to see these higher salaried girls safely landed in marriage, seeming to think marriage offers more security, even if one marriage in every six goes on the rocks.

The male mind seems to cling to a hangover from the days when —marriage represented economic security for women and was about the only occupation open to them, except menial labor. At that time, marriage was necessary for a woman to achieve her proper place in society.

The spinster, even if she happened to have independent means and an excellent mind, was regarded as more or less of a failure, because men had passed her by, or that's what they thought. No mistake about it, men cling to the point of view that marriage is the proper solution for women, because they are more dyed-in-the-wool conservatives than the ladies. Even in the face of the overwhelming number of divorces in American life, fathers seem to think it safer to launch a daughter as a Mrs rather than a Miss.

As one of them wrote to me, in explaining his point of view: 'She will have had the experience of marriage, even if it's not perfect. It will keep her from dreaming and drifting."

But, in my humble opinion, the successful woman bachelor who has a sizeable job on her hands dreams and drifts less than her sister, who has been unhappily married.

Mothers, who know more about the seamy side of marriage than their husbands, are less keen about inducting a successful daughter into the married state than their husbands. They may skimp, starve, manoeuvre and try to out-general other women in launching a pretty but unmistakably Dumb Dora into wedlock, but mother is slower about these processes if her daughter has the makings of a successful career.

No one will deny that the happiest lot for women is marriage, provided the husbands they get are considerate, faithful and able to assume the responsibilities of the wedded state. But lacking these qualities, much is to be said for the lot of the present day bachelor girl, even when she isn't a career woman.

She can earn her own bread, and she doesn't have to take refuge with some unmarried relatives and become the unpaid drudge of a family which barely tolerates her. And this was the fate of the unmarried woman not so long ago.

Doubtless it's remembering or hearing about these wretched Aunt Marias or Cousin Jennies which accounts for father's attitude that his daughter had better take to the middle aisle than remain single. But thanks be to goodness that today, in a world of opportunity, girls are spared from jumping at the first chance of marriage which presents itself. What do you think about this? This column will be glad to publish your comments.

Little Benny's Note Book

This is the day pop is suppose to bring Mr. Hammer home for dinner, being his boss, and we were eating breakfist and ma said, I've decided to have a nice chickin tonight, Willyum dont you think that would be nice?

You cant beat a nice chickin, pop said and ma said, I'm glad you agree with me, and as a vegetable I think I'll have creamed carrots for a change.

As a vegetable it would be a change for the worse, pop said. You know I have an antipathy to creamed carrots that practically amounts to an animosity, why do you have to suggest such a mucky muddle as that? he said, and ma said, Now Willyum, you'll find creamed carrots on the very best menus, creamed carrots aren't the worst food in the world by any means.

By gollies I believe you're rite, pop said. Now that I come to think of it, there's a national dish in the Feejee Islands called squish squash, it's a stew made of the cocoons of a certain native catterpiller, he said, and ma said, Really, Willyum, I mean really, some jokes are beyond the pail.

Who's talking about jokes? pop said. There's a tribe in China that feeds exclusively on a dish called icky, a concoction of snales and mice ears, he said, and ma said, Willyum Potts are you trying to spoil the rest of my mortal appetite?

On the contrary, my deer, I'm only trying to prove I'm broad minded, pop said. You said there are worse dishes in the world than creamed carrots and I'm going out of my way to prove your point, he said, and ma said, Well dont go any further, now it's just impossible for me to even look a creamed carrot in the face tonight.

The result being we're going to have creamed spinnitch.

Prince Seeks to Sell His English Palace

Indian Spent Fortune on It, Lived There 28 Days

New Delhi, India.—An Indian prince's English mansion on which he spent a fortune is for sale. The mansion is Snowdenham Hall, in Bramley, Surrey. It belongs to the Nawab of Rampur, one of the five wealthiest ruling princes in India.

He bought Snowdenham to entertain for King George V's Silver Jubilee celebrations and spent months in supervising plans for making it one of the show places of England. But he has spent only twenty-eight days of his four years' ownership of it.

The prince has ordered that prospective buyers shall be received hospitably. They are served with tea in whichever one of the reception rooms takes their fancy.

Great fires burn in the open fireplaces, bowls of fresh flowers are set about the rooms. There is a grand piano, with the keyboard lid open in the minstrel's gallery.

The prince's shaving chair stands before a mirror in his dressing room. There are silk cushions and foot stools in the Begum's (wife's) boudoir, which has a view of ten miles. Upstairs in the nursery suite are English baby chairs and cots which the little Indian princes never used.

There is a great rose maze, a bowling green, a peach house where 1,000 of the choicest fruits are grown, and a vinery which yields 200 bunches of black grapes.

One of the favorite hobbies of the prince, who has absolute power of life and death over his subjects, is crime detection. At home in Rampur he often disguises himself as a humble tradesman and mixes with his people.

ROSLIN ANGLICAN GUILD

The Women's Guild of St. Paul's Anglican Church met at the home of Mrs. Robert Copeland for their regular meeting on Wednesday evening, December 14th, with a good attendance. The meeting was called to order by the president, Mrs. B. Colden, and several Christmas carols were sung. Rev. Beazer led in prayer and all repeated the Lord's Prayer and Creed. The minutes of the last meeting were read by the secretary, Mrs. George Goodfellow, and new business was discussed, the roll call was answered by repeating a verse from the Bible containing the word Joy. A short program of Christmas readings was given by Mrs. B. Colden, Joyce Goodfellow, Marion Coulter and Mr. Beazer, also a duet by Helen and Georgina Goodfellow. Mr. Beazer closed with prayer, after which exchange of Christmas gifts took place from a beautifully decorated Christmas tree, the children and men each receiving a bag of candies and nuts. After viewing the gifts, Mrs. Copeland served a lovely lunch assisted by the Misses Helen, Georgina Goodfellow and Marion Coulter. A hearty vote of thanks was extended to Mrs. Copeland for the lovely evening.

MOIRA W. A.

The December meeting of the Moira Women's Association was held on Thursday, December 15th, at the home of Mrs. Wallace McInroy with an attendance of 14 members.

After a sumptuous dinner the meeting was called to order by the president, Mrs. Frank Emerson. The opening hymn was followed by prayer by Rev. W. R. Tristram. The Scripture reading was taken by Mrs. Davis MacDonald. The roll call, minutes and treasurer's report were given by the secretary-treasurer, Mrs. James Vanderwater. It was decided to send $10.00 to Missions. A Christmas story was given by Mr. Tristram. A solo, "Silent Night, Holy Night" was rendered by Mrs. Nelson Welsh. Another hymn, "Hark, the Herald Angels Sing." A vote of thanks was extended to the hostess. Mr. Tristram closed with prayer. Collection of dinner amounted to $4.00. Proceeds of birthday box, $5.79, and grab parcels, $1.45.

Mr. Tristram took charge of the election of officers as follows:

President—Mrs. Wallace McInroy.

Vice-President — Mrs. Nelson Welsh.

Secretary-Treasurer—Mrs. James Vanderwater.

Press Secretary—Mrs. George Foster.

Corresponding Secretary — Mrs. Arthur Mumby.

Pianist—Mrs. Joe Williams.

Assistant—Mrs. James Vanderwater.

Sick Visiting Committee—Mrs. Angus Mumby, Mrs. Nelson Welsh.

Program Committee—Mrs. Blake Ketcheson, Mrs. Frank Herity, Mrs. Joe Williams.

A splendid Christmas entertainment was held at the church on Friday evening, December 16th. Mr. Morris, the music teacher, deserves much credit for the training of the children in the orchestra as well as in their singing. Several of the adults helped with the entertainment in dialogues and singing. Proceeds amounted to $9.50.

Mr. Gordon Foster motored to Newcastle to help his aunt, Miss Mabel Foster, to move to Belleville where she will be residing for the winter months.

Mr. and Mrs. John Emerson, Myrtle and Bill have moved to their new home recently vacated by Mrs. Frank Herity.

Miss Dorothy Elliott is visiting her sister, Mrs. Arthur Emerson for a few days.

Mr. and Mrs. James Vanderwater spent Sunday at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Ketcheson.

Mr. and Mrs. Coleman Townsend spent the tea hour on Sunday with the latter's parents, Mr. and Mrs. George Foster.

Master Ted Williams took tea on Sunday evening with Master Beverly Foster.

"A Christmas Carol
"Listen Darling"

"A Christmas Carol", based on Charles Dickens' story of the Yuletide, comes to the Belle Theatre, Friday and Saturday, bringing to life Scrooge, Tiny Tim, the Gratchits and the rest of the characters loved for nearly a hundred years. Read by millions, enacted countless times on stage and radio, the picture marks its first full-length screen presentation. Authentic replicas of scenes in London of the period and the quaint costumes make the characters literally walk from the pages of Dickens. Reginald Owen plays the miserly Scrooge who finds regeneration through the visits of Christmas spirits. Terry Kilburn is heart-gripping as the crippled Tiny Tim, and Gene and Kathleen Lockhart bring Bob Cratchit and his wife to life in the story.

"Listen Darling"

"Listen Darling", which will be presented on the same program featuring Freddie Bartholomew and Judy Garland, is a rollicking comedy of adolescent youth.

Adapted from Katharine Brush's magazine story of the same name, it deals with the exploits of two members of the younger generation who take it upon themselves to find a suitable husband for the mother of one and run into an amazing set of complications in so doing.

Mary Astor plays the mother and the prospective suitors are portrayed by Walter Pidgeon, Alan Hale and Gene Lockhart.

The story of "Listen Darling", will delight the hearts of hundreds of trailer enthusiasts since it is in the family trailer that Judy and Freddie "kidnap" Miss Astor and set out in pursuit of the elusive eligible male.

Eight-year-old Scotty Beckett is the only "menace" in the story, but he makes up in childish ingenuity whatever he may lack in size. As a thrower of monkey wrenches into the machinery of love, Scotty is said to be well nigh unsurpassed.

Judy Garland sings three numbers in the picture, "The Bumpy Road to Live", "Zing Went the Strings of My Heart", and "Ten Pins in the Sky". Freddie, Miss Astor and Scotty make their singing debut on the screen in one number.

Swell Show Tonight

Some of the best matches are made . . . not in Heaven, as the old saying goes. . . but in the Hollywood casting offices. They don't have to stand the test of marriage, of course, but they do have to stand the test of the film public's romantic ideal.

Latest result of their art is the pairing of Olivia De Havilland and Dick Powell in "Hard to Get", a delightful romantic comedy which will be presented at the Belle Tonight for the last times.

A comedy-drama of race tracks and counterfeiting dens, called "Torchy Gets Her Man" and starring Glenda Farrell and Barton MacLane pleased a large audience at the Belle last night. The last complete show tonight starts at 8.30 p.m.

AT THE CAPITOL

"Cassidy of Bar 20"

A group of experienced and well-liked players of outdoor action roles including William Boyd, Russell Hayden and Nora Lane, head the cast in Clarence E. Mulford's new romance of life in the frontier ranch country, "Cassidy of Bar 20," now at the Capitol. A story of how a small group of determined ranchers rout a notorious band of rustlers and bring law and order to a distressed country side.

"Tarzan's Revenge"

On the same program with "Cassidy of Bar 20" appear Glen Morris and Eleanor Holm, two Olympic champions, in "Tarzan's Revenge."

Thrill scenes in motion pictures frequently call for technical tricks to produce a desired effect but in "Tarzan's Revenge" the exciting exploits of Tarzan (Glen Morris) and his mate (Eleanor Holm) defied reproduction by anything but real risks to those involved.

When Eleanor Holm swam to safety among a pool full of crocodiles, there was no one who could swim faster or more capably under those conditions than Eleanor herself. When Glenn Morris, acclaimed as America's greatest athlete in the 1936 Olympics, had to swing Eleanor Holm under his arm and leap out of danger in the perfect Tarzan manner, Morris was the only one able to do it. When dozens of wild animals were turned loose in a scene no one knew when natural hatreds would start them off on an unscheduled killing orgy.

Small wonder that "Tarzan's Revenge" makes one of the most thrilling movies of the season.

Ken Soble's Amateurs

Friday night those attending the Capitol will be treated to an extra enjoyment when Ken Soble's Amateurs appear on the stage at 9 o'clock. Many Bellevillians will turn out to see their kith and kin or their neighbour's "little boy Johnny," "do his stuff" on the stage.

AT THE McCARTHY

"The Country Store," and
"The Main Event"

Two swell attractions "The Country Store," a novelty presentation on the stage and a thrilling "sports" story of the prize ring entitled "The Main Event," starring Robert Paige and Jacqueline Wells, on the screen, will be presented at the McCarthy Theatre tonight.

The novelty of the Country Store is unique and the stage will be loaded with odds and ends too numerous to mention. The jovial store proprietor instead of selling his merchandise gives it away—anything from a half cord of wood, a turkey, bag of potatoes, to chickens, sugar, flour or ? ? ?

The Belleville Firemen are to share in the receipts of tonight's entire evening show, to help them with their Christmas Fund to bring happiness to homes in Belleville that Santa Claus is not going to visit personally. They arranged fifteen worthwhile gifts that lucky patrons will be presented with tonight at the McCarthy Theatre. Come and enjoy a swell evening's entertainment, perhaps be the winner of the wood, turkey, or chickens and in so doing help the firemen who need every cent they can possibly acquire, to bring cheer into less fortunate homes, for Christmas 1938. Please do your share, attend the McCarthy Theatre tonight.

Boxing Game Never Healthier And White Hope Must Come From Boys Born 'Hungry'

Statement Made by Arthur Donovan, Best Known of Referees

COME HARD WAY

Praises Mike Jacobs for Making Bouts the Fans Want to See

(By Alan Randal, Canadian Press Staff Writer).

New York, Dec. 22 (CP)—In the face of talk that big time boxing is not what it was during those lush Jack Dempsey days, no less a person that Arthur Donovan today reported the game has never been healthier and designed as the only source of a heavyweight white hope those boys who are "born tough, live tough and love to fight."

That, for Arthur, is quite a statement because the fight business—a game of wits as well as fists—harbors few forthright men and Donovan, most forthright of them all and probably the most ringwise, says the least.

There is good reason. Arthur is one of the ring's best-known "third men." He handled most of champion Joe Louis' bouts. He watched the good ones and bad ones come and go since the great war. As a good referee, he fought shy of praise or criticism of individuals.

Must be "Hungry One"

Arthur would not say aye, yes or no in regard to Louis' prospects of remaining champ for some time to come but he shared the general view that it must be a "hungry man" who comes forth to topple dusky Joe.

"Anyone who would some day be champion must come up the hard way," said Donovan in regard to a white hope. "He must be born tough, live tough and love to fight. He must come by the fundamentals of fighting naturally and not taste the good things of life too young. He must be a hungry man."

No one, perhaps, could better take the pulse of the fight world than Donovan and paradoxical as it may seem, he reported it healthy in spite of Louis and because of him. To have a champion towering over all challengers seems, on the face of it, none too good for the industry. Actually, Louis has done the other fellows more good than harm because of elimination tournaments to determine his opponents.

Challenges all Around

"There are challengers all around" said Donovan. "Some may be better than others but they are all getting fights and making money. That sounds like a healthy industry."

Donovan also pointed out that Louis' phenomenal jaunt to the heavyweight throne and his doings as champion have needled boxing interest everywhere. For stimulation of interest he bracketted Louis with Mike Jacobs, the little fellow with the lickety-clack store teeth who turned from ticket speculating to fight promotion and almost overnight became a virtual czar in the industry.

"Look at the money the boys are drawing now," said Arthur. "Jacobs makes the bouts and the crowds pour out to see them. Since he got his start with Louis' contract it seems Jacobs has done more than anybody else to stimulate boxing."

BRIGHTS BEATEN BY GOODYEARS

Highest Scoring Game of Season Registered in Toronto

Toronto, Dec. 22 (CP)—Toronto Goodyears set a furious pace in the early part of the Senior "A" Ontario Hockey Association schedule but Coach Joe Primeau wasn't satisfied. Now he's added a power play to the bag of tricks carried by the league leaders and the move is bound to bring more grief to the worried opposition.

Goodyears used the ganging play on Niagara Falls Brights last night for a 10-2 victory and their smoothest game of the season. It was also their highest-scoring tilt so far. They've defeated every team in the league at least once and have been tied once by Oshawa.

Nineteen minor penalities and a 10-minute misconduct sentence were served as Goodyears, getting "hotter" as the game grew older, shot two goals in the first period, three in the second and five in the last. The Falls scored a goal in the second and another in the third.

Four of the winners' goals came as a direct result of power plays while the opposition was shorthanded through penalties. Just to vary things a bit, Goodyears scored twice while one of their own men was serving penitence.

O'Brien a Casualty

Only casualty of the battle was Frankie O'Brien, veteran Toronto forward and one of the cleanest players in amateur hockey, who suffered a two-stitch gash in his forehead near the end of the middle session.

The win gave Goodyears a total of 22 points, six more than the second-place Oshawa G-Men. Niagara Falls were left stranded in fifth place with six points.

Whip Shortt tallied Brights' goal and passed to Swat Mason for the second. The misconduct penalty went to George Grigor, Falls forward and former Toronto performer, for talking back to referee Dinty Moore towards the end of the final period.

Toronto players' scoring averages soared with the win. Lanky Hank Goldup scored twice and gained three assists. Don Metz, who may soon be signed by Toronto Maple Leafs of the National League, scored three times, as did Peanuts O'Flaherty. O'Brien had a goal and two assists and George Imlach a goal and three assists.

Sid Abel Being Sent To Farm Club of Wings

Detroit, Dec. 22 (CP)—Sid Abel, promising pivot from Melville, Sask., has been sent to Pittsburgh Hornets, International - American League farm club of Detroit Red Wings, Manager Jack Adams revealed today.

Earlier this week Adams praised the ability of Abel and waxed enthusiastic over the future in store for the youngster in the National Hockey League. Adams claimed another major league outfit had offered him an "enormous sum" for Abel.

Asked if he had changed his opinion regarding Abel the Wing coach said he still considered the rookie one of the brightest frontline prospects in the league but that some time spent with the Hornets would do the farm club and the player lots of good. He may prove just the spark the faltering Hornets need, added Adams, and at the same time the recruit will be able to polish up his playing.

Al Weill, Lou Ambers' circular manager, bleats that Luigi cannot get a fight with Henry Armstrong, who knocked the lightweight crown off his noggin, because Eddie Mead, Armstrong's master mind, won't put the title up...."He wants them to fight for the welterweight title." hollered Alphonse...."Tha's fooling the fans, they want a lightweight fight"....Donald Budge is practicing for his opening tennis match with Elly Vines by day and shaking a slick hoof on the night club dance floors in the evening.

Apparently the O.H.A. intends to to enforce their proposed "clean hockey" ultimatum to the letter. The association has issued stern instructions to its referees and all who are in any way connected with the O.H.A., that rough play will not be tolerated any longer. A halt has been called. Any movement to eliminate high sticking, slashing and general rough play will materially assist the Belleville Redmen in the O.H.A. campaign. Last season during the district senior group of Queens, R.C.A.F., Peterboro and Belleville, the Redmen served less time in the penalty box than any other squad in the loop and any move to halt high sticking, etc., will be most welcome in the camp of the Redmen.

As the Belleville Quintes are scheduled to pry off the season's hockey lid next Friday night at the Hume Arena, we deem it advisable to quote the O.H.A. verbatim in their official warnings directed against rough play, which will not be tolerated in 1939. The association recently announced the following bulletin in warning to all concerned:

"The O.H.A. Executive Committee intends to make the teams play clean hockey this season, even if some of the players and coaches have to be suspended. O.H.A. referees have been notified to severely penalize all high sticking and slashing on the hands, arms and body, with major penalties to those who start fisticuffs on the ice. Players who jump on the ice to mix in a fight will get 10 minutes misconduct penalty, and if they actually get into the fight, each player will get a 5-minute major penalty. Three major penalties in a season for any player may result in his suspension. O.H.A. managers and coaches should take warning and notify their players if they do not play clean hockey they will not be permitted to play at all."

Congratulations to the Prince Edward County hockey moguls for their far-seeing efforts in organizing a county-wide juvenile league, which they intend to enter in the O.J.H.A. Secretary Jack Sword of Wellington recently announced Picton, Bloomfield, Northport and Wellington were all prepared to proceed with a county juvenile hockey league. In the organization of such a league the Prince Edward hockey moguls are not only commencing on the right foot to establish a league that will ultimately prove popular and doubtless a success from every angle, but also will be assuring replenishment of hockey material for all their senior squads in the future. (Belleville hockey fans please note).

Do you remember when Jake Kilrain, famous fighter in the '80s, died at Quincey, Mass., one year ago today from old age—he was 78—and diabetes. During 16 years in the ring he faced 150 men but the high spot of his life was his fight with John L. Sullivan in the ring's last bare-knuckle championship bout in 1889. He lost in the 75th round.

In yesterday's open letter to Santa Claus we forgot to mention one or two things which are eligible for consideration. There's Jack Dickens, coach of the local girls' cage team. "We've got shorts for our players but we're short on patronage Santa." Then there's Harry Knott hard-working secretary of the local softball realm who says—"Santa if you could work a little more co-operation into the ranks of our association it would help matters, but what we need most is a barricade around our softball park to keep the chisslers out." Then there's Bill Lindsay: "How about a little action in our Owl League." Of course the local tennis fraternity would like nothing better than to have Santa set a league championship in their laps for a change.

Jimmy Foxx tells it: "I was a youngster with the A's and went back home to Sudlersville, Md., feeling pretty chesty about playing in the 1929 World's Series. The next morning I went down the street to receive congratulations and the first person I ran into was a groceryman I used to run errands for. 'Good morning; how's business?' I asked him, expecting that he would say something about my World's Series play. 'Business is pretty good,' he answered. We talked for a few seconds and the groceryman finally said: 'By the way, son, where have you been all summer?' Such is fame."

Although Eddie Thomas' Belleville Redmen suffered their first defeat in the Van Horne Memorial Cup series last night when the speeding Queen's "Collegians" outscored them 7 to 5 in a wild free-scoring melee, the Redmen are still tied for second place in the group standing. The loss did not affect their standing much, but had the locals managed to ram home a few more counters, they would have cinched the top rung slot of the loop ladder. As matters now stand all the Redmen have to do is win over the R.C.A.F. "Flyers" next week to finish no worse than a tie for first place, while they can't be euchred out of a play-off berth even now.

Goalie Tremblay and overzealousness were the paramount factors in the Redmen's defeat. Tremblay bordered on the sensational with his repeated miraculous saves while the Redmen in their anxiousness, as the "Collegians" were given last period penalties, left their own citadel unprotected as they applied the pressure, only to have Queen's break away and score four goals to cinch the piece. Incidentally the win elevated the "students" to first place with a total of seven points, one ahead of the Redmen. Queen's showed much better condition last night while the Redmen did not look so good defensively, as previously demonstrated this season. Five goals should be sufficient to win the average hockey match today, so it naturally follows the Redmen's hockey tariff walls must have been poor.

HODGE PODGE— Owner Tom Yawkey didn't fare as well in trying to buy diamond stars for his Boston Red Sox, as did the Yankees of two decades ago....Yawkey is now unloading some of those high-priced ball players he purchased from Connie Mack....Reviewing major league history it would almost seem as though the veteran Mister Mack knows just about when to sell his star players, always after they've reached their peak.... Goodyears are still undefeated in the senior O.H.A. ranks, but then why shouldn't Toronto have a top-ranking senior squad, they've only iced one senior team from a metropolitan area consisting of approximately a million population....Providing the weatherman provides sufficient freezing weather the Hume arena will be open for Christmas, and that's the best news we've had yet.

Weight Lifters to Perform at "Y"

On Wednesday, Dec. 28th, 8 p.m. the Belleville Y.M.C.A. will conduct a weight lifting contest.

The lifters are classified according to their weight 112 3-4 lbs, 123 3-4, 132 1-4, 148 3-4, 165 1-4, 181 3-4. The "Y" recently installed a set of Olympic standard bar bells the same as used in international competition. Tommy Pedder the local boy who captured the Ontario, Dominion and International championships for his weight has been coaching a nice class at the "Y" two nights per week. These and others from the district will compete.

In order that the public may have the privilege of witnessing this event, which is practically new to most people, no admission charge will be made.

Tommy Pedder, the pocket hercules, strongest man of his weight, will compete with others.

FRANKIE BRIMSEK CONTENDER FOR CALDER TROPHY

Easily Best Rookie to Show Wares So Far This Season

AMERICAN - BORN

Four of the Six Rookie Champions Now Playing for Hawks

(By William H. Dumsday, Canadian Press Staff Writer).

Toronto, Dec. 22 (CP)—Tribute to United States Athletes, early-season indications are that an American-born player may be named outstanding rookie of the National Hockey League for the fourth time in seven seasons. The promising young contender for the Calder trophy is Frankie (Shutout) Brimsek, new goalie of Boston Bruins.

President Frank Calder donated the prize in 1936-37 with Syl Apps, Toronto Maple Leafs centre, being the first winner. But since 1932-33 sports writers have been naming their favorite freshman in the annual poll of The Canadian Press.

It's early to predict a winner in view of the exceptionally fine crop of first year men, but the brilliant net work of Brimsek who assumed the puck-blocking job for Boston when Tiny Thompson was sold to Detroit Red Wings, is undoubtedly the bright spot of the campaign to date.

If he heads the poll the 23-year-old player who is a native of Eveleth, Minn., will succeed another American-born player, Cully Dahlstrom of the champion Chicago Black Hawks. He would be the second goalie to earn the honors, duplicating the feat of another Eveleth boy, Mike Karakas, Chicago netminder who led the freshies in 1935-36.

Carl Voss First Winner

Carl Voss, a member of the Hawks now on the injured list, was the first American-born player to earn rookie honors. He topped the 1932-33 crop while with Detroit. Sweeney Schriner of New York Americans won in 1934-35 and Russ Blinco of the Hawks, won as a member of the now-defunct Montreal Maroons in 1933-34.

Four of the six rookie champions to date are on the Chicago roster but this year the champions are relying on experience with no first-year men to compete for the award. Contenders are listed from five of the seven clubs.

Besides Brimsek, manager Art Ross has two former Toronto amateurs, Jack Crawford, burly defenceman, and winger Roy Conacher, brother of the famous Lionel and Charlie. If the Rangers retain George Allen, left winger brought up from the minors, the Kerrobert, Sask. lad should rate attention.

Adding a touch of youth to his old men of Manhattan, Red Dutton has one promising rookie in Wilfie Field. The former Pacific Coast League star is making a fine job of filling the gap on the Americans' defence caused by the exit of the veterans Happy Day and Ching Johnson.

Summerhill Promising

Breaking in as a goalie has always seemed the toughest of N.H.L. assignments but this season Claude Bourque, a Moncton, N.B. boy, stepped up from Montreal amateur ranks to shine with the Canadiens. Pee Wee Summerhill, speedy Toronto forward Cecil Hart plucked from the minors, is another promising yannigan on the list of the Flying Frenchmen.

Last but not least come the contenders of Jolly Jack Adams. The Detroit boss is gambling with two freshmen in his effort to revive the championship form of his big red machine. Syd Abel from Melville, Sask., rates highly as a centre and Jack Stewart, defenceman from Pilot Mound, Man., can not be overlooked.

New York, Dec. 22 (AP)—Now that the "listen, the wind" session of the baseball magnates is over the ballplayers are moving in.... Lefty Gomez, discovered window shopping in the roaring '40s, proclaimed he'd win 20 games for the Yanks in 1939....The Gomezs expect the stork in June...."Hope it's a boy so I can teach him to hit." said Lefty without batting an eye ....Hank Greenberg is aiming at the highest salary in baseball this year...."I hit 58 homers last year and I think I'll do better next season," said Hank...."The Babe pulled down 80 grand for doing that, why shouldn't I?

Belleville Redmen Defeated By Queens in Fast Contest

Students Take 7 - 5 Decision to Take Over First Place in Loop

ONE MORE TO PLAY

Queen's University slipped into first place in the George Van Horne series at Kingston last night with a 7-5 win over the Belleville Redmen in a thrill packed interesting contest. The local hockey squad, who were leading the loop until last night's game, has but one more game to play and can finish as high as second place or in a tie for the third spot, all depending how the R.C.A.F. team from the Airport fare in their next two games.

Belleville went out in front with a goal in the first period by one of the Jackson brothers and Storms put them two in front early in the second frame with a beautiful solo goal. From then till the end of the period Queen's took the track and at the conclusion the teams were tied with three goals apiece. In the third frame, the students, despite the fact they were shorthanded through penalties had the fight and condition to eke out a victory. Mables at centre on the first line for Queen's was the high scorer of the night with four goals of the seven scored with Williamson and Campbell supplying the others. W. Jackson, C. Jackson, Barriage and Storms scored for the losers.

The game was clean, Joe Smith, having complete control of the players all the evening and consequently the fans were given a real treat in the art of clever playing instead of high sticking and slashing. Belleville will wind up their part of the schedule on Wednesday next with a game against the R.C.A.F. and can finish first by winning this contest. The lineups:

Belleville: Goal, Hinton; defense, Bentley and McElrath; centre, C. Jackson; wings C. Barriage and B. Jackson; subs, Storms, Robinson, Prevost, St. Louis, McCreary.

Queen's: Goal, Tremblay; defense McGill and Williamson; centre, Mables; wings McLean and Campbell; subs, Johnson, Carter, Frye, Suckling Dewar.

Referee: J. Smith.

First period:
Belleville, C. Jackson (Barriage)	7.00
No penalties.
Second period:
Belleville, Storms	9.00
Queen's, Mables (McLean, Williamson)	15.00
Queen's, Campbell (Mables, Williamson)	17.00
Queen's, Mables (Williamson)	17.10
Belleville, Barriage (S. Jackson)	19.30
Penalties: Barriage, Johnson.
Third period:
Queen's, Mables (Campbell) ..	3.00
Queen's, Williamson	4.30
Belleville, W. Jackson	17.00
Belleville, Bentley	17.30
Queen's Mables	17.40
Queen's, Campbell	18.30
Penalty: McGill.

Mussolini reviews desert cavalry in Libya

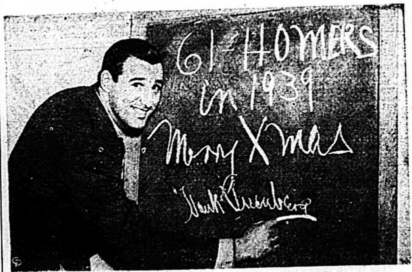
ITALY REARS THREAT OF WAR ON LIBYA-TUNISIA BORDER

Italian planes and troops were reported massed on the border of Libya and Tunisia, while anti-Italian riots seethed in Tunisia as a result of Italian newspaper demands for that colony from France. Pictured at top are a number of Italian planes in Libya, and below, a recent photograph of Premier Benito Mussolini reviewing a squadron of desert cavalry at Tripoli, Libya. Both photographs were taken last year when Il Duce visited the Italian colony of Libya.

AT LONDON RALLY TO AID JEWISH REFUGEES

Pictured here are four of the principal speakers who met at London's Mansion House during the recent public meeting to aid Jewish refugees from Germany. The meeting was presided over by Sir Frank Bowater, Lord Mayor of London, who is shown (second from right), chatting with Cardinal Hinsley, Archbishop of Westminster. At left is Major Clement R. Attlee, Opposition leader in the House of Commons. He is chatting with Lord Rothschild.

NEXT YEAR'S THE YEAR, SAYS HAMMERING HANK



Hank Greenberg, who banged out 58 home runs during the last baseball campaign, to almost equal Babe Ruth's mark of 60 in a season, wishes the fans Merry Christmas by means of a blackboard and some chalk, getting in a prediction at the same time. Hank was snapped at the major league meeting in New York, where he said that next year the record will be broken. Of course, he has been quoted as saying he won't shoot at the 60 mark again but will concentrate on just getting hits and batting in runs, but next summer will straighten little things like that out.

TORONTO STOCKS

Toronto, Dec. 22 (CP)—Volume tapered down in the early session of Toronto Stock Exchange today and prices weakened in the base metal and western oil groups. Industrial and gold issues maintained a firm to strong front despite the paucity of demand.

In the industrial section the steels registered substantial gains in spots while utilities were mainly steady and foods and papers were inclined to sag a bit.

Waite Amulet posted a break of 55 cents and other base metals showed only minor changes at early afternoon. MacLeod-Cockshutt, Central Patricia, Masden and Wright-Hargreaves were firm spots in the golds.

The most active western oils, Home, Okalta and Calgary-Edmonton, took losses of 5 to 10 cents in the early action.

WALL STREET CLOSE

New York, Dec. 22—(AP)—Rail stocks worked up a fair amount of rallying steam in today's market, but aircrafts again hit air pockets for sizable losses and many other issues lacked rising stamina. Dealings jogged along at a moderately even gait. Transfers were about 1,000,000 shares.

HOG QUOTATIONS

Toronto, Dec. 22—(CP)—Gains of 10 to 20 cents were posted for bacon-hog prices at Brantford, Hull and London today with other markets steady.

Liveweights: Brantford $9; Chatham $8.50; Hull $8.65; London $9; Peterborough $8.90.

Dressedweights: Barrie $12; Chatham $11.60; Hull $11.90; London $12.25; Stratford $12; Kitchener $12; Peterborough $11.90.

Livestock

Toronto, Dec. 22—(CP)—The few cattle offered on Toronto livestock market today sold at steady prices. Hogs also hld to former price levels. No calves, sheep or lambs were offered. Receipts consisted of 30 cattle and 160 hogs.

Butcher steers and heifers traded at $5.50 to $6.10. A few choice weighty steers reached $7.15. Good butcher cows moved at $4 to $4.25.

Off-truck bacon hogs were $9.25 to $9.40.

Produce Market Remains Quiet

Toronto, Dec. 22—Former prices were reported for butter and eggs to the wholesale trade on the Toronto open produce market yesterday by the Dominion Department of Agriculture.

The butter market maintained a quiet trading pace, with prices steady. Offerings, which consisted principally of storage stocks, continued light, but were ample for the current requirements of buyers. An odd car of Western butter was available on spot, and other cars were offered for shipment. Traders displayed little interest in this product at the prices of 21 1-2c to 21 3-4c. Ontario creamery solids remained at 21 1-2c for No. 1 grades. Prints moved well at the unchanged levels of 23 1-4c to 23-1-2c for top grades, and 22 1-2c to 22 3-4c for 38 score.

Eggs presented a firm market. Fresh receipts were clearing at previous quotations. Graded shipments sold at 33c for grade A large, 28c for medium, 27c for pullets, 25c for B's, and 22c for C grades. Dealers reported retail business as holding good volume.

Butter Weakens.

Montreal, Dec. 21 (CP)— Quebec and Western regraded butter prices eased fractionally on open produce markets here, while other products remained unchanged and steady, the Dominion Department of Agriculture reported.

Creamery butter prints to retailers were 22 1-2c-23c and solids 22c-22 1-2c. Western butter delivered in Montreal was offered at 21 1-2c for regraded.

Graded egg shipments in used free cases were offered at 35c a dozen for A large, 29c for A medium, 28c for A pullets, 2[illegible]5c for B large, and 21 1-2c for [illegible] Receipts: 496 cases.

SOUP INSTEAD OF LIQUOR

Calgary, Dec. 22 (CP)—Alberta house wives who give the milkman, postman and bread man or grocery clerks a "wee drappie" for Christmas, are requested to hand out bowls of soup this year instead of liquor. The advice came yesterday from Mrs. James McArthur, Alberta President of the Women's Christian Temperance Union.

ESCAPED INJURY WHEN CAR WRECKED

Trenton, Ont., Dec. 22.—(CP)—ert Bishop said today he was "happy to be alive" after escaping uninjured from his wrecked automobile, struck by a railway engine at a crossing here yesterday. He added he "didn't realize I was near a railroad until I saw the engine almost on me."

$70,000 FIRE LOSS

Danville, Que., Dec. 22. — (CP)—Fire, believed to have originated from a furnace explosion swept through the municipal hall here today. Damage was estimated at $70,000. The Brick building housed the Bins Silk Mill on the ground floor, the Shipway County and Danville Municipal offices, the Danville Post Office and the School Commission quarters.

Heavy Fowl Display Features Pre-Christmas City Market

Turkeys in Demand at 22 - 28 Cents per Pound

GEESE POPULAR

Its numbers augmented by a large auxiliary force of rural reinforcements, a white invading turkey army descended on an unsuspecting city today to lay siege to Christmas appetites in an eleventh hour attack before withdrawing for another year at least.

If any table in the city is not graced with the gastronomic delights usually associated with Ole King Gobbler, it won't be the fault of farmers of the surrounding districts at least. For they offered on display on one of the large pre-holiday markets seen here in some time, a variable display of Christmas fowl that could not but delight the hearts of everyone from the humble laborer to the haughty epicure.

There were turkeys everywhere. Proud gobblers, and delectable hens from as small as seven pounds to the Kings of the Barnyard that tipped the scales anywhere from twenty to twenty-four pounds. They lay piled high on tables in the inside market where crowds of pre-Christmas shoppers looked over the offering with a discerning eye.

And the prices? You could take home a nice hen turkey, weighing in the vicinity of ten or twelve pounds for twenty-seven cents per pound. Gobblers were offered at varying prices but during the early hours, the general tone held firm for all turkeys this being between twenty-five and twenty-eight cents but this price dropped considerably lower during the later hours as business was anything but brisk.

"Too much outside competition", lamented one lady, "these Bingo games and other things that give turkeys as prizes are making great inroads in our sales."

"I want thirty cents for my birds and I am going to stay here until I get it," another determined looking lady vendor declared. "These Turkeys are raised and fattened on the best of food and I'll be hanged if I am going to give them away".

Choice Geese Offered

Old Mother Goose likewise supplied a fine display with some choice birds being offered. Weights like the turkeys varied considerably but prices on the whole ranged between twenty-one and twenty-three cents per pound, although in some quarters as high as twenty-five cents was asked.

Donald Duck's barnyard counterpart ran in third place in the public favor. Quality was excellent but as in the cases of the turkey and goose, weights were varied. A choice drake, could be bought for one dollar and thirty cents with varying sizes demanding as low as one dollar each. The humble chicken forced into the temporary background by the large display of Christmas fowl, succeeded in attracting a fair amount of attention, with some nice four months old birds demanding one dollar and twenty-five cents the pair. Older chickens and fowl were offered at from one dollar each upwards.

A dash of crisp wintry weather, with a marked frosty tang in the air drove the majority of vendors to seek the comparative warmth of the inside market. Arrangements had been made upstairs in the City Hall for an overflow market but at ten o'clock this additional space had not been utilized. On the outside market a few hardy vendors braved the chill breezes and winter airs to offer stocks. Only a small display of staple vegetables were apparent, and these were covered with protecting tarpaulins to keep out frost. Pirces remained at week-end levels.

Eggs noted a small rise of a cent, with 'A' selects offered at thirty-six cents per dozen. Only a few were offered however, as the fowl display practically drove all other offerings into a marked market insignificance.

A few whitefish were available at twenty-cents per pound with some nice rock-bass and other pan-fish selling at three for ten cents.

Christmas trees were available in nearly every corner on the outside market selling at prices ranging anywhere from twenty-five cents upwards.

STORY OF ARMS

New Yorker suggested that Ekholm try to sell the guns to Latin-American nations, but the latter were not interested.

German Countess Mentioned.

Canavan said Ekholm told him a German-born Countess, now a New York resident, also attempted to interest him in commissions to be made from sale of arms, but she was unsuccessful.

(The Post, in a copyrighted story, said heads of metal goods manufacturing plants and wholesalers related that "Coster's agents" attempted unsuccessfully last April to interest them in creating "a chain of ammunition factories throughout Eastern Massachusetts."

(The paper said a Brockton shoe manufacturer was asked to produce 50,000,000 cartridge cases for overseas delivery within eight months and a $1,000,000 contract was offered a Saugus, Mass., tool firm. The Post said the agents told manufacturers the business was government-licensed.)

GILEAD W. M. S.

The December meeting was held at the home of Mrs. Wilmot Clare on Wednesday, December 14th. A Christmas program was carried out. Mrs. Badgley opened the meeting playing "Holy Night." After the opening hymn the Scripture lesson was read by Mrs. Hubel and responses were given by the members in unison and several members led in prayer. Minutes of last meeting, roll call, business and collection. Plans were made for a social evening in January.

Misses Annie Clare and Ruth Livingston played an instrumental duet. Mrs. Bertrand sang "Star of the East." Mrs. Balcanquel gave a reading. Mrs. Badgley read the legend of the little black lamb. In the absence of Mrs. Huffman, Mrs. Bertrand read a poem. Mrs. F. Yorke sang "The Wise Men." Mrs. E. Yorke sang "There's a Song of Wondrous Beauty" and all joined in the chorus. Mrs. Clare sang a solo. In the worship service. The retiring president made a few remarks and the new president, Mrs. Treverton, planned the January meeting. The watchword closed the meeting. Mrs. Clare served lunch. Attendance was 15. Collection, $4.15 including mite boxes.

C. N. R. Chairman Sees Hope of Betterment in 1939

Montreal, Dec. 22. — A special message extending his greetings for the season was sent by S. J. Hungerford, chairman and president of the C.N.R. to all officers and employees throughout the system. The message follows: "This has been a year of unsettlement in international affairs and these disturbances have had a serious effect on the normal progress of business. The Canadian National in common with all other railways in America suffered a severe decline in its revenue which led to emergency adjustments in staff and expenses not contemplated in earlier months As we approach the New Year there are indications of a betterment in world affairs and international relationships and to all employees and their families I extend best wishes for a Merry Christmas coupled with the hope that 1939 will prove to be a year of happiness and prosperity for ll."

DRIVERS ARE WARNED

Calgary, Dec. 22.—(CP)—Chief of Police David Ritchie has issued a warning to all Calgarians and country motorists to drive with extreme caution during the Christmas and New Year's season.

Chamberlain Tells Of Promise On Memel

London, Dec. 22—(AP)— Prime Minister Chamberlain told the House of Commons today that Chancellor Hitler "informed me at Berchtesgaden that he is glad to leave Memelland as it was so long as the statute was observed by the Lithuanian Government."

He referred to the convention of 1924 by which Lithuania granted semi-autonomy, under Lithuanian sovereignty, to Memel, which was once German territory.

The Memel Germans made "back to the Reich" their campaign cry in the Dec. 11 election of the Memel diet in which they won 25 of the 29 diet seats, a gain of one mandate.

Last night it became known that the new Lithuanian foreign minister, Juozas Urbsys, plans to visit Hitler in January.

It is expected they will discuss the future of Germany's former Baltic seaport—possibly from the viewpoint of union with Germany or complete control of Memel by Berlin.

ITALY IS WAITING FRENCH CONCESSIONS

Rome, Dec. 22—(AP)—Italy waited today for France to offer concessions after giving notice that the Fascist Government considers invalid the 1936 Mussolini-Laval convention concerning Tunisia.

The authoritative Fascist editor Virginio Gayda warned the French that Rome would meet "with equal arguments and equal force" France's "insidious fury" if France wanted to fight.

In Praise of Famous Names

The manufacturer of any good product, who advertises it consistently in the daily newspapers can, in the course of time, make his product famous.

Everybody knows and uses products whose names are famous because of the vision, faith, courage and enterprise of the owners of them.

They were not famous in the beginning, but the owners proceeded to make them "household words" by means of persistent advertising in daily newspapers. The goodwill value of these names is fabulous; so much so, indeed, that one or more of the plants in which these products are manufactured could be destroyed with less loss to the owner than the loss of the trade name.

You, too, can build sales and goodwill for your products and services by advertising in the Canadian daily newspapers.

The Way Back

By SUSIE POTTER HESSE

Burton Mullen turned the key noisily and closed the door to his apartments with a bang. Simultaneously the clock snapped out the hour of midnight. Burton punched on the lights, dropped into an armchair and gnawed at a cigar end.

"I'll know better than to play that trick on myself again that's sure," he muttered at length. "To doll up and go to a wedding, and smirk at the other fellow's good luck and kiss the other fellow's bride—well, it may do for the chap whose own turn is just around the corner, but it's a stiff dose for one who's thrown his to the dogs—and that's that!"

Gradually the picture of the evening's festivities faded. In its place appeared another scene, faint and indistinct at first, then so clear that he could almost feel a touch and hear a voice. Three years since she had been a reality in his life! His fault—none but his. It had come to him tonight in the happy chatter of Merle's bride. "We've waited five years", she had said, "while Merle rounded out his education; but they've been happy and a sort of insurance for the future."

Yes, they had a good time together waiting, while he—he had refused to wait! She seemed to have entered the room softly and to be gazing down at him with the wounded look in her eyes which had been born at their last interview. He could see the woodland path they had taken to the glory spot by the lake. He could hear her say that she must not leave her invalid mother and aged father.

"I am all they have, Burton. They are too old and feeble to transplant to a new home. I must not desert them now. Can we not wait a bit with patience?"

He had replied in the bitterness of his disappointment, "I'm not asking you to marry me in some uncertain future." Then, "It's now I want you—or never," he had added savagely.

"Then we shall have to call it never." The low voice, full of pain, had spoken steadily.

The train played with the hours. The station, once so familiar, at last crept into view. With a leap Burton cleared the tracks, dodged insistent cabmen, and swung into the street which led a length outside the town and up the hill to the little white cottage he knew so well.

A small boy approached. "Sonny, can you tell me how the folks are who live in the little house on the hill?"

The younger eyed him quizzically. "Them? Them's all dead."

"What's that you say?"

"Guess you don't live here, else you'd know Miss Brenda's father died last week and her ma was buried yesterday."

"But you said they were all dead. Where's Miss Brenda?"

"Oh, I didn't mean her. She's—"

Burton breathed again and turned abruptly away, leaving the lad gaping after him. As he climbed the hill his eyes intent upon the house, a young man rounded the curve in the road just beyond, hurried through the gate, knocked and, without waiting for a response, opened the door and went in.

Burton stood still a strange something clutching at his heart. "Fool! Not to have thought of that," he muttered. "Of course there's someone else. I've no right here." With a long look at the closed door and empty windows, "Good-by and bless you, Brenda," he wispered. Then he wheeled about and slowly retraced his steps.

At the station he paced restlessly up and down, back and forth. Forty minutes to train time. Thirty of them passed. Still he kept up his bitter march. A hand suddenly slapped him on the shoulder. "You—of all persons—here!".

"Not—not here, Bill, old boy. Glad to see you, but I'm gone for good this time."

"How come, man, that you say 'How do' to the station and not to the rest of us? I'm taking this rain. Going to the next stop—a little business for Brenda Morris." Bob eyed his companion.

On the train Burton essayed an explanation. "Meant to pay my respects to you and the wife, Bob, but when I saw the other chap go into Brenda's, I decided some other town was meant for me. I'd come back, Bob, to play the man and ask her forgiveness. I did not know what had happened."

"You've got it all wrong about another chap, Burton. Wife and Brenda are the same old pals. There's only one chap that looks good to Brenda. You're on the wrong train, man."

Before a full stop had been made at the next station Burton Mullen had stepped off.

"See you tomorrow, Bob," he shouted from down the tracks. "Guess I've found the right train now."

PARCELS STOLEN FROM PARKED CAR

Police Advise All to Lock Cars Before Leaving Them

Citizens who park their automobiles laden with parcels while shopping are advised to lock their vehicles securely, Chief Kidd of the city police department suggested today. "There have been several incident of thefts of Christmas parcels from parked automobiles in Belleville this season. In each case the parked vehicle was not locked leaving easy access to the car and parcels. If motorists would only take time to lock the doors of their parked cars these robberies would soon stop," stated police officials in warning today.

Yesterday Raymond Hunt, Read, Ont., parked his automobile on Victoria Ave., while his family completed their Christmas shopping. Occasionally the Hunt family returned to their parked car to deposit purchased articles. Upon their last return to the vehicle however, the owner discovered several of his more valuable parcels had been stolen. Police were notified of the incident.

Clothing Given Into Custody of Dr. E. R. Frankish

All blood-stained clothes and other articles held by police following an attack upon Lem Lung, Chinese restaurant proprietor at Marmora on Dec. 10th last, were yesterday given into the custody of Dr. E. R. Frankish, legal-medico expert of the Provincial Attorney General's Department, for examination.

Police arrested 57-year-old Isaac "Ike" Neal, of Marmora, following an alleged attack upon Lem Lung in the latter's Glossy Cafe at Marmora on the morning of Dec. 10th, at which time Lung stated he had been set upon and attacked by Neal and struck over the head seven times with a hammer. Neal was arrested and held in custody on a charge of criminal assault.

The blood-stained clothes of Lem Lung and clothes said to have been found in Neal's boarding house and also bearing blood stains, were given into the custody of Dr. Frankish, as well as a hammer also found at the Neal home. The blood stains will be examined for comparison, Crown Attorney B. C. Donnan K. C., revealed today.

County Constable Percy Grey and Provincial authorities, who arrested Neal after Lem Lung staggered to the street bleeding profusely from multiple wounds and lacerations of the head, stated today that Lung had been attacked from the rear while preparing a meal in the kitchen of his restaurant. Lung was released from the hospital yesterday and returned to Marmora. Neal is being held without bail.

Frankford

Frankford.—The W.M.S. of the United Church held its last meeting of the year along with the election of officers on Thursday afternoon at the Parsonage. Mrs. Smith Osterhout read the Scripture lesson. Mrs. C. D. Powell gave the Associate Helpers' report and Mrs. H. J. Madill read the treasurer's report. Officers elected were:

1st Vice-President—Mrs. P. E. Bonisteel.

2nd Vice-President—Mrs. C. D. Powell.

Associate Helpers' Secretary—Mrs. Smith Osterhout.

Pianist—Mrs. (Rev.) J. P. Lane.

Assistant Pianist—Mrs. Harder Bonisteel.

Treasurer—Mrs. H. J. Madill.

Secretary—Mrs. Gerald Dickson.

Missionary Monthly Secretary—Mrs. John Williamson.

Press Secretary—Mrs. Walter Morrow.

On Sunday evening the service at the United Church was unique, being in the form of a Candlelight and White Gift Service. The entire church was lighted with candles, while in front of the pulpit with its Yuletide setting, white gifts in great numbers were arranged. These will be distributed this week about the village to help make the season a little more cheerful. The church choir, each member holding a lighted candle, sang softly, "Silent Night" as a vesper at the entrance, then proceeded to the loft singing the English carol, "It came upon the midnight clear."

Rev. J. P. Lane delivered the address using as his theme the joy and happiness to be gained at this season of the year. Mr. Frank Wardis of Toronto, guest soloist, sang with fine tone and expression, a tenor aria from Handel. He also assisted the choir in its rendering of "Tidings of Joy; Glory to God" and "Chime On" in which Miss M. Cooper took the soprano obligato part. After the choir recessional "Silent Night" was again sung softly at the entrance of the church. A very large congregation attended this service which was the first white gift service held here in some years.

Mr. and Mrs. Murney Reynolds of Foxboro, also Mr. George A. Reid of Belleville, attended the oyster supper held in the L.O.L. Hall by the R.B.P. on Monday night. Both Mr. Renyolds and Mr. Reid were among the speakers on the program.

Mr. O. Moynes of Gardenville is relieving at Mr. Claude Wyatt's barber shop while Mr. Wyatt is on holidays.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Cooper and family of Bloomfield were guests of Mr. and Mrs. D. O. Leavitt on Sunday.

The Royal Bank of Canada Reports Good Year

Total Assets $908,064,000 up $38,500,000 — Deposits Increased $48,000,000 — Commercial Loans up $18,000,000 — Profits Practically Unchanged

The Annual Balance Sheet and Profit and Loss account for the year ending November 30, 1938, being issued by The Royal Bank of Canada to its shareholders reflects a very substantial growth in practically all departments of the bank's business. Features of the statement are substantial increases in loans and deposits. Total assets are $908,064,711, an increase of $38,500,000 during the year.

Current Loans Increase $18,000,000

Current loans in Canada, including loans to municipalities and Provincial Governments, amount to $218,211,058 as against $200,563,727 in the previous year. Current loans outside of Canada remain practically unchanged. The increase in Canada confirms the trend established in the previous year, total increase in current loans in Canada for the last two years exceeding $30,000,000.

Deposits Increase $48,000,000

Deposits are shown at a higher figure than in any previous Annual Balance Sheet. Practically the total increase is in non-interest bearing deposits. This no doubt is the result of the easy money policy in force in Canada and the United States. In this connection it is interesting to note that as late as November 1935 free deposits were 30 per cent of the total, where as they are now approximately 46%.

Strong Liquid Position

As might be expected under existing conditions, the liquid position is exceptionally strong, total liquid assets being $543,237,400, an increase of approximately $30,000,000. It is noteworthy that cash, cheques and deposits with other banks amount to $200,287,265. The percentage of liquid assets to total assets was 65.37, practically unchanged from the previous year.

Profits Practically Unchanged

Net profits for the year are shown at $3,606,233 as compared to $3,711,379 in the previous year. Dividends paid absorbed $2,800,000. The usual contribution of $300,000 to the Pension Fund Society was made as well as an appropriation of $200,000 for Bank Premises, leaving a balance to be carried forward of $2,721,409, an increase of $396,233.

The Annual General Meeting of the Shareholders will be held at the Head Office of the bank at 11 a.m. on January 12, 1939.

A. B. Crealock Designed Bridges In Belleville

Noted Engineer Dies in Toronto at His Home in His 46th Year

Archie Burgess Crealock, well known in the engineering profession in Canada, died yesterday in Toronto at his home 502 Riverside Drive in his forty-sixth year.

Mr. Crealock was the man who designed the lower and upper bridges built at Belleville in 1930 and in 1931 and was consulting engineer during that construction by the Holdcroft Company of Kingston while City Engineer Mott was resident engineer during the operations.

Mr. Mott today paid tribute to Mr. Crealock as an engineer of wide experience and as an authority on concrete construction. He expressed his sorrow at the news of the death of one whose acquaintance he had formed at the time of the planning and building of city structures.

Mr. Crealock was lifelong resident of Toronto and was registrar and secretary-treasurer of the Association of Professional Engineers.

He had engaged in his chosen profession ever since his graduation in 1915 from the University of Toronto. Among his many assignments he executed were tre drafting and estimates of the radial railway entrances for the civic transportation committee, Toronto, in 1915 and inspection of brass for the Imperial Ministry of Munitions.

He joined the Highways Department of the Ontario government in 1919 but resigned in 1929 to form, with E. V. Deverall, the firm of Deverall and Crealock. He was a member of the Engineering Institute of Canada, and master of St. John's Lodge No. 75 A.F. & A.M. in 1930. He is survived by his widow and one daughter.

Police Blotter

Provincial Police arrested George McElwaine, Adolphustown resident, on a charge of obtaining money under false pretenses last night. McElwaine is wanted in Toronto and was arrested on a charge issued by the Toronto police. He was held in custody at Belleville last night and today turned over to the Toronto authorities by the Provincial Police.

While emerging off the upper bridge to proceed south on Front St., last evening, an automobile driven by Mervyn Burkholder, Belleville, skidded on the ice and was in collision with another motor car driven by William Montgomery, Stirling. Fender and running board damage to the Montgomery car resulted.

Upon investigations by local police it was discovered that the Burkholder-driven car was not displaying the proper licence plate markers which had been issued for the vehicle. Police confiscated the plates on the vehicle, they stated today.

In custody of the Provincial Police upon the farm of W. W. Craig, Sidney Township, is a white heifer calf, the authorities revealed today. The calf apparently wandered from the home herd. Further details are available at the Provincial Police headquarters.

Two inebriates, a man and a woman, were taken into custody by local police last night. Charges of intoxication will be preferred in each incident, police stated today.

FRACTURES HIP FOR SECOND TIME

Christmas does not hold many charms for Mrs. Wesley Vanalstine, ninety-year old Napanee lady. A year ago she slipped and fell, fracturing her hip, but made a remarkable recovery. Rising from her bed one morning this week, the aged lady slipped on a rug and fell, fracturing the hip in the same place.

Her condition is reported as being quite satisfactory.

SURVIVING MUSICA BROTHERS INDICTED

The three surviving brothers of the notorious Musica family, are pictured here after being arraigned on grand larceny and forgery charges contained in indictment of the New York county grand jury. Previously the three brothers had been held only on the technical federal charge of violating securities and exchange regulations in the McKesson and Robbins "missing assets" fraud. As shown here they are, left to right, George Musica, alias George Dietrich; Arthur Musica, alias George Vernard, and Robert Musica, alias Robert Dietrich. The eldest brother, Philip Musica, alias F. Donald Coster, who was head of the giant McKesson and Robbins drug firm, committed suicide as he was to be arrested in connection with the fraud.

R.C.M.P. "CRIME SCHOOL" HOLDS GRADUATION EXERCISES

Here is the 1938 graduating class of the new R.C.M.P. "crime school" taken outside Regina barracks following the first graduation exercises which were held this month. Drawn from all over Canada, 23 officers and non-commissioned officers underwent an extensive course of training in criminology based on the best in American, French and British police methods in the "crime lab" at Regina, training headquarters of the famed force. In the front row, left to right, L. E. Albert, Washington, D.C., executive aide to the chief of U.S. Secret Service, who was present; Premier W. J. Patterson, of Saskatchewan; Supt. T. H. Irvine, Officer Commanding the training depot, and Dr. M. Powers, director of the crime laboratory. Premier Patterson presented diplomas to the following: Supt. E. G. Frere, Winnipeg; Inspectors G. H. Birch, Swift Current; J. P. Blakeney, Fredericton; G. Curleigh, Edmonton; O. P. Farthing, Halifax; C. K. Gray, Saskatoon; R. Radcliffe, Vancouver; Sergeants E. Anstead, Ottawa; F. H. Bebb, Dauphin, Man.; M. T. Berger, Penticton, B.C.; F. Camm, Regina; N. W. Churchill, Halifax; E. R. Crouch, Edmonton; J. Cruichshank, Winnipeg; J. Frewin Fredericton; T. J. Scrogg, Montreal; A. Thornton, Vancouver; A. N. Veitch, Toronto; C. Walker, Regina; Corp. J. Howe, Swift Current, and Lance-Corp. C. Macdonell, Canora.

MARLBANK MEN HELD FOR THEFT

Police Allege They Stole 30 Chickens and Some Grain Near Napanee

Three Marlbank youths were arrested by police as they attempted to dispose of 30 chickens in Belleville this morning. The chickens, as well as three bags of grain found in the youths' possession, are said by Provincial Police to have been stolen from the farm of Henry Mountenay, residing south of Napanee, last night.

The names of the three youths were given as Kenneth Bradshaw, Earl Ferguson and Ernest Huff, all lumbermen residing near Marlbank. Following their apprehension in Belleville the trio were returned to Napanee, where charges of the theft of 30 chickens and three bags of grain were preferred. The men were held in custody.

Following a lengthy police vigil, looking into the wholesale stealing of poultry from throughout the Bay of Quinte district, the authorities' efforts were rewarded today as the three Marlbank men arrived in Belleville and are said to have attempted to dispose of their loot at a local poultry wholesale establishment.

Provincial Constable W.E. Smith, assisted by city police effected the arrest of the trio, who later are said to have made statements to the authorities. Police say the three men left their lumbering activities, near Marlbank, late yesterday and drove by automobile to Mr. Mountenay's farm south of Napanee, where they stole the 30 birds and three bags of oats. Six of the chickens were smothered to death enroute to Belleville, however.

KILLED TWO FOXES WITH ONE SHOT

Hiding in the bushes near his home at Roseneath, Alex. Spiers, farmer and hunter extraordinary, rubbed his eyes in amazement when he saw a pair of handsome red foxes approach his hiding place. About ten feet apart, the animals walked on the top rail of a snake-fence, unaware of his presence.

But he stared in further amazement after he had fired at the leading fox, when both animals fell to the ground, dead.

Spiers hounds had followed the scent of a fox prior to the sudden appearance of the animals. Spiers has shot four foxes this week valued at approximately five dollars each. They have been more plentiful in his district this year than for some time, he stated.

Many Municipalities Hold Nominations On Monday Next

Municipal nominations will form a tasty aftermath of Christmas for electors of a number of rural municipalities on Monday.

Tyendinaga, Madoc Village, Madoc Township, Elzevir, Bangor Thurlow, Sidney, Hungerford, Frankford, Elzevir and other county districts will hold nomination meetings on Monday to select their reeves and councils for the coming year.

While it is reported, that in the majority of cases acclamations will be in order for the heads of the councils and deputy reeves, spirited elections are forecast for other municipalities. In Bangor Township, there is a possibility of two men by the same name contesting the reeveship with William A. Davis, reported to be standing in opposition to Reeve William J. Davis, who has guided the destinies of that northern municipality for a number of years.

In Elzevir Township, the dean of county councillors, and chairman of the Roads and Bridges Committee, James A. Moore, one of the most popular members of the county body will in all likelihood receive an acclamation, that will mark his twenty-sixth consecutive year as head of his municipal council.

In Tyendinaga, where Ex-Warden Henry Larkin has announced his retirement from municipal life, Deputy Reeve George Sherman will in all likelihood be elevated to the reeveship with a new deputy-reeve to be appointed. There is however a slight possibility of an election, it is stated. In Sidney, Reeve George Bush and Deputy-Reeve Clem D. Ketcheson are slated for an acclamation but here again electors may spring a last minute surprise by demanding an election. In Thurlow, little opposition is expected to be placed against Reeve Roscoe Robson and Deputy-Reeve George MacDonald, but as in other places last-minute decisions on the part of electors may force a change in the municipal fathers for the year.

Elections will be held on Monday, January 2nd in those municipalities where such is necessary.

INDICTED ON ANTI-TRUST CHARGES

Fined for Having Bass In His Possession

Picton, Ont., Dec. 22 (Special)—The fact that Aylesworth Cole, Ernestown fisherman, told the Magistrate that he found two dead black bass in his nets, and had shipped them to his son in Chatham with one hundred whitefish, did not exonerate him in the eyes of the law. He was fined ten dollars and costs in Magistrate's police court yesterday when found guilty of being in possession of game fish out of season.

Cole told Magistrate O'Shea that he did not think he was allowed to throw the fish back because they were dead.

FOUR CHARGES ARE ENLARGED

Orbey Alyea Sent Up for Trial on Manslaughter Charge

Picton, Ont., Dec. 23rd.—(Special)—Following committal for trial of Orbey Alyea, Carrying Place resident, on a charge of manslaughter by Magistrate Shea in police court here yesterday, Crown Attorney Gordon Walmsley, asked enlargement of four additional charges that have been preferred against the accused "sine die".

Only eight witnesses were called by the Crown in the preliminary hearing of the charge of manslaughter which arose out of an automobile accident on Highway No. 14 on Dec. 3rd following which Edward J. Simonds, aged Massassaga resident, died of injuries received.

The four additional charges which accused will face include, leaving the scene of an accident; leaving a car parked on the highway without lights; reckless driving, and failing to report an accident.

Alyea will face the charge of manslaughter in the Spring Assizes of the Supreme Court of Revision.

says Mr. Alex MacLean
President, MacLean Motors Ltd., Welland

● "The use of regular space in the Local Daily has been one of the most important factors in steadily building up the volume of our business.

Ninety per cent of our advertising appropriation is spent on local newspaper advertising. We are convinced of the results which can be obtained through advertising in the local daily by the rapid and successful growth of our firm from two to 42 employees in the past ten years.

During 1937 we used 38,976 lines of space in our local daily and this was augmented by 95,048 lines of national copy placed by General Motors Limited over our firm name. For 1937 our turnover was $535,000.00 selling 276 General Motors cars and trucks and 641 used cars.

As our business continues to grow and expand, we will continue to increase our local daily advertising appropriation."

CHAPTER XVIII

"I am going to find out what this all means!" thought Jan, a little later. She found Paul in his office still looking pleased with himself.

"I came to thank you again for the beautiful way you fixed up our rooms," Jan began.

"Think nothing of it," said the manager. "We have been very happy to have you girls here, Jan, and we hope you have enjoyed your stay as much as we have."

"Goodness! thought Jan, "that sounds as if he expected us to be going soon."

More bewildered than ever, she tried again. "I really don't know how to thank you, Mr. Harris, and I know Dora will be more than delighted. She thinks that apartment, you know, is absolutely the most beautiful place in the whole world."

"Well"—Paul cleared his throat —"I am very glad to hear that — very glad. I hope both of you, Jan, will always keep a warm spot in your heart for the Devon Arms."

That farewell note again! Jan decided on a sudden attack.

"Where does Mr. Deverest come in on this?" she inquired as casually as if they had been discussing that gentleman just the moment before.

"What a bright little lady you are," Paul, smiling. "Mr. Deverest bound me to secrecy."

Instantly Jan knew that in order to find out anything at all she must pretend to have information she did not possess.

"He's a big kid," she said indulgently, "with his Christmas secrets. Of course there's no secret, really, except in his own imagination."

Paul looked relieved. He had wondered if he had not made a mistake in rousing Jan's suspicions, but of course the girl knew what was actually at the bottom of it all. No girl smart enough to get herself engaged to a man like Tony Deverest could be really in the dark about his Christmas eve "surprise" for her.

"Well, since you do know the facts," Paul told her, "I see no harm in giving you a hint that ought to make the surprise even more enjoyable for you. Mr. Deverest is planning to announce his engagement with a magnificent party here, at the Devon Arms, on Christmas eve. He is having the whole supper room made into a Christmas scene, with the biggest tree in town and all the trimmings.

"You'd like a new dress for the party, wouldn't you, Jan? I know you haven't been getting enough money—due to unfortunate circumstances—to splurge on a new party dress, so as a Christmas present I have arranged with Mary Elizabeth Howard for an engagement dress for you, and she's expecting you to call tomorrow morning for a fitting appointment."

"That's sweet of you, Paul" said Jan unsteadily. Paul beamed at impression his generosity had made, and he sincerely hoped that his present handsome behavior erased from Jan's mind any memory of past misunderstandings.

He could not know that to Jan he no longer existed. Her world had crumbled. This time there was no mistake about it. The remnants of her happiness were vanishing before her eyes!

Back in her apartment Jan felt lost. These were the hours, after rehearsals were over and before it was time for her to appear in the show, in which she and Tony had had all those happy adventures. Still, as she looked back, the glamour seemed to fall away from it all. The places where they ate — the dull little roads just outside the city, which were all they had time to explore—even an occasional pause for conversation with a garrulous gas station man.... No —it wasn't at all what they had said, or where they had gone that had given those few short weeks their touch of magic. It couldn't have been! It must have been just being with Tony.

Everything was changed now. Oh, well Christmas being so near would be fun for Dora, and there was something that had to be done right away—Christmas present wrapping. Resolutely Jan went to the desk and got out the rolls of red and green transparent paper, the gold-starred ribbon, the box of bright stickers.

When the gifts were all spread out on the bed ready for wrapping Jan suddenly thought they didn't look very grand after all. And she had spent hours choosing them! But Dora would like those delicate embroidered handkerchiefs. And the length of palest blue satin ribbon for her fair curls. There was a book of puzzles and a novel in a gaudy jacket. Jan set about wrapping them in as many boxes and layers of tissue paper as possible. It would be fun for Dora to unwrap them, and Jan wanted to make it as intricate a job as she could.

"Dr. Curtis asked to see you when you came in," the nurse told Jan when she entered Dora's room. "He said to go up to his office."

Jan, who had stooped to kiss Dora, looked uncertain as she straightened up.

"Go on up right away," Dora suggested, "maybe it's important."

"Darling, I haven't even seen you yet! But I'll hurry."

Dr. Curtis was not in his office when Jan reached it. The door was open; she went in and sat down by the window.

"Well, here we are!"

The doctor's voice brought her back to the room—she had been far away—back indeed, to her first meeting with Tony. She was seeing herself, rain-soaked and mud-spattered, and Tony trying to repair some of the damage his car had caused.

"Dora is doing well, isn't she, Doctor?" she asked, rising, as he went toward his desk.

"Dora couldn't be better, and hang around here," Dr. Curtis assured her, glancing hurriedly through some papers that had been left on his desk. "I just wanted to ask you to have dinner with me tonight."

"Why, I'd love it, Doc—Brad," she substituted at a warning look from the doctor.

"That's better," he said with satisfaction. "I'll call for you at your hotel, say at seven? Right?" He came close, smiled down into her face. "Run back to your sister and tell her I said she's my prize patient."

Dora accepted this praise with less interest than she evinced at Jan's dinner engagement with her "doctor man."

"Oh, Jan, you're getting to be so popular," she cried, gleefully.

"Silly," said Jan, laughing. Popular! Why, she was the unhappiest girl in all the world. Not only had she lost Tony—oh, why did she let him go, no matter what he had done?—but, after Christmas eve she and Dora would lose their beautiful apartment at the Devon Arms. William Anthony Deverest would appear with his fiancee, Jan Payson would be known for what she was, a fraud, and she and Dora would have to go back to some wretched little furnished room. It was just possible that Paul Harris cared enough for Dora to want to marry her, of course, but Jan hardly dared hope that it would really turn out to be so.

Brad Curtis's eyes told Jan, without a word spoken, that she had chosen well when she opened the sitting room door to him. She was wearing a frock of gold-colored chiffon—one that Mary Elizabeth Howard had assured her matched her golden eyes.

"All ready?" The doctor smiled at her.

"I know how busy you are — I didn't want to take up any more of your time than I have to," said Jan.

"That's beside the point. The real question is, do you want to give me as much of your time as I want?"

"That's exactly what I do want!" But Jan's laugh could not conceal her surprise—the surprise she had first felt when, over the luncheon table a few days before, Dr. Curtis had seemed to be genuinely enjoying her company. She could hardly believe it, but here it was again. That half hidden but inescapable impression that Dr. Curtis was making love to her.

CHAPTER XIX

"I ventured to hope that you would have dinner at my home," Brad went on. "My mother is particularly anxious to meet you: I've talked about you two girls a lot."

"Do you live with your mother? said Jan, simply because she felt she had to say something. Dr. Curtis was helping her into her wrap.

"That's right. She's very old, hardly stirs out of the big top-heavy house in which she went housekeeping when she was first married. I live there because it pleases her, and because I like it myself." He leaned close to the speaking tube. "Stop at the corner, Charles, I want to get some flowers."

When he came back he handed Jan a transparent box containing a spray of bittersweet berries, red and gold against evergreens.

"How lovely with this dress", Jan took out the unusual corsage and fastened it at her waist.

"Lovely with your eyes and hair," Brad said gravely. "More red than your hair, less golden than your eyes."

Charles was manoeuvering the car deftly to the curb now, stopping before a great pile of a brownstone house, all bay windows, it seemed to Jan. A high fence enclosed a little garden sp[illegible] at the side.

"Y[illegible] see, it's a throwback to the elegant eighties," said Brad, helping her mount the steps that climbed up the front of the house, past an English basement, to the parlor floor. Before they reached the door it was opened by an elderly maid in a voluminous uniform that all but touched the floor. Her white hemstitched apron was voluminous too, and she wore a real cap, not a part bow. Jan was sure she must have served in this house many years.

That was true, she learned later, when, after she had greeted old Mrs. Curtis in the drawing-room, dinner had been announced by the same maid, and they were all seated at the heavy mahogany table in the dining room. Everything in the room was heavy—the tapestry covered chairs, the thick draperies drawn together at the tall windows, even the silver on the table. Only the china was fragile, and that was so delicate that Jan was careful about touching it with her knife and fork. It looked as if it could be shattered by a sigh, she murmured to Mrs. Curtis, admiringly.

"It's real old Irish Belleek," explained the doctor's mother. "It's my favorite tableware—that's why I had it brought out tonight."

"That shows you what she thinks of my friends, Jan," Brad put in. "Funny part of it is, she wouldn't use it if this were a dinner party for her own pals."

"I'm glad she brought it out tonight," said Jan, very fragile herself against the high back of her chair. "I've never seen anything like it."

When the meal was over the old lady suggested coffee in the library for Jan and Brad. She never drank coffee herself, she explained, and would go to her own room at once.

Jan waited until Brad had escorted his mother to her room and called her maid to make her comfortable for the night; he returned to the dining room and drew Jan's arm through his, and they went into the library. Here only one lamp had been switched on; the light of a coal fire behind the bars of an old-fashioned grate seemed very bright.

"Let me pour that for you." Brad half rose from his chair as the maid left a silver tray with the coffee service and two of the fragile Belleek cups on a small table beside Jan.

"No, you stay put," she ordered. "I'll pour—how many lumps?" She looked across at him, the sugar poised in the old silver tongs.

"One. No cream. This is luxury," as he took the cup from her hands and watched her return to her own chair.

"Do you know this is the first time I've ever had coffee in a library?" she said as she settled back her own cup still on the silver tray. "I've read about it in stories: I often wondered what it would be like."

"Is it anything like what you expected?" The doctor's eyes were amused.

"No. I never dreamed that a room could be as beautiful as this —and only one of a whole houseful of beautiful rooms. There's something about it, about this whole house, that makes it different from anything I've ever seen."

"You're right, Jan. This house has something—it has a past. It has years of living and loving in it, and the house remembers."

"Your mother must have been very happy here."

"She was. Not always, of course. There was a younger sister—" he broke off, "I'm glad you like the house, Jan."

"I do." She smiled at him.

"Enough to live in it?"

"You mean—?"

"I mean that now I've seen you in my home, I can't let you go out of it. Not without telling you that I hope you will come back soon to stay."

Brad rose and crossed the space that lay between them. "Come over here," he said, drawing her to her feet.

Into each side of the hearth a seat had been built facing the fire. They were made of the same old polished oak which paneled the room, and the glow of the fire was reflected in the gleaming wood. The doctor led her to one of these narrow benches and took the other himself.

"It's not very comfortable, but I like the view," he smiled. "I want to look at your face by firelight." He was silent for a moment and Jan, confused, was unable to speak.

"You belong here," Brad began again after a while. "You should have the things that I can give you. You belong here, and you belong to me. I knew that the moment I first saw you. Do you remember that first day, Jan? You opened the door and when I told you who I was and that I had come to see Dora, you turned so white I thought you were going to faint.

"'Not Dr. Bradford Curtis,' you kept saying, 'not the only man in the world who can cure Dora!' You remember that, Jan?" the doctor asked.

"I remember." Jan's voice was husky. The miracle was as great now as it had been then. It was a miracle that had brought the great Dr. Curtis, the one man who had had conspicuous success in cases like her sister's, to their door that day.

"I was so grateful then that I nearly died," she said simply. "And yet I didn't know what gratitude was till I heard that the operation had been a success."

"You can forget about that now" the doctor went on. "I don't want anything I have been able to do for Dora to influence your decision, Jan, when I ask you what I'm going to ask you. Will you marry me?

"I'm thirty-five years old and you're — twenty? That's fifteen years between us. Could you learn to love a man fifteen years older than yourself? Will you give me a chance to teach you to love me?"

He paused and Jan, twisting in her fingers, a bit of evergreen from the bouquet he had given her, sat staring into the fiery heart of the coals.

"Perhaps," said Brad gently, "I ought first to ask you, is there anyone else, Jan?"

"No," whispered Jan.

"For a little while I thought you and Tony—er—Williams—"

"No," said Jan, firmly this time. "That didn't mean anything."

"Then—you'll try to love me?"

"Oh, Doctor Curtis, I do love you!" Impulsively Jan rose and threw her arms around his neck. He disengaged them after a moment and held both her hands in his.

"That's not quite the way I meant," he told her softly. Then "We'll leave it at that, shall we? And now I'll take you home. I'm flying up to Vermont in the morning; I've got a camp at a place called Moose River. I'm going up there for a little rest over Christmas."

"You're going to spend Christmas all alone?"

"I need a glimpse of the mountains every once in a while. This is the only time I can get away. There's an old guide who has a shack nearby—he always looks after me on these occasions."

"Brad, I do wish you a happy Christmas!" said Jan.

He put his arm around her, drawing her close as she stood beside him before the fire. After a minute Jan looked up, mischief in her dancing eyes.

"Brad," she asked, "isn't that mistletoe?" She pointed to a vase filled with Christmas evergreens, just above their heads.

"There must be some around up there."

Laughing, he bent his head and kissed her.

CHAPTER XX

It was December 23rd. Jan was expecting Tony to ring up any moment now. With such an excuse as this Christmas eve party he would surely make an attempt to see her again! If he did she would just have to be firm and say:

"No, Tony, that's all over now. Everything is settled. Let's leave it that way."

Or, perhaps, it would be better to be reluctant at first, but give in gracefully before Tony hung up. Under the circumstances Tony would be concerned, no doubt, about Deverest's coming party, and would be particularly perturbed because of the effect it might have on Jan's future. Probably he would want to talk it over with her and help her find a way out of the situation in which she found herself involved.

But days had passed since that last ride with Tony. This was the third, to be exact, and he had not called That was a relief, of course, Jan told herself over and over. Only it was the kind of relief that made her turn pale every time the telephone rang and caused her to wonder irritably each time she hung up why it was that people bothered to telephone about such trivial matters!

She was due at Mary Elizabeth Howard's at eleven this morning. She presented herself dutifully. Mary Elizabeth herself came in to supervise this last fitting as Jan did as they directed her before the big mirrors. She watched her image advance and retreat in their depths.

"There." Mary Elizabeth pointed out, to the seamstress sitting back on her heels just out of Jan's line of march, the cause of the defect in the hang of the full skirt, for which they had been looking.

It was a nice enough dress, Jan conceded. A queer blue, though, she thought. Miss Howard called it "romantic blue." It did remind Jan of midnight winter skies she and Tony had seen together. Suppose he called while she was out. Would Molly, the telephone operator, remember to give her his message? He wouldn't call. Jan forced herself to consider the dress reflected in the mirrors. What soft soft velvet! And how the color darkened or took on added sheen as new lights or shadows played on the sweeping ripples of the skirt! A "picture" gown, Miss Howard called it. The bodice was the off-the-shoulder type and her skin looked very white against the intense blue of the velvet. Oh, the style suited her all right, she acknowledged to herself, but what difference did it make? She would never wear this dress!

"Turn again." Obedient to Mary Elizabeth's commands Jan moved this way and that, stood still at the turns, pacing slowly in a wide circle around the beautiful modern salon.

"I will never, never wear this dress!"

Jan had made her decision. Righe here with the fitting in progress. Up to now she had no idea what she would do. As the time for the Deverest Christmas party drew near she had seemed to be under a spell. She couldn't think her own thoughts. That didn't make sense, she told herself. Surely there was something she could do! Something she ought to do—before catastrophe descended upon her! But she remained dully oblivious to the passing of the hours. She simply could not rouse herself to take any course of action. Now, suddenly, seeing herself reflected in the "engagement" gown, she came face to face with reality—and she knew what she had to do!

When the fitting was finally over to Miss Howard's complimentary satisfaction, Jan went to see Dora. She must be assured once more that Dora was being well cared for. She could come home by New Year's, Dr. Curtis had promised. That was nearly a week away. Well, the course of Jan's life would have been mapped out long before that time. Long before that time it would be necessary to decide what would be best for Dora, too. Jan wished she could tell her little sister her plans, but it seemed better to wait. Dora would be overjoyed when she learned of the step Jan had now determined to take.

As for Jan, herself, what did her happiness matter? Dr. Curtis had said that she had it in her power to make him happy. She had told him not long ago, and meant it, that she wished there was some way she could show her gratitude for all he had done for Dora. Her way seemed clear enough now. She would be doing the best thing for everybody by accepting Brad's proposal. She would make him a good wife, too: respect, admiration, real liking— she felt all of them for Doctor Curtis. Surely that was enough on which to start a successful marriage. Besides, hadn't she heard often that love was a matter of propinquity? That many a girl who married a man merely liking him, actually grew to love him sincerely? It shouldn't be difficult to fall in love with Brad, she assured herself. All she needed was a little time to forget Tony.

It would be different. Jan's had had the right effect on Tony. But, as it was, she could bring him nothing but disaster. With her out of his life he would find some other girl—someone to whom he could be just Tony Williams, without any of this pathetic effort toward munificence.

Jan lingered at the hospital with Dora as long as she could. Dora was looking forward to Christmas as a child might. She wondered if that "nice Tony Williams" really meant to give her a present. "Oh, I'm sure he does!" Jan exclaimed. And she hoped that in spite of what happened Tony would not forget her little sister.

"I'll bet that he's paging Santa Claus this minute," she told her with conviction.

They had agreed that it would be best for Jan to bring over to the hospital all the wrapped-up presents from the hotel. Jan would be very busy on Christmas eve with Mr. Deverest's party and would not have time to come to the hospital. Dora promised solemnly that she would not open a single present until Christmas day, and Jan listened, her heart a little heavy at the thought that Dora would have to spend this Christmas day alone. But that's the way it would have to be. Dora would be happy enough when she knew!

Jan had never seen a day race by so fast. At the hospital she stowed Dora's gifts away in th dresser drawer while Dora looke on delightedly, trying to gue from the shapes of the packag what each one held. When it cam time for Jan to go she clung t Dora a little and then, because s would have burst into tears if s waited another minute, she jum ed to her feet and ran out of t door.

Why the Weather!

By Major A. H. Thiessen
Science Service Meteorologist

Snowfall and temperature!. We often hear people say, 'It is too cold to snow." They are right or partly so; it is too cold to snow heavily, at any rate. It is not only true that snowfalls are lighter in colder than in warmer winter weather, but also that the yearly amounts are lightest in the coldest parts of the world, like Siberia and the polar regions. In these regions a year's supply would not amount to ten inches of rain; there is not enough snow in northeastern Siberia to build snow huts. The reason for this is that the colder the air the less water vapor it contains; consequently, when condensation occurs only very light snowfalls result.

Up to now a haven of comparative security for Jews, Hungary seemed definitely headed for restrictive legislation barring thousands of Jews from certain businesses, professions and state employment.

Foreign consulates were expecting a storm of applications for visas from many of Hungary's estimated

SPECTACULAR FIRE SEEN IN PARIS

Hotel Des Invalides, Which Houses Military Offices Burned

Paris, Dec. 23—(AP)— Armed soldiers mounted guard today before the still-smouldering facade of the Hotel des Invalides —which houses military offices, the army museum and Napoleon's tomb — where firemen successfully smothered a spectacular blaze that threatened France's military plans.

General Maurice Gamelin's general staff aides, who work with their chief in the Invalides headquarters, reported after a hasty check that none of the army documents had been touched by the fire which last night destroyed a section of the roof and damaged a section about 60 yards long across the front of the old, massive structure.

Napoleon's tomb was saved from damage.

Many French military secrets were housed in the general staff headquarters in a wing of the Invalides, a 30-acre, gray stone structure that was once a soldier's home and remains a show place of Paris.

Hundreds of deputies left the parliament building a block away to watch the fire. Premier Edouard Daladier, who is also defence minister, was among them.

Thirty fire units poured water, which quickly froze into sheets of ice, on the building. The fire was believed caused by a snow-choked chimney.

Daladier Hurdles Third Test of Strength in a Day

WILL REFUSE DEMAND

Paris, Dec. 23 (AP)—Premier Daladier won a smashing victory today when the Chamber of Deputies, which almost overthrew him yesterday, approved his 1939 ordinary budget by an overwhelming majority.

In an early morning vote, the deputies passed the 66,128,402,780 franc ($1,735,537,440) budget, including the government's financial decree laws, by a count of 366 to 229.

This was Daladier's third test of strength since yesterday morning. First, he escaped overthrow by a margin of seven votes. On the second vote his majority rose to the comparative security of 57 votes and in the final test he won a majority of 137 by his determined stand.

Apparently by the simple method of letting the deputies frighten themselves by almost throwing his government out, the premier stood

Berlin Newspapers Attack Ickes After Apology is Refused by U. S.

By Rudolf Josten
Associated Press Foreign Staff

Berlin, Dec. 23. — (AP)—Two authoritative newspapers used the terms "rupture" and "abrogation of German-American relations' today in articles attacking Harold Ickes, United States Secretary of the interior.

But otherwise a German demand for an official apology from the Acting Secretary of State, Sumner Welles for Mr. Ickes' denunciation of Germany's treatment of the Jews and Mr. Welles' strongly-worded rejection of the request were not made public.

A government spokesman indicated an official statement could be expected soon and one official said the incident "evidently has become a serious affair". He added it would be premature to venture a forecast of Germany's reaction.

Hitler's Paper Criticizes

Chancellor Hitler's newspaper, Voelkischer Beobachter, printed a picture of Mr. Ickes with this caption: "H. L. Ickes, 64-year-old Secretary of the Interior of the United States, who through Anti-German intrigues wants incurably to poison America's relations with Germany and drive developments toward a rupture. We have exposed his machinations. That this darling of Judah is of German descent we record with feelings fit for Ickes."

Field Marshal Herman Goering's newspaper, the National Zeitung of Essen, cited the Coster-Musica drug firm case and said:

"What has Ickes got to say? Apparently nothing—absolutely nothing. He is also responsible for scandalous happenings in the United States, which again was proved by the Coster case because he failed to take decisive steps to combat crime.

Hate-Inspired Speeches

"He rather prefers to deliver hate-inspired speeches against Germany. In the nastiest terms, he who hardly has a spotless shirt himself, boldly attacked the German head of State and on this occasion plainly expressed a desire for the abrogation of German-American relations."

(Mr. Ickes, speaking Sunday before the Cleveland Zionist Society, said in part:—

("It is not fair to the middle ages to compare present-day European dictatorships with that period. To seek a true comparison it is necessary to go back into that period of history when man was unlettered, benighted and bestial.

". . . .How can any American who calls himself a Christian or who pretends to believe in the enlightened principles that constitute the warp and woof of our American land, accept a decoration at the hand of a brutal dictator who, with that same hand, is robbing and torturing thousands of human beings? . . . .

"Perhaps Henry Ford and Colonel Charles A. Lindbergh (who received German decorations) will be willing to answer these questions. . . . . .")

FIVE MAN BOARD WILL CONSIDER NEW HIGHWAY

Prime Minister King Announces Names of New Commission

HARMONY REACHED

Ottawa, Dec. 23—(CP)— After officially recognizing the Italian conquest of Ethiopia and appointing a five-man commission to consider the proposal to construct a highway through British Columbia from the international border to Alaska, federal cabinet ministers prepared today for the Christmas holidays. Many of them will leave Ottawa for several days.

Following the third and last cabinet council of the week, Prime Minister Mackenzie King told a press conference that the Canadian Government has requested the British ambassador in Rome to notify the Italian Government that Canada recognizes the King of Italy as Emperor of Ethiopia.

Canada thus followed the action of the United Kingdom and several other countries in recognizing the conquest. The League of Nations Council left it up to the member countries to make their own decisions.

Settler Leaves Hospital Dies Travelling Home

Harty, Ont., Dec. 23 (CP)—It won't be a Merry Christmas for the family of Lorenzo Tremblay, 40, a settler in this Northern Ontario town sixty miles northwest of Cochrane.

Tremblay left hospital to come home for Christmas. He arrived on a dog sled, and his family rolled back the blankets. Their Christmas greetings faded to a stricken silence. Tremblay was dead.

He had been in hospital at Hearst, 80 miles west of here, and returned to Harty Station by train Wednesday. A neighbor met him with a dog team to take him the five miles to his home. Tremblay, who had a serious heart condition, was rolled in blankets and they started the long mush through the woods.

No word was spoken on the journey, for the neighbor was mushing the team, and Tremblay was rolled in the heavy blankets.

Magistrate E. R. Tucker, chief coroner for the district, said today death resulted from a heart seizure.

6 FLYING BOATS READY TO CROSS OCEAN IN SPRING

'John Citizen' May be Able to Buy Ticket Early in 1939

PUSH PLANS FORWARD

Survey Trips May Also be Made from U. S. Ports to Mediterranean

By DEVON FRANCIS

New York, Dec. 23 (AP)—After two summer seasons of "survey" flying, it begins to look as though John Citizen will be able to buy an airline ticket to Europe next spring.

Great Britain has advised the United States that six flying boats are ready for scheduled service between the old and new worlds. At least one of a crop of six big "clippers", able to accommodate 40 persons on a trans-Atlantic hop, will be ready in the United States.

Germany, France and Italy have applied for permission to institute service by air to the United States, but Great Britain is the only country with which the United States has a workable reciprocal agreement.

Phases To Be Worked Out.

The civil aeronautics authority said yesterday that certain technical aspects of the service which Britain will render through Imperial Airways remained to be worked out. But both Imperial and Pan American Airways, the United States trans-oceanic air transport company, are going ahead with plans to inaugurate regular shuttle services between the two continents in 1939.

Another United States company, American Export Airlines, proposes to conduct survey flights between New York and Mediterranean ports in the spring.

'Ownership' of Air.

The necessity for government permission to use harbor facilities here and abroad starts from the Warsaw convention signed after the Great War by which it was recognized that each nation "owned" the air above its borders. Though the United States did not subscribe to the Warsaw convention, it did sign a similar instrument at Havana applying to the Americas.

What additional countries will be permitted to use American harbors for their airliners is problematical. Up to now the principle of matching flight for flight—one by an American company for every trip by a foreign airline—has been applied in planning transatlantic traffic.

The C.A.A., however, is understood to be working out a system whereby a foreign airline will be permitted flights in proportion to the percentage of boat travel which its flag originates.

Little Girl Holds up Departure of Liner

Belfast, Northern Ireland, Dec. 23.—(CP Cable) — Seven-year-old Irene McCullough, daughter of Frank McCullough of Regina, Sask., held up the mail-laden liner Duchess of Atholl for an hour here today.

Officers, stewardesses and passengers tried every means to get her to join her grandfather, who was waiting on the pier to take her to his Belfast home for Christmas. Finally she gave in on the condition that her "ocean Auntie"—a stewardess—went too.

The stewardess later stole back while relatives held Irene's attention and the liner proceeded on its voyage to Greenock and Liverpool.

Legless Girl Masters Art of Dancing

London, Dec. 23.—(AP)—England's happiest "Lambeth Walk" dancer this Christmas will be an 18-year old girl who was born legless, but who has mastered use of her artificial legs after eighteen months of training.

Reginald Broomhead, honorary surgeon of Leeds infirmary, relates the plucky story of the unnamed girl's fight against her affliction in the British medical journal. He said Dr. H. R. Moxon of Queen Mary's hospital, Roehampton, fitted the girl with artificial legs. She previously had used her hands to walk.

After arduous training the girl learned to walk unassisted and to climb stairs. A months ago she began to take dancing lessons.

Yuletide Briefs

Toronto, Dec. 23 (CP)—You won't find the telephone number of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph R. Christmas in the directory. They said today "it's fun" being Mr. and Mrs. Christmas and its helps business—Joseph is a druggist—but because of people 'phoning to ask "silly things" they've had their number delisted.

Stratford, Ont., Dec. 23 (CP)—Santa Claus got this request while performing his duties in a downtown store: "Dear Nickie—please bring me a nice blond, about 23 years old, with right ideas. If you do, I'll leave a real good snootful of giggle juice out for you.—Your pal, Willyum."

Hamilton, Ont., Dec. 23 (CP) — Even the dogs in Hamilton will have a Merry Christmas this year. Poundkeeper G. F. House says no strays are being held over the festive season.

Vancouver, Dec. 23 (CP)—Say Merry Christmas to your postman, milkman or baker—but not with a "wee nip", says an appeal issued by the Women's Christian Temperance Union. The organization said a cup of coffee or a bowl of soup is a much better "Merry Christmas" than alcoholic beverages.

Vancouver, Dec. 23 (CP)—A woman telephoned the post office and explained: "I've just posted a $5 bill by mistake." Postal workers went through bags and bags of Christmas mail and—at the bottom of a pile—the bill was found and returned to the woman.

Vancouver, Dec. 23 (CP)—Extra policemen will patrol Vancouver's streets during Christmas Eve in the campaign against holiday traffic accidents. Chief W. W. Foster has issued a call to all motorists to drive with caution.

Victoria, Dec. 23 (CP)—British Columbia this month has shipped around 2,000,000 Christmas trees to all parts of the continent. Last year, 1,725,000 trees were exported.

Paducah, Ky., Dec. 23 (AP) — Magistrate Jesse Copeland has announced his "closed season" on debtors again. Each year at Christmas time he instructs court aides not to serve garnishment papers during the holiday period. "If a creditor can't wait until after Christmas, he needn't bring his business to this court," he decreed. "I'd be sad if I felt I'd contributed to unhappiness during Christmas season."

Rand, Colo., Dec. 23 (AP)—Miss Dorothy Mason, who teaches at the Muddy Pass school just 42 miles from here, travelled 450 miles to spend Christmas with her parents in Rand. There are no direct roads, and friends dissuaded Miss Mason from attempting the straight-way trip on skis.

Salisbury, M., Dec. 23 (AP)—This Maryland community has sent its annual Christmas greeting to Salisbury, England. "A very Merry Christmas, a most happy New Year to everybody in Salisbury, England, from everybody in Salisbury, Maryland, U.S.A.", Mayor Arthur Boyce cabled the English city's Lord Mayor. Friendship between the towns started in 1932 when the Lord Mayor came over to Maryland Salisbury's bicentennial.

Toronto, Dec. 23 (CP)—Officials of one motor-car firm here says Christmas business this year is "wonderful." One man purchased three expensive automobiles as gifts to his family. Then there was the man who walked into a lingerie store and spent $700 on gifts for his wife.

Grimsby, Ont., Dec. 23 (CP)—Grimsby residents, with Santa Claus having difficulty collecting his Yuletide requests, want some mail boxes set up around town. At present there are only two places to post mail—the post office and railway station.

Santa Claus Wants Straight Man's Job in Comedy Act on Christmas

Chicago, Dec. 23 (AP)—All Santa Claus wants for Christmas is a straight man's job in a comedy act.

The white whiskered gentleman in the red suit at a loop department store confided this today. For several weeks he has been interviewing 800 little visitors daily, but the Q's and A's change but little.

"What's the most satisfying thing about the Santa Claus business?" he asked, and answered: "The utter faith of childhood. And the biggest problem? To avoid shattering a child's faith.

"This morning a little girl confided she wanted an electric train. Her clothes told me she'd be lucky to get an orange. What to do? The Santa Claus gospel says in a case like that to be heartily indefinite.

"Most youngsters are so pleased with whatever they get that they have forgotten what they asked for anyway.

"An astonishing number of tots order baby brothers and sisters. We make no definite commitments. We say, 'Well, well, we'll talk it over with mother and daddy, and if you are good to Santa he'll be good to you.'

"The frightened toddlers must be soothed; the skeptical reassured; you must never be surprised. A three year old asked for boxing gloves today and a 12-year-old boy wanted a doll and a doll buggy for himself, not his sister.

"I've got a pocket full of street plans, drawn by youngsters so I won't miss their houses. I've got notes telling of snack or a bottle of beer in the ice box. Any number of tykes plan to sleep on the divan instead of their cribs so they can catch me at work."

Night of Anxiety Follows When Norwegian Boat Springs Leak and Lists

American Boat Stood by All Night Waiting for Lull in Storm

LADEN WITH OIL

Two Women Aboard and First to be Taken Off

New York, Dec. 23 (AP)—Twenty persons, including two women, were rescued from the disabled Norwegian freighter Smaragd in the gale-swept Atlantic 600 miles southeast of New York today by the American freighter Schodack.

Wireless reports to Radio Marine Corporation said the rescue was completed at 10.48 a.m. EST, following a night of anxiety during which the Schodack stood by waiting for a lull in the weather.

A message from Captain Clifton Smith of the Schodack said: "All hands, including skipper of Smaragd, safely taken from disabled vessel."

The Smaragd, out of Norfolk for Fort William Scotland laden with oil in cases, sprang a leak and called for help. The Schodack, carrying general cargo between North Atlantic ports and France, immediately went to her aid.

Stood By All Night.

After standing by during the night, Captain Smith reported at 6.33 a.m.: "Now preparing to get to S.S. Smaragd with boat. Smaragd still afloat as daylight is breaking. Smaragd has two women aboard."

The next news received was at 9.50 a.m., when Skipper Smith reported that seven persons had been safely transferred from the Smaragd to the Schodack and that preparations were underway for removal of the others.

The Smaragd was leaking badly forward and listing, he said. Northwest gales were blowing, making rescue attempts difficult.

The Smaragd, a vessel of 1,181 gross tons, was built in 1911. She is 225 feet long and once was named the Elizabeth Cuneo.

Students Protest Magazine Display

Quebec, Dec. 23 (CP)—Charged with causing a disturbance as a result of a student demonstration against the newstand sale of two picture magazines, Clement Thivierge, 20-year-old president of the graduating class of Quebec Lower Seminary, pleaded not guilty in Recorders' Court today.

After classes yesterday more than 100 seminary students swarmed into two neighboring cigar stores demanding removal from the display stands of the latest issues of the two magazines. Thivierge was arrested when the group of students refused a policeman's order to break up.

A Seminary Priest accompanied Thivierge when he made his court appearance, when the accused was remanded until Dec. 30. Scores of students filled the courtroom.

SANTA WALKS INTO JAIL AND OUT AGAIN

Green Bay, Wis., Dec. 23 (AP)—Santa Claus walked right into the Brown County jail. What's more important, after a while he walked out again. The big blue eyes of Marlene Kellner, four-year-old daughter of Sheriff and Mrs. Clifford Kellner, popped wide open. But the prisoners—they just laughed and said nothing. They knew that after Santa visited one of his friends at the pokey, he had to go back to work at the department store.

NEW TREATMENT HELPS HEARING, CONTROLS OZOENA

Drs. Collip, Mortimer and Wright Make Discovery

TESTS ON HEARING

Montreal, Dec. 23 (CP)—Research work by three Montreal physicians has established that injections of sex hormones improve the hearing and effectively control ozoena, a nasal disease considered incurable for more than 2,000 years, it was announced today.

It was emphasized that no claim is being made that a new "cure for deafness" has been discovered, but the future possibilities of the discovery are considered of such importance a soundproof room has been constructed at Montreal General Hospital for more exacting experiments. McGill University has cooperated in building the room and in installing specially-designed apparatus for more accurate examinations.

Discovery Very Important.

Physicians state the discovery here is comparable in importance with any medical research work in Canada in the past ten years. Preliminary experiments at McGill University on monkeys showed injection of sex hormones exercised a specific effect on the part of the nose affected by ozoena, an obnoxious disease in which the lining of the nose wastes away. Since it was first mentioned by Aristotle in the days of ancient Greece the disease has been considered incurable.

CHRISTMAS PRESENTS RAIN FROM SKY

Helena, Mont., Dec. 23 (AP) — Christmas presents rained from the sky near Helena—but the finders gave them back. Investigation disclosed a compartment door of a westbound Northwest Airlines plane had come open, dropping a package near one farmer's door step, draping one mail pouch over a telephone line and depositing another in a clump of weeds. Assistant postmaster Fred Mayer said today all the lost mail was recovered.

SWITCH SHANTY IS DAMAGED

Fire, originating from overheated stove pipes, caused considerable damage to a new switch and tool-shack in the Canadian National Railway yards early last night. Fire squads were forced to make a hole in the roof in order to extinguish the flames.

YOUTH NEEDS NEW TIRE FOR CHRISTMAS

What one local youth will need most of all as a Christmas present this year is a new tire for his bicycle, which is being used by him for grocery deliveries.

The tire was a bit soft on the bike this morning and the youth rode into a downtown gasoline service station where free air could be had for those who helped themselves.

It may have been a bit of carelessness on the part of the owner, or the pressure may have been higher than rated on the self-setting dial. Whatever the cause, after what appeared to be just a preliminary inflation of the tire, it burst with a crack resembling that of a revolver shot, spraying ribbons of rubber and air into the owner's startled face.

Ruefully he gazed at the damage, then grasping the wheel walked slowly away.

OFFICE HOURS AT THE POST OFFICE

Although Monday, Dec. 26th has been declared a statutory holiday the Post Office will be open for business at regular hours.

All wickets will be open from 8.00 a.m. to twelve noon. The public lobby will be open from 6.30 a.m. until 6.00 p.m. Parcel Post special delivery, and air-mail service will be given as usual while all mails will be despatched and received in the customary manner.

DESERONTO GOES GAY WITH COLORED LIGHTS

Emulating the example of other places where holiday brilliance has been added to the shopping district by the use of electric lights strung across the streets, the Town of Deseronto this year has also gone gay with Christmas light and color. Members of the Chamber of Commerce of the town have brightened it up with a number of evergreen trees and colored lights placed at strategic locations along the main street.

MARKET FOR TREES REACHES NEW LOW

With an overabundant supply of Christmas trees noted, the market for trees fell sharply in the city yesterday and today to what is expected to be the season's lowest level. This morning youthful salesmen of the evergreens were making the rounds of the residential sections offering their wares, full length, well boughed trees, at prices of from 25 to 50 cents. This latter price appeared to be top price for the best of the trees displayed.

CITY HALL EMPLOYEES TO WORK TUESDAY

Tuesday will not be observed as an official holiday in the city, even though a number of owners will keep their places of business closed on that day, it was generally understood in the city this morning.

City Hall will resume work on Tuesday morning after Monday's full holiday; all departments will be open, it was announced by Mayor Bone.

"While I am in full sympathy with the idea of Boxing Day as a holiday when Christmas Day falls on any day in the middle of the week, in this case it appears to be too much of a curtailment of civic services if the city hall were to remain closed," stated Mayor Bone.

"This year we will have the full holiday after Christmas day which falls on Sunday, on Monday. That should give residents and city employees full time to recover in time for work on Tuesday."

POLICE COURT

In keeping with the current International complications in Europe five men of foreign extraction appeared in local police court before E. J. Butler K.C., today as the result of an alleged assault, which took place in Point Anne some weeks ago resulting in bodily injuries to Joseph Chaykoski, who preferred charges of assault against four residents of Point Anne.

The four men to appear in preliminary investigation were William Yosepenko, Samuel Gurniack, Robert Mulick and John Germanovich. The accused quartette pleaded not guilty through their attorney Charles A. Payne K.C., and following the submission of lengthy testimony His Worship enlarged the matter for judgment until the 29th instant, intimating he would at that time commit the accused men for trial.

Chaykoski stated he went to the home of Yosepenko, seeking Sam Gurniack. "I wanted to buy some moonshine," stated the witness.

"Had you become drunk on moonshine?" asked Crown Attorney B.C. Donnan K.C., in bringing out the evidence.

"Yes and when I went there they threw me into the house," replied Chaykoski.

"That's queer, usually a person gets thrown out of a place when drinking," retorted Mr. Donnan. In cross examination Chaykoski admitted the assault had been a general fight and he was not desired on Yosepenko's premises. All four of the accused men stated they were indulging in "a party" when Chaykoski put his fist through a window in Yosepenko's home, which commenced the altercations. Dr. J. J. Robertson told of the condition of Chaykoski following the alleged beating up he received while County Constable B. Bennett testified as to his investigations following the assault.

"I submit there was no aggravated assault here. It was a quiet on Yosepenko's premises and com- on Yosepenkos premises and commenced the trouble. Apparently Chaykoski just took on too many at one time," held Mr. Payne.

"Upon Dr. Robertson's evidence of Chaykoski's condition alone, I may have to commit these men for trial, but I will enlarge the matter until the 29th for judgment. Personally I think conditions in Point Anne are serious regarding these matters," concluded His Worship.

Kenneth Flindall, Wooler, appeared on a charge of criminal negligence, arising out of a motor accident which occurred a fortnight ago resulting in the death of Mrs. Mary McDonald of Toronto. The case was enlarged until January 20th. Flindall being admitted to bail of $2,000.00.

"I intend to amend the charge against this man when it finally does come up," warned Crown Attorney Donnan addressing his remarks to Mr. Payne, who represented the accused in this case also.

Four inebriates, including a woman, appeared on charge of intoxication, all cases being enlarged for one week.

Police Blotter

The pilfering of milk from local residences is again reported active in Belleville. Today a John St resident reported a repetition of this type of petty thieving. "They not only stole our milk but a small bottle of cream in the bargain," stated the irritated citizen.

Local police reiterated their warnings relative to Christmas shoppers securing their motor cars laden with parcels. "The best plan to halt the stealing of parcels from parked cars is to lock them while shopping," stated police officials today in the face of a continuance of such practices.

A market vendor was warned to discontinue the practice of offering less than a quarter of a carcass of meat for sale on the market square yesterday, contrary to the city ordinances.

John Muir, transient, was arrested on Pinnacle Street yesterday, on a charge of intoxication. Today the accused was sentenced to serve 14 days in the common jail when he pleaded guilty before Magistrate E. J. Butler K.C. Muir left the court room under police escort, heard to be muttering something about "the Christmas season", which brought no replies, however.

Firemen Play Santa Claus, Fill Baskets for 150 Families

Distribution of Baskets Will Begin on Saturday Morning

FIREMEN'S THANKS

Members of the Belleville Fire Department bent their backs to a happy task today as they filled baskets that will bring Christmas cheer to upwards of one hundred and fifty families. About 700 children will be remembered.

Appreciation of the generous response of the public to their call for funds to finance the cause, was voiced today by Fire Chief William Lynch. "We owe an especial debt of gratitude to the Belleville Kiwanis Club," he said, "for their donation of one hundred dollars in cash to the fund. Band concerts, our annual Firemen's Ball, the Tag Day, the McCarthy Theatre, and other numerous sources have provided us with money and necessities that have enabled us to bring at least some semblance of Christmas cheer to these underprivileged families.

"Not only are we giving baskets but numerous children of the city will benefit by the generosity of Belleville citizens through their splendid donations of toys. The boys will be out bright and early tomorrow morning dispensing these gifts. Again the Belleville Fire Department say "We thank you."

Christmas Fare in Readiness For Inmates of Institutions

Careful Preparations Are Made for Annual Festival

CHRISTMAS MUSIC

Inmates of the various institutions of the city will not regard Christmas as just another day. Thanks to officials and staff members, sumptuous dinners will be provided, and a holiday atmosphere created that will bring at least some semblance of the great festival season spirit to those who will spend the holiday inside the walls of these institutions.

Roast [illegible], mashed potatoes, half a dozen different kinds of vegetables, dressing, mince pie, coffee and other good things will greet the inmates of the Hastings County Jail at noon on Christmas. Candies, nuts, oranges and other holiday delicacies will also be given to the inmates who number approximately thirty-five.

At County and City Homes

At the Hastings County Home, ninety-four aged inmates will sit down to a Christmas repast of roast goose and all the "trimmin's." Oranges, nuts and candies and a Christmas "bag" will round out the dinner. Inmates unable to attend the dining room where the dinner is being held, will have their meal served to them in their rooms.

A real old fashioned Christmas is planned for the seventeen inmates of the Belleville Home for the Aged on Dundas Street East. Turkey and all the "trimmin's" is being provided by a thoughtful Board, while presents will be distributed early on Christmas morning from a Christmas tree. Twelve men and five women will enjoy the seasonal festivities which will be supervised by Matron, Mrs. E. Palmer.

An additional seasonable touch will be given at ten o'clock in the morning when the Salvation Army Band with Major Alderman will provide Christmas music in the institutions. The band will also visit Belleville General Hospital where special seasonal music, carols, etc. will cheer the sick.

OBITUARY

MRS. MATILDA STAFFORD
(Consecon)

After an illness of one month's duration Mrs. Matilda Stafford passed away on Wednesday, Dec. 21, at the residence of her son-in-law, Mr. A. S. Burr, at Consecon, Prince Edward County.

The late Mrs. Stafford, who had reached the age of 85 years on Dec. 17th., was born at South Bay, Prince Edward County, her parents being the late Mr. and Mrs. John Wellbanks, Sr. For the past thirty five years she made her home in Consecon and was highly esteemed in the community. In religion she was a member of the United Church and when age and health permitted she took an active part in the work of the Women's Association.

Surviving her are one daughter, Mrs. Adam Burr, Consecon, and one son, Mr. Frank H. Stafford, Kitchener, Ont. Her husband passed away some years ago.

The funeral took place from her late residence this Friday afternoon, Dec. 23rd. The service in the home and at the graveside in Albury Cemetery was conducted by the Rev. H. Sanders.

The bearers were Messrs. P. R. Taylor, W. B. Losie, W. W. Ward, William Zufelt, W. A. Chase and Cecil Blakely.

JAMES HAMMOND
(Marmora)

After an illness of five weeks' duration James Hammond, late residence Marmora Township, passed away in the Belleville General Hospital early this Friday morning, Dec. 23rd.

The late Mr. Hammond was born 61 years ago at Ledvelles Corner, England, his parents being the late Mr. and Mrs. Gilbert Hammond. When he first came to Canada he resided for three years at Wellington in Prince Edward County, and for the past twenty-two years he made his home in Marmora township where he was engaged in farming. He was well known in the district and highly respected. In religion he was a member of the Church of England.

Surviving him are one son, Jas. Hammond of Deloro, and a half sister, Mrs. Warner, who resides in England.

The funeral announcement is made elsewhere in this paper.

JANE E. ROBERTS

Following an illness of lengthy duration, Jane E. Roberts, ninety-five year old inmate of the Hastings County Home passed away at that institution on Monday Dec. 19th.

The funeral took place from the Frankford Funeral Home on Wednesday, Dec. 21st., where the remains were transferred. Interment took place in Frankford Cemetery.

ALBERT EDWARD FRASER
(Montreal)

According to information received here early this afternoon, the death occurred yesterday in Montreal, of Albert Edward Fraser, a former resident of this city. The remains will arrive here by train early tomorrow afternoon for interment in Belleville Cemetery. The Belleville Burial Co., will conduct the body from the railroad station to the cemetery.

"Country Store" Program Staged

Patrons of the McCarthy Theatre were treated to a real rural atmosphere last night, when the "Country Store" program staged for the benefit of the Belleville Fire Department's Toy Fund provided a typical "store" production on the stage.

Nothing was forgotten to produce as near as possible the original rural sideroads grocery store. Vinegar kegs, antiquated horse collars, whiffletrees, pitchforks and other paraphernalia associated with the country store, were in evidence.

Genial Tommy Mason acted as master of ceremonies in his usual lively manner.

A feature of the affair was the hurried exit of the winner of the first prize. No sooner had she been awarded the order for the half-cord of wood than she disappeared through the exit before officials could ascertain her identity.

Other winners were: E. Hennessy, M. Monson, C. Sanford, A. Victor, K. Carson, R. Collins, N. Baker, P. Thomson, Mrs. B. Smith, M. Langton, Mrs. Tebworth, M. Westlake, B. Baxter, Ed. Clarke, Mrs. Culross, Miss A. License, Mrs. A. McGee, Arthur Rawson, Mr. Clement, Mrs. Potts.

A miniature toy automobile which was auctioned from the stage, provided a lot of merriment before it was finally "knocked down" to M. Dix, College Street.

New Wing At County Home Opened Shortly

Formal opening of the new wing to the Hastings County Home will take place early in January it is announced today.

Members of the County Council will attend the opening ceremonies which will be held during the January session of that body.

The new addition, a three-storey affair, will embody dormitories and sick-rooms, besides equipment for special services.

JAMES VARLEY DIES IN TORONTO

Undergoing Treatment for War Wounds at Time of Demise

James Varley, late residence 328 Bleecker Avenue, Belleville, passed away early this Friday morning at Christie Street Military Hospital, Toronto, where he was undergoing treatment for disability sustained while serving his country in France during the Great War.

The late James Varley, who was in his 44th. year, was born in Nottingham, England, his parents being the late Mr. and Mrs. Henry Varley. In the year 1912 he came to Canada and took up residence in Belleville. For some time he was engaged with the Canadian National Railways as yard clerk, and during the past eight years he was employed with the Stewart - Warner - Alemite Corporation here as clerk in charge of customs. In the performance of his duties he was efficient and reliable and was highly thought of by the management and by his fellow employees.

When the Great War commenced in 1914, James Varley immediately offered his services and went overseas with the 21st. Battalion from Belleville, early in 1915. In 1916 he was severely wounded in an engagement at Courcelette, near the Sugar Refinery on the Somme. Later in the same year he was invalided to Canada.

Made Many Friends

During the twenty-five years Mr. Varley resided in Belleville he made many friends and occupied a high place in the regard of all who knew him. He possessed a friendly manner and was willing at all times to give his support to the advancement of worthy causes. In religion he was a member of the Church of England and an active worker in Christ Church Parish. For some years and up to the time of his death, he was the popular and efficient superintendent of St. George's Sunday School, and served as a member of the Executive Council of the parish. Fraternally he was a member of The Belleville Lodge No. 123 A. F. & A. M., and the Army and Navy Veterans' Association in Canada, Unit No. 201.

The work of the Boy Scouts was of great interest to James Varley and he gave freely of his time and ability to this work.

For years and up until the time of his death he was Scout Master of Belleville Troup No. 3. With the boys of his own corps and with all scouts he was popular and respected. His enthusiasm and many fine traits of character were an example and inspiration to all Scouts.

In many worthy activities and by many close friends James Varley will be missed for a long time to come. The sincere sympathy of many friends will be extended to the family and relatives in their bereavement.

Surviving to mourn his loss are his widow, who prior to her marriage was Miss Kathleen Trump; one son, Robert, age seven years; two brothers, Mr. Henry Varley, Belleville, and Mr. Herbert Varley, Great Falls, Montana.

The funeral will take place from the Belleville Burial Company Funeral Home; the announcement is made elsewhere in this paper.

Toronto, Dec. 23—(CP)—Just as plans had been completed by comrades to make his Christmas one worth remembering, James Varley, of Belleville, a member of the 21st. Battalion during the Great War, who lived with a bullet lodged in his spine for 18 years, died today in Christie Street Hospital.

Arrangements had been made to have the room decorated with a Christmas tree and appropriate decorations, and of course a number of gifts, when word was received by his comrades in war and in peace.

At the latter part of the war a bullet entered Mr. Varley's body, passed through the abdomen and settled in the spine. The large intestine was pierced but the wound healed up. The bullet, however, fused three vertebrae. For some years he had been affected by a paralysis in the legs but nevertheless was able to work.

Causing Infection

In 1936, diagnosis showed that the bullet was causing an infection and the veteran's life was in danger. An operation was decided upon and Dr. G. M. Dale and Dr. D. E. Robertson, who was trapped in the Moose River Mine, performed the difficult operation. It was successful and for the first time Mr. Varley saw the bullet presented to him by an unknown German soldier. The doctors found that the bullet had broken the spine but this had healed. Only partially affected by paralysis, Mr. Varley returned to Belleville seven months after the operation.

He started to work but returned to the hospital with osteomyelitis of the spine. Everything possible was done by the hospital to return him to health, but he gradually became weaker as the days passed. He was given a number of blood transfusions.

Special Programs For Holiday Season

Special Christmas holiday programs are being arranged by the Belleville Y. M. C. A. to which the public are cordially invited, Secretary J. E. Shortt revealed today. "Never a dull moment" is to be the motto of the "Y" officials commencing Friday and continuing through until Jan. 3rd.

Special programs for Christmas and New Years, all of which will be of interest to the citizens in general are arranged. One of the features will be a gala New Years Eve' frolic during which games, fun, refreshments and a New Years message will be included as the "Y" rings out the old year and rings in the new.

Of special interest will be a weightlifting exhibition by Tommy Pedder, International weightlifting champion, to be held in the "Y" gymnasium on Wednesday Dec. 28th. The public is invited to this exhibition and no charge will be made.

All activities will be in full swing, the gymnasium, swimming pool, shower baths, recreation halls, bowling alleys and reading rooms, will be availalbe to visitors during this special week of gala events at the Belleville Y. M. C. A.

After the New Year registrations are being sought for a basketball house league and a volley ball league, while the January handball tournament will be of the elimination type, Mr. Shortt stated.

Christmas Concerts Delight Audiences at W. Huntingdon

West Huntingdon—It is holiday time in West Huntingdon. Only routine work is being done. The Christmas spirit is abroad every where. The children are entertaining the adults with various concerts.

The Sunshine Mission Band of St. Andrew's held a Christmas service in the church on Sunday afternoon. The program consisted of Christmas carols and Christmas readings. At the close of the meeting Mission Band life membership certificates were presented to Miss Lorna Wright and Miss Jean Thompson.

W.M.S. Of St. Andrew's

The W.M.S. of St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church met at hte home of Mr. and Mrs. John Wallace on Thursday, Dec. 15. Dinner was served at noon to over twenty ladies and the Huntingdon Township Council also spent the dinner hour there.

At two o'clock the president, Mrs. John Wallace, opened the meeting with a hymn, followed by the Lord's Prayer in unison. The Scripture lesson was read by Mrs. Tom Fleming, followed by prayer by Mrs. (Rev.) W. H. V. Walker. Mrs. W. Shaw gave a reading "The Joyful City". The roll was responded to by a verse of scripture with keyword joy. Special music was given by Mrs. W. Benson, Mrs. Gardner Welsh, Mrs. Harry Thompson and Miss Hilda Haggerty. A Christmas reading was given by Mrs. Sam Donnan, Mrs. Howard Ashley read a fine address on life membership work and Mrs. R. Haggerty presented Mrs. Alex McInroy with a life membership certificate for her faithful services during the past years. A hymn was sung. After the usual business period Mrs. Walker conducted the election of officers for 1939: Hon. Presidents, Mrs. Walker, Mrs. Harry Thompson; 1st Vice President, Mrs. John Wallace; 2nd Vice President, Mrs. Donald Haggerty; Secretary, Mrs. Sam Donnan; Ladies' Aid Treasurer, Mrs. Tom Fleming; W.M.S. Treasurer, Mrs. Henry Wallace; Pianist, Mrs. W. Shaw and Mrs. Gardner Welsh; Correspondence Secretary, Mrs. John McInroy; Press Secretaries, Mrs. Milton Shaw and Miss Hilda Haggerty; Sick Committee, Mrs. Wm. Shaw, Miss Bessie Fleming, Mrs. John Wright, Mrs. Morley Haggerty, Mrs. Donald Haggerty; Bale Secretary, Mrs. John Hassall; Home Helpers, Mrs. J. C. Sills, Mrs. John Wright, Mrs. Wm. Shaw; Glad Tidings Secretary, Mrs. Wm. Benson; Library Secretary, Miss Bessie Fleming; Mission Band Leader, Mrs. John Wallace.

Mrs. Henry Wallace gave the W. M. S. report and Mrs. Shaw the Ladies' Aid, both treasurers reporting a splendid year's work. Singing of a hymn and Mizpah Benediction closed the meeting.

Sunday Services in the Churches

All services on Sunday in the churches were very helpful. At the United Church Sunday School, Miss Mary Elliott, four year old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Clifford Elliott sang a solo "Away in a manger." At the church service Mrs. W. J. Fitchett gave a fine solo "The house by the side of the Road." Dr. Pedley and Mr. Harry Hulin of Stirling attended this service.

A pre-Christmas service was conducted by Rev. W. H. V. Walker at St. Andrew's in the afternoon. His sermon theme was "Peace on earth and good will toward man." Miss Annie Fleming gave as a solo "The Birthday of a King." Christmas carols and hymns were used in the service.

Miss Margaret Wright, principal of the Public School and her pupils gave a fine concert on Tuesday afternoon.

St. Andrew's Christmas Tree

St. Andrew's Sunday School held their annual Christmas entertainment on Tuesday evening. Rev. Walker was chairman and the following pupils gave recitations: Billie McInroy, Allan Wallace and Jean Haggerty. A dialogue, "The Christmas Gift" was also given. Bessie Fleming and Muriel Thompson gave a piano duet. Other numbers were: Solo by Maggie Haggerty; Duet by Shirley Fleming and Kathleen Dugan. At the close Santa Claus distributed the gifts.

Mr. and Mrs. Douglas Atkins of 2nd of Thurlow were Wednesday guests of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Fargey.

Mr. and Mrs. Foster Wilson and Mrs. Sandy McCurdy spent Wednesday with Mr. and Mrs. Melville Reid.

Mr. and Mrs. Alger Post and family were Friday evening guests of Mr. and Mrs. Sandy McCurdy.

Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Post, Bob and George were Sunday guests of Mr. and Mrs. W. Tuft of Zion's Hill.

Shannonville

Shannonville—A combined Christmas concert and farewell party was held in the Milltown Public School on Wednesday night. During the first part of the evening the pupils of the school presented their annual Christmas concert before a very large crowd of their parents and interested persons of the community. Following the concert a farewell party was held in honor of Miss Emily Berrie, Milltown public school teacher who resigned due to the serious illness of her mother. The profound sympathy of the community was ably expressed by Mr. Rovert Vesterfelt following which a beautiful present was given to Miss Berrie. Immediately preceding the presentation a presentation address was read by Mrs. ed Breadman.

The Christmas concert was as follows:

The concert opened with a chorus by the school, "Just be merry"; Recitation, Arthur Fry; Recitation, Lily Little; Dialogue, "Reading the news"; Recitation, Delmer Breadman; Song, Orpha and Marion Hill; Recitation, Jim Hinchey; Recitation, Percy Reid; Recitation, Margaret Kent; Song, June Stewart, Audrey Hill, Evelyn Reid, Anne Bennett; Recitation, Lloyd Hill; Recitation, Helen Reid; Song, Donald Reid, Bruce Brant, Michael Brant, Ralph Stewart; Recitation, Russell Bennett; ecitation, Daisy Ellen Kent; Dialogue, "The sick baby"; Recitation, Jack Bennett; Recitation, Avery Maracle; Dialogue, "Cousin Joshua"; Recitation, Audrey Hill. The concert closed with the school joining in singing "The jolly old fellow." Mr. Garnet Little acted as chairman for the program.

Immediately following the concert the chairs were cleared away and dancing was enjoyed until the early hours of the morning. At the midnight hour Miss Emily Berrie, Milltown school teacher was called to the front of the school where she was given a seat of honor at which time the following address was read by Mrs. Ted Breadman to which an appropriate reply was given by Miss Berrie. The address was as follows:

Dear Miss Berrie:

We, your friends and neighbors have gathered here tonight to express our sincere regret that you are leaving us, and especially under the existing circumstances.

It is the opinion of the whole section that you have been a splendid teacher, and a good friend to us during the four and a half years you have spent with us.

You will be greatly missed in our community, as we have always found you willing to participate in our activities.

We hereby beg you to accept this gift as a slight token of our esteem and friendship and with best wishes for much happiness in the future.

Signed on behalf of the section, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Vesterfelt, Garnet Little, Mr. and Mrs. Ted Breadman.

A few friends of Miss Margaret Kent were her guests on Wednesday afternoon on the occasion of her fourth birthday. At six o'clock a delightful supper was served by Mrs. Edward Kent. A birthday cake decorated with four candles held an honored spot in the centre of the table. Little Margaret was the recipient of many beautiful presents.

Geese and turkeys according to local poultry raisers are very much in demand this year and are selling at a good price. One local poultry man was besieged with orders last week so much so in fact that he did not have enough birds to meet the demand.

Foxboro

Foxboro—Rev. and Mrs. F. Horton of Fraserville and the Misses Doris and Freida of Belleville were recent callers in the village.

Mrs. J. F. Yorke is spending the week with her daughter in Stirling.

Mr. and Mrs. James Sills and Mr. George Sills of Salem called on Sunday afternoon on their aunt Mrs. C. Sills.

Mr. James Elliott left on Tuesday to spend the winter with his niece Mrs. Eldon Walt of Consecon.

Friends and neighbors are pleased to know that Mr. Harry Ketcheson was able to return home for Christmas from the Toronto Hospital.

On Wednesday afternoon at the school, a social time was spent and presents interchanged and Mrs. Wanda Sine was presented with a lovely tea-kettle by her pupils while Miss Milligan was presented with a beautiful radio lamp and box of handkerchiefs by the pupils of the senior room.

Following is the address:

Miss Muriel Milligan, Foxboro, Ont.,

Dear Teacher:

We have come again to the last school day in another year, and we are reminded of all the days of the year which you have spent in patient and kindly service to us. You are to see us, not only as teacher of the three R's but also, a willing helpful friend.

We wish to assure you that we do appreciate your efforts for us and ask you to accept this gift, as tangible evidence of our gratitude and love.

Signed on behalf of your pupils, Phyllis Dafoe, Doris Burd and Ruth Longwell.

Mrs. Harold Stewart and baby Carol returned home from the hospital on Friday last.

The scholars are busy practising for the annual Christmas entertainment.

Mr. Mel Barkley of Morrisburg spent a couple of days with his cousin Mrs. J. W. Daniels.

Eldorado

Eldorado—A very successful Christmas concert and play entitled "The Deacon Entangled" was well given by Cooper talent of the Cooper and Remington W. I., in the Orange Hall, Eldorado, on Monday evening, Dec. 19, under the auspices of Fox's Sunday School.

Ruperts and Bests school jointly sang two Christmas carols to open the program and a few remarks were given by the chairman Rev. S. B. Smith. Mrs. Arthur Parks of Cooper, introduced the characters of the play:

Deacon Penrose—Arthur Parks
Calvin Spangler, his nephew —Ross Greenley.
Rev. Dr. Sopher—James Diamond.
A strong supporter of foreign missions—Henry Baxter.
Sport Writers, Rex Rollins, Mr. Rafferty.
Policeman—Francis Taylor.

Mrs. Penrose—Mrs. J. Wood.
Ruth, her daughter—Fern Rollins
Georgia Sopher (Dr. Sopher's daughter)—Jean Rollins.
Katy, the maid—Phyllis Parks.
Newsboy—Ross Rollins.

This play was well given and the players deserve great credit for their performance.

Those taking part in program between acts were Harry Whyte, who sang "Stars of summer night" and "All through the night." Misses Strebe who gave two splendid piano duets and Misses Helen Tate and Marion Sandford who gave recitation. A vote of thanks was tendered to the players at the close and to the others who helped with the program.

Santa Claus appeared and distributed the presents and oranges.

Mrs. Wm. Blackburn won the prize given by Rev. Smith for guessing the moral of the play.

Springbrook

Springbrook—The weekly meeting of Springbrook Young People's League was held on Monday evening. The President, Bessie McMullen opened the meeting by singing favorite Christmas carols, which was followed by a reading "Why we celebrate Christmas." Reports of the various committees showed the year's standing. Report of the treasurer was given by Alma Nickle and Missions, Ross Bailey. A short outline of the year's work was presented by Lorne Bailey.

Roll call was well responded to "My Favorite Carol."

Carl Heath then took charge of the meeting with the following program: Hymn, followed by prayer by Wanda Bateman; Scripture reading by Mrs. Murney Mason; Hymn; Reading by Ross Bailey, followed by a short reading by Carl Heath. After singing another carol, the meeting was brought to a close by the Mizpah Benediction.

SCHOOLS ARE OUT

Christmas is near, schools are closed for the midwinter festival in which children figure in large measure. One day or two days or more would not do for the youngsters at this time. They celebrate before Christmas, then on Christmas Day, then enjoy the hospitalities of the season, wear or use their gifts, and swell the sounds of glee at this glad time, until the new year comes in and they see it duly installed. Then they can go back to work at their lessons, to look forward over the tops of the deep winter months until Easter brings springtime.

Those in charge of instruction of the young in Belleville, did their utmost this year to make the last of the term days of inspiration and joy for the children. Carol singing by the scholars, solos, recitations and every manner of entertainment in which the boys and girls can be ushered through the door into the great mystery of Christmas have delighted them. The scholars naturally are apt at this time, because they love everything that has expansiveness and Christmas has this spirit in abundance. They have learned in these closing exercises the need of helping others. It is a fine time to impress consideration of persons less fortunate. Back of all these exercises appears the true source of this joy, the birthday of the Child whose infinite interest in the life of individual and society has moulded the course of history as no other has done.

Into the great world these little scholars, have gone out as messengers of the spirit of Christmas. In and out of the homes they come and go inspired by the season.

That their hopes will find realization, in the case of everyone of them is the prayer of all so that when Christmas dawns, these boys and girls will be full of joy.

EMPIRE MIGRATION PROBLEM

The beginning of what may some day bring a large migration into each of the British Dominions is suggested in a motion approved on Wednesday in the British Commons to encourage migration to the Dominions. Dominion and Colonial Secretary MacDonald announced that the matter would be taken up with the Dominion along the lines of financially assisted Empire settlement scheme in the interests of Empire security.

There has been for some time a plan before the public under the sponsorship of Sir Henry Page to send out 10,000 British families to British Columbia through a company financed by the British Government. Nothing could be done until the Canadian Government is committed to keep its contribution in the cost of migration plans to one half, MacDonald pointed out.

According to the British resolution, resumption of population movements within the Empire in the near future is desirable, and the question of cooperation by the British and Dominions Governments to carry out such a scheme was raised.

The point was made by Mr. MacDonald that it was felt the Empire Dominions must be populated not only for economic reasons but for augmenting the strength of Britain herself, or in other words as "reinforcements to the moral influence which the British people exert in the affairs of mankind." So the development of the Dominions comes from the highest motive for the British are the foremost champions of liberty. MacDonald looked forward to the day when millions of additional people can get a livelihood in the Dominions. He did point out that no Dominion could support extra millions simply ..by expansion of agricultural industries. Empire settlement was only possible through complementary development of secondary interestts in the Dominion, in his opinion.

There are as Canadians see it, two forces working for the development of the Dominions. In recent months there has been enough happen to show that the vast open spaces of the Dominions are attracting notice. Then too there is the question of foreign immigration which tends to lower the percentage of people of British origin.

The Secretary for the Dominion said that he was not opposed to foreign immigration but "if the British people do not develop these countries, if we do not create conditions which will allow settlement of a much larger population, then we will open ourselves to the reproach that we are sitting on a vast area of the earth's surface and preventing it being put to beneficial use."

Here is a gigantic-problem — probably the greatest problem outside of defence which has to be settled. Dominions, it would seem to be the general opinion, cannot continue to linger along with sparse populations and not run the risk of drawing down upon themselves the envy of other races. Maintenance or support of new migrations on a large scale is the crux of the problem. That would have to be worked out very carefully. The unemployment situation, MacDonald said, must not be aggravated by migration.

Britain's big task is at present to maintain and defend democratic liberty, to be the leader of democracy. To that end she must assure that British races must be predominant within the Empire with British political ideals paramount. Britain is peculiarly blessed in the Dominions but a vast Empire means a vast responsibility to humanity. In these days the world sees other nations with political ideals other than democratic, looking for worlds to dominate.

Nothing is however to be done on the scheme without the fullest cooperation of the Dominions. This gives time for consideration and thorough discussion before action will be taken. It seems as if little or nothing can be done unless it is possible for such newcomers to find a livelihood and not to add too greatly to the economic strain.

RUBBER CHECKS, THE BOUNCING KIND THAT NEVER WERE ANY GOOD, Mexican Pesos, worth about fifty cents a bale but which have been accepted in Belleville at five dollars per five pesos, all kinds of clever con games may be attempted in the rush which accompanies last minute Christmas shopping. Good looking, good natured strangers, with winning ways and a smile that is childlike and bland, generally choose a holiday like pre-Christmas to ply their nefarious games of separating honest business men from good money, easy money, without returning value therefore. Banks close early Saturday afternoon and reopen the following Tuesday or Wednesday which makes a long getaway while the checks are being cleared or returned. Extra vigilance is required during the last moments of the Christmas rush, with augmented staffs, inexperienced clerks, and everybody groggy with trying to do a week's business in a few hours. ANTHONY EDEN'S VISIT TO THE UNITED STATES has been productive of much good in an educational way, enabling our cousins to the south to meet and hear a real Britisher of the diplomatic set, one of those empire makers to whom big things seem small in comparison, one of the breed which has built the empire on which the sun never sets. Anthony Eden told the National Association of Manufacturers of the United States, truly a representative body of constructive business men:

"We and you stand for democracy.... We know that we must champion our ideals....I speak now as a citizen of Great Britain—We know that this endeavor will once again tax our strength and our endurance to the uttermost. For all of this in spirit we are preparing. Nor, I beg you to believe, are we calling out for help to others, nor seeking to lure others TO PULL OUR CHESTNUTS FROM THE FIRE....... National animosities have not been oxercised. On the contrary, they seem to be intensified under the banner of rival ideologies. Nor has the way of peace been made plain."

New York and Washington reporters had a busy time seeking material for personal sketches of Mr. and Mrs. Eden. They noted, among other things, that after speaking to 4,100 people at the banquet Mr. Eden breakfasted on orange juice and scrambled eggs, went sightseeing, chinned for forty-five minutes with New York Citiy's libertarian Mayor LaGuardia. Mrs. Eden, meantime, danced until 2 a.m., lunched at swank "21", impressed U.S. women with the "quiet perfection" of her clothes, admired and bought U.S. stockings. Now there is talk of Anthony Eden being the next British Ambassador to the United States. All of which would seem to indicate that Anthony Eden and Mrs. Eden made a No. 1 hit with Uncle Sam and the Missus...

AT THIS SEASON

Loneliness at this season must seem unbearable.

It is on this principle that churches and philanthropic organizations are now at work, that there be no lonely ones. These agencies have been at work in the effort to locate all who are in need, so that this time may find them remembered with the good things of the time.

These are busy days of preparation for people's own fireside and their friends' firesides but also for the homes in which there would be little glimmer and radiance were it not for those who remember.

Individuals have yet their chance to help these organizations prepare for Christmas.

50 YEARS AGO

Dec. 23rd, 1888.

Last evening about six o'clock some person stole a jacket which was on display in front of Mr. Stephen Eustace's store.

The market this morning was the largest of the season; the butter market was so filled that it was almost impossible to get about. Following are some of the prices: Turkeys, all the way from $1.00 to $2.00; geese, 50 cents to 75 cents each; ducks, 60 cents per pair; chickens, 35 cents to 50 cents per pair; butter, 20 cents to 24 cents per pound; eggs, 20 cents per dozen.

The meeting of the stockholders of the Bay of Quinte Bridge Company, which was held in the offices of Messrs. Bell & Biggar for the purpose of organization, was well attended, about twenty-five persons being present. Mr. Thomas Ritchie was appointed chairman and Mr. E. Donald acted as secretary. Col. Brown, Mr. Geo. Tickell and Mr. Geo. Dickson made short addresses relative to the advantage of a bridge across the bay. Messrs. L. W. Yeomans and J. Lyons Biggar were appointed scrutineers and the election of directors resulted as follows: Messrs. Thos. Ritchie, U. E. Thompson, James Brown, H. Corby, C. P. Smith, Geo. S. Tickell and Alex. Sutherland. The plans and specifications have been promised for the 26th inst. Tenders for the construction of the bridge will likely be called for shortly after the plans have been received.

THE WEEK BEFORE CHRISTMAS

She's suddenly meek
And strangely mild,
A dazzling sweet,
Decorous Child—
A little darling,
A love, a lamb
Who never gets into
Her mother's jam;
Who almost slips,
But who catches herself
When the cookies are left
On the bottom shelf;
And who eats her carrots
And squash and peas,
And murmurs "Thank you!"
And chirrups "Please!"

Bravely she hides
Her bleak dismay
At the angel role
In the Christmas play;
And she's almost painful-
Ly unaware
Of a certain cupboard
Beneath the stair
Where mysterious boxes
Are set apart—
She's so achingly good
That it breaks your heart....
But I quail to think
How the wide-eyed dear
Will make up for it
The rest of the year!

That Body of Yours

By James W. Barton M.D.

Fewer Operations Now For Ulcers of Stomach and Intestine

There isn't any question but that surgery provides a short cut in curing many ailments. It saves a great amount of time, worry, and expence in gall bladder infection, goitre, cancer anywhere in the body, infected tonsils and other conditions. Treatment by medicine, Xray, radium, and other methods is often too slow for both patient and physician and may be a waste of valuable time.

There is one ailment, however, in which surgery is not used as much as formerly because it has been found that medical treatment faithfully carried out brings more satisfactory results. This is ulcer of the stomach and of the first part of small intestine (duodenum). Peptic ulcer is the name given it.

Dr. C. W. Cutler, Jr., New York, in Annals of Surgery, Philadelphia, states that from 1924 to 1927, 262 patients had been operated upon for chronic peptic ulcer at the Roosevelt Hospital, New York. "It is of interest to observe that year by year the number of operations performed for peptic ulcer has become less despite the fact that the number of cases admitted to hospital has not decreased. In 1926 there were forty-six such operations, in 1936 but twelve. This change has been due to the fact that it is now recognized that careful medical management is capable of relieving or controlling a considerable number of these cases. Surgery is used only when medical treatment has failed or dangerous complications have arisen".

As showing how peptic ulcer is now a case for medical, not surgical treatment Dr. Cutler says

"Not only is no patient not operated on at the Roosevelt Hospital without having a thorough, controlled, and efficient course of medical management, but each patient for whom operation is proposed must only when medical treatment has be passed by a 'court' consisting of a physician, surgeon, stomach and intestine specialist, and an Xray specialist. Even the type of operation and the reason therefore is determined by certain guiding principles".

It is now realized that certain types of individuals — nervous, slender, emotional—are most likely to 'grow' ulcers. By teaching them how and what to eat, how to react how to acquire poise or calmness, the formation of peptic ulcers can often be prevented.

TRENDS IN TOYS

Toys, it seems to me, are most popular nowadays when they reproduce as closely and accurately as possible the things, mechanical and otherwise, that are prominent features of everyday life. Toyland is the grown-up world in miniature.

Children learn a great deal from their toys. They become young mechanics, electricians, carpenters, theatrical producers, cameramen and film experts, artists, wireless enthusiasts and many other things, according to their temperaments, a long time before they take their place in the adult world.

What are the outstanding favorite toys? That is not an easy question to answer. Broadly, children are keen on all kinds of toys which fall into several groups. Perhaps the best way of discovering what toys are popular with children today would be to visit the Toy Section of the British Industries Fair at Olympia next February. The development of the British toy trade in the last twenty years has been amazing, not only in the sense of commercial success, but because of the ingenuity, artistry, and workmanship that are now lavished in responding to the needs of children. In color, design and skill they want the best, and I think they get it.

Soft toys of the "cuddly" type are one of the first loves. I am sure that the Teddy Bear given to the one-year-old child remains a friend for many years. There may be a bit of shyness about it later, when the youngster begins his schooldays, but from my knowledge, I know that Teddy Bears are still treasured in some households when the owner is getting on for the twenties.

The moment a child can walk he wants something he can pull or push along It helps to put him on his feet. Horses to push along or ride on, barrows, rocking-horses, stool-horses, wooden engines — all these are favorites of the second phase.

Then, of course, the child wants to sit in something and propel himself along. He is already, even at the age of two, eager to drive his own pedal car or toy motor-car. He enjoys motoring round the house and garden until he is seven or eight.

I think I may describe the next development as the scooter or tricycle age. But by this time, the child wants many other things, especially the toy that "works" or that he can make for himself—clockwork toys and constructional toys.

Of course, the girl begins with a doll. She will add to the doll family for many years ahead. She must have a carriage and a cot, quilts and linen, and a folder for the time when the dolls are no longer babies. In these days, dolls are made to represent newborn babies, young babies, toddlers, schoolgirls—in fact, they grow up.

It is wrong to believe that girls have no use for the motor car, the scooter or the clockwork toy. On the contrary; in my experience, girls are every bit as keen as boys on toys that work. But girls have some extra toys peculiar to themselves. In fact, they manage to get the best of both worlds—as usual!
—Walter Lines in Montreal Gazette.

TUNIS IMPORTANT

Italy is making a play for Tunis, claiming a large Italian population in that French colony, but the chief reason for such a demand is the strategic importance of the country, as anyone will see from a glance at the map. It is adjacent to Italian Libya, opposite Sicily and the Mediterranean could be dominated by Italy if that country held both lands.

Yet it would be just as logical for Italy to claim New York City with its population of 440,000 Italians, as it would be in Tunis, where the Italians constitute a minority of the population. With Germany backing away from immediate aid to Italy, and British firmness in support of France against any change in the Mediterranean, Mussolini's chances seem not to be very bright at the moment.—Niagara Falls Review.

ED NOTE: Mr. Arthur Jones is now located at Little River Station Miami, Florida. He expects to be there until Spring. From time to time he will contribute short articles on life, as he sees it, in this interesting city.

Allie Trouts' Park, Miami, Fla.

Dec. 18, 1938

See Miami and die. All roads on the east coast of Florida lead to Miami. While not the largest city in this State, we would call it the show place of Sunny and Tropical Florida.

The Christmas spirit is at hand. We keep looking for Dominion Day. Christmas decorations in Miami do not amount to much as far as I have been able to see. The stores all seem very busy. On top of Christmas the winter season is just opening up. Tropical Park has or is on the verge of opening while Hileah is getting ready. Many race horse men are congregating in the city. Most racing men are a very superstitious body of men. The late Joseph E. Seagram of Waterloo, Ont., of race horse fame and distiller of fine Canadian whiskeys, would never allow his horses to be photographed if he could help it. Said it brought bad luck. We have been entertained by the late Mr. Seagram at his residence in Waterloo many times. A past splendid citizen of our province. While playing cards with him one evening he suddenly broke in with "Art, numbers that read both ways are lucky." Well when "Chinny" handed me our 1939 car plates before w left we looked with astonishment at our number, 636. Mr. Seagram's remark of years ago flashed into our minds. So we have become superstitious as far as our 1939 car plates are concerned. To being the most obliging and pleasant men to meet in our Trailer Travels we give the palm to the "Ice Men". Fine artificial ice is to be obtained at every point, cheap and clean, no sawdust to block up the drain pipes. Every house wife knows of this up in Georgia. A colored man was servicing our ice box. In making change he pulled out a new Jefferson nickle. The old Buffalo nickle had been out 25 years. These Jefferson nickles were put out a few weeks ago. This obliging colored ice man (they are proud of their jobs) looked in his hand at this new shiny coin and said "I'll be doggoned-sure enough—Somebody has done gone and give me that for a nickle." Yesterday we were explaining to our ice man here, it was hard to keep our finger on the weather. One day it starts and the next a change back to our northern underwear. This pleasant white ice man remarked "You sure have put on the one with the "long handles?"

We will now close this column with the best Christmas Greetings and a Happy and Prosperious New Year to all the readers of the Great Family Journal. This goes for the publisher and all the staff of the Ontario Intelligencer. We sincerely trust you will all some day "Travel by Trailer" to this warm sunny climate of Florida.

WRITER'S NOTE: We would be glad to hear from any readers at the above address if we can be of any service.

Friday afternoon, after four o'clock, was the occasion for another enjoyable Tea Dance held in the two gymnasiums and presented in the interests of the Elevator.

The lowering of the price of admission assured a large attendance.

This dance served as an introduction to that type of affair to many of the younger and more subdued pupils of the school.

From the first announcement in Assembly the students were fully convinced that the dance was not going to be lacking in activity and merriment and no one was disappointed.

A "loud" beginning given us by the School Band, which marched through the corridors and played rousing music, served to set the pace for the dance.

After this stirring send-off, the crowd entered into the spirit and atmosphere of the affair and proceeded to the doors of the gymnasia and then into the gymnasia for the dance itself. Going through the doors of the Girls' Gymnasium we caught sight of someone dressed in bright red clothes and wearing a cheery and ever-present smile. Of course, this was good old St. Nick and, although the cheery face behind the white whiskers bore a faint resemblance to Mr. MacLaurin, the figure in red was going about the work usually connected with that colorful old gent from the North—giving present which were in this case, noisemakers and horns of all sizes and types.

After the horns were given out, the music started, and everybody began to dance. The music kept going until about six-fifteen. During the dancing, hot dogs and drinks were served. After some time, the crowd were beginning to feel worn out; so the music was stopped and the students went to their lockers for their coats and books, and went home, tired but happy.

The Collegiate "Red Cross Club" has completed its work for 1938. Today there goes to the Red Cross Headquarters a generous assortment of gaily-coloured mitts, socks, coatees and scarfs made by club memmembers. Our gratitude is offered to Miss Macpherson and her ninth grade girls for their gift of two afghans, which we proudly include in our donation. We trust all may be of use at the Christmas season.

Our few weeks of activity have been very successful. The quality and quantity of the work done by the enthusiastic group promises even finer things in 1939.

Christmas holidays have at last arrived. We now turn to other activities than those of school life, leaving these pages for two weeks until we reassemble in January. To one and all, a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year!

North Lakeside

North Lakeside—Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Stinson, Marlene and Wayne of Ameliasburg spent the tea hour on Sunday with the latter's parents Mr. and Mrs. Sherman Chase.

Mrs. Lela Weeks spent a few days last week with Miss Helen Millar of Consecon.

Mr. and Mrs. Warren Chase spent the tea hour on Tuesday night of last week with Mr. and Mrs. Jay Sprague and family of Mountain View.

Mr. and Mrs. Sam Clarke and daughter of Burr's spent Sunday with the latter's parents Mr. and Mrs. Harold Bovay.

Mr. and Mrs. Russel McCurdy spent Monday evening with Mr. and Mrs. Carl Woof.

Mr. and Mrs. James Way of Bowerman's and Mr. and Mrs. Sherman Chase spent the dinner hour on Sunday with Mr. and Mrs. Warren Chase.

Mr. Earle Wood of Centre spent a recent Sunday with Mr. Howard Walt.

Mr. and Mrs. Ross Cruickshanks spent a few days last week with relatives in Oshawa.

On Wednesday night about fifty members of the Consecon Y. P. gathered at the vestry of the church to hold their regular weekly meeting. After the devotional period and business part were over a debate was held. The topic being "Resolved that career for married women adds to marital happiness." The negative side being the winners. The debaters were younger members of the league. At the close of the meeting, Mr. and Mrs. Warren Chase were asked to come forward and the following address was read by Mr. Howard Walt.

Dear Audrey and Warren:

Upon this, the occasion of your marriage, we the members of Consecon Young People's Union take this opportunity of extending our congratulations and best wishes for a long and happy married life.

Warren, you have been a wonderful help in our work here and have always given the welfare of our society first place in your life. You have made a splendid leader for several years and hope you will continue to work with us.

Audrey, we extend a cordial welcome from our Young People's Union and hope you may find it a pleasure to work with us. We now present you with this silver flower basket and each time you use it may you think of your young Consecon friends.

Signed on behalf of Consecon Young People's Union, Melvin J. Carnrike, Ruth Hickerson.

Miss Mary McConkey made the presentation of a beautiful silver flower basket.

Warren and Audrey replied, thanking the Union for the lovely gift. All joined in singing "For they are jolly good fellows."

Closing hymn and benediction brought the meeting to a close. Next meeting will be election of new officers for 1939.

Miss Mary McConkey and pupils have been busy practising for their Christmas concert.

Mr. and Mrs. Merritt Huycke, Mrs. H. Huycke and Mrs. Lela Weeks spent Saturday night with Mr. and Mrs. Vic Brown of Consecon.

Mr. and Mrs. Warren Chase entertained the members of the County Y. P. Executive at their home on Friday night. The meeting was to make plans for the 1939 work of the executive. Mr. Warren Chase, President, called the meeting to order. Mr. George Green, Presbytery Y. P. president made the presentation of a beautiful picture to Mr. and Mrs. Warren Chase in appreciation of their help in Y.P. work. After thanking for the gift dainty refreshments were served by the host and hostess.

Postal Staff Efficiency Facilitates Distribution Of Christmas Mail on Time

"Mail it on Friday, that should be lots of time to ensure delivery" is a common expression heard on the street and in the home at this time of the year. And lackadaisical John Public does that very thing. He lets his Christmas mail wait until the last minute, sometimes in the hope or for the reason that the person to whom he is sending his gift will not think that a return is expected. Which is all very well as far as John Public is concerned.

But should the self-same people steal a glimpse into the inner workings of that quietly efficient well-oiled piece of public service machinery called the Post Office Department, they would in the majority of cases rush to mail their Christmas presents and letters at least two weeks before the dawning of the Great Day.

A curious newspaperman who wandered this morning into the inner sanctum of the Belleville Post Office gazed in amazement at the quiet efficincy of the staff, the well-ordered methods of distribution and collection of the many thousands of letters and tons of parcels that pour daily into the quiet efficiency of the staff, the simplicity of operation of the many phases of the work and the cool methodical routine of officials and staff brought to the highest state of human mechanical perfection in order to facilitate the collection and delivery on time of John Public's Christmas Mail.

Machine Aids Cancellation

Twelve hundred letters a minute pour into the hungry maw of a modern cancellation machine. and the hands of competent members of the staff, whose job it is to see that they go out on time. Another department of the personnel looks after the incoming mail.

No undue noise permeated the interior of the office. Efficiency exemplified in their every movement, and every movement counted; soft-shoed staff members moved quietly to their appointed tasks.

Wicket-men, courteous and obliging, waited on the never-ending stream of human traffic that pours through the main entrances of the office from opening until close. At the rear of the office, employees stood beside mountains of parcels quietly sorting and placing each parcel into the yawning mouths of mailbags hung ingeniously on long steel racks with their destination carded above them.

Large bins awaited the parcels for city delivery where those unsung heroes of the postal service, the mail-carriers, picked them up, placed them in bulging sacks and rushed them to city homes.

In front of three supplementary receptacles that house nine-one slots each, extra members of the staff stood at their tasks. In another part of the office specially constructed wooden racks from which are hung row upon row of mail-bags called "straights", stood awaiting the parcels and letters that will be sent to the far-flung corners of the Dominion "on time". Yet another series of racks labelled with names of all countries of the world were being filled with parcels and letters by other members of the staff.

Another outstanding feature of the system devised by Postmaster J. V. C. Trualsch to facilitate delivery are emergency supplementary receptacles for city mail. Two highly efficient mail-carriers, known in the post office vernacular as "swing-men", have been called in from their routes and placed on duty in front of these receptacles. Various routes are carded; cards are laid on the floor and the many parcels addressed to city residents are laid out in order. City carriers arriving for their "loads" find their tasks greatly eased as these efficient members of the staff work late into the night assisting in the sorting and laying out of the mail for the various routes.

Late into the night and the early hours of the morning, these public servants toil so that John Public will get his Christmas mail on time.

Eighteen Extras Employed

Eighteen "extras" have augmented the regular post office staff alert, intelligent, young fellows whose natural ability and adaptability soon found them working with almost the precision and efficiency of the "regulars".

In the lobby of the office, special arrangements have been made for the reception of outgoing and local mail. This has also greatly facilitated the job of sorting, officials stated. Behind stamp wickets, members of the staff have sold a number of stamps that will compare favorably with the volume of other years. Sub-office stations in various parts of the city also conduct sales of stamps and deliver returns in their entirety, again easing the task of this department of the Post Office.

Rural route carriers play no secondary part to their city colleagues. Faithful, alert and expert in their job, they too, with special assistants, toil deep into the night arranging their loads so that delivery will be made easier. They, too, have their private "system" of sorting, another innovation of Postmaster Trualsch.

The Postmaster himself is no idle looker-on at the sometimes feverish activities of his office and staff. The telephone rings incessantly with demands that range from the near-ridiculous to the almost-tragic. Paradoxically enough, it is the public itself that while demanding up-to-the-minute delivery of its Christmas mails, throws proverbial "monkey wrenches" into the well-oiled machinery of the post office. How about a parcel mailed on Saturday reaching Kalamazoo or Hong Kong in time for Christmas? What postage should one put on a Christmas card bound for the Arctic Regions or the jungles of India? These and many other questions have to be answered on the "spot" or John Public gets the idea the post office is "falling down".

Early Christmas mailing? "The public did mail a lot of its letters and parcels early this year," Postmaster Trualsch stated. "but that was mainly because Christmas falls this year on Sunday."

He paid tribute to his staff in their handling of the heavy Christmas mails. "There will be no Christmas Day delivery this year," he said, "and only one delivery on the day after Christmas.

"And tell the people," he concluded, "that it is the truth that they can send a Christmas card unsealed to any part of the world for one cent."

Car Slides Down Hill into Train

Wooler—Mr. Arthur Vardy, Wooler, had the misfortune on Monday when driving into Frankford from the west, owing to the icy condition of the road, he was not able to stop his car going down the hill to the railroad track, and a train just pulling into the station, caught the front end of the car, turned it around and damaged the back fender and top, and one tire. There were four in the car but all escaped without injury.

Mr. Wilmot Ellis of R.C.A.F., Trenton, spent Sunday at the home of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. Ellis.

Misses Nina Meyers, Gwen Elford, Eva Masters and Vera Leal attended Stockdale school's Christmas concert Tuesday night, where Miss Pearl Meyers is teacher.

Mrs. Clinton Terrill is better, able to be sitting up now.

Stone School House and Holland School Christmas concerts were held Wednesday night.

Wooler Public School held their concert and closing Wednesday afternoon.

A car owned and driven by Harper Peister, Codrington, overturned in the ditch on the corner by Walt Ellis's on the Wooler Road Tuesday night. He was meeting a car driven by Ervon Scott. No persons were hurt, no damage done to the car, there were soon several men on the scene and righted the car up, and they were able to go on again, none the worse for their scare. It was due to slippery roads and might have been serious.

SALEM W. M. S.

The December meeting of the Salem W.M.S. was held on Wednesday at the home of Mrs. S. Haight with a good attendance.

Mrs. J. Hanna, the president opened the meeting with a hymn, Mrs. S. Haight read the Scripture lesson and Mrs. J. Sills led in prayer. A Christmas hymn was sung. Seventeen members answered to the roll call.

Mrs. D. Smith, group leader, then took charge of the meeting and also gave a splendid report of the sectional rally. Readings were given by Miss Ruth McLaren "Christmas", Mrs. B. Sherman, "Christmas Bells", Mrs. G. Badgley, "The friendly beasts," Mrs. L. McLaren, "Christmas Preparations." Mrs. J. Cole gave a reading on Christian Stewardship and Mrs. L. McLaren gave a temperance reading. A duet was given by Mrs. T. Leslie and Mrs. F. Robinson. Mite boxes were received at this meeting. A vote of thanks was extended to Mrs. Hanna, retiring president, who has given so much faithful service to the society during the past year.

Mrs. Hanna expressed thanks, also her appreciation to the members who had willingly assisted in every way. After a hymn, the meeting closed with prayer by Rev. W. D. Craig.

Little Benny's Note Book

Reddy Merfy was late for school again today, Miss Kitty saying, Well now isn't this too bad, you're not only late again but you've been fighting, just look at your face.

Meaning all scratched and locking, and Miss Kitty started to tell the class about fighting being a bad habit, saying, Today the whole world is divided into nations that want war and nations that want peace, and the nations that want war teach the little children to fite as part of their school work, so they grow up to love fighting and to love war, but the nations that want peace, such as our own great country, teach the children the truth, and the truth is that fighting is wicked and only bullies love to fite, whether they are nations or children, and you'll always notice one thing, you'll notice that war-like nations like to pick on smaller, weaker countries, and pugnacious boys prefer to aggervate boys who are smaller than themselves, and that is the sure mark of the bully. Of course I dont say that it is never excusable to fite, because there is one occasion when nations and people must fite, but only one occasion, and that is when it is purely a question of self defence, and knowing Aloyitious as I do, I should be very much surprised to hear that he has been fighting purely as a matter of self defence, she said.

Sure I was, that's just what I was fighting in, Reddy said, and Miss Kitty said, In what way, please?

Well, there was some darn kid, and I didn't like his looks so I gave him a push in the face, so he had to fite in self defence, Reddy said, and Miss Kitty said, You'l remain an hour after school in self defence.

Wich he did.

RECEPTION

Mr. and Mrs. George W. Wooton, 68 Catherine Street, will be at home to their friends in honor of their fiftieth wedding anniversary on Monday afternoon, December 26th., from three to five o'clock and in the evening from eight to ten o'clock.

Mr. John Benson of Ivanhoe, is ill at the home of his daughter, Mrs. W. Kilpatrick, 150 E. Moira Street.

Harry Moncrieff of the R.C.A.F. flew from Ottawa yesterday to be with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Reg. Moncrieff, 176 Bleecker Ave.

The many friends of Mr. Frank Hamilton of Pearl River, Alberta, will be pleased to know he has arrived in Mountain View, where he will spend the winter with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. F. B. Hamilton. He was the guest of his sister, Mrs. W. Drader of Brandon, Manitoba, also his uncle, Stephen Tufts of Winnipeg, en route.

Mrs. E. O. Keeler and Miss Irene Keeler are spending Christmas with the former's daughter, Mrs. Bourdeau, in Montreal.

Dr. Coburn A. L. Campbell, Mrs. Campbell and sons, Jack, and Ian of Port Jefferson, Long Island, are in the city to spend Christmas with Dr. Campbell's mother, Mrs. Willis J. Campbell, 267 William Street.

Miss Dorothy Zufelt, B.A., who is attending the Ontario College of Education, Toronto, is spending the Christmas holidays with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. R. L. Zufelt.

Mr. Douglas Newby and Mr. Bill Newby, who are attending Queen's University, Kingston, are spending the Christmas holidays with their parents, Mr. and Mrs. Harold Newby, John Street.

Complete Plans For Holiday Entertainment

Members of the Women's Hospital Auxiliary are having a busy Christmas season of it, preparing details of the Yuletide dance so that it will be one of the most successful entertainment ever held in the city.

A bridge party will be held in the Collegiate Library and the dance itself will take place in the gyms. Festive Christmas decoration, the last word in decorative art, will transform the rooms into inviting centres of attraction.

Supper is being served in the cafeteria, and bridge tickets as well as dance tickets include refreshments. Those holding dance cards may also play bridge.

Gala Christmas Scene Planned by Clever Designer

Residents of College Hill district have been fascinated by the unique Christmas decorations at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Kitchen, Donald Street. With a crescent moon, star and an owl overlooking the arrangements a delightful Christmas scene has been created in the sun porch. On a long table carpetted with snow, a miniature Santa and his reindeer are seen galloping along a roadway marked off with tiny telegraph poles. A "stop" signal beside a beautifully constructed doll's house shows that Santa's visit is expected. Lights gleam from the little red brick house in which a doll awaits Santa. The house is furnished with tiny tables and chairs and from the chimney curls realistic, looking smoke. The whole scene was designed and constructed by Mr. Kitchen.

The house decorations at the Kitchen home are equally interesting. The centre of interest is divided between the brilliantly decorated tree and a winter scene arranged on the buffet. The latter shows Santa in skis and his reindeer resting. Small "ice-covered" ponds edged with snow, tiny houses and evergreen shrubs complete a carefully-planned picture. This is the work of Mrs. Kitchen.

DR. DAFOE'S COLUMN on the Quintuplets and the Care of Your Children

Parent's Background of Physical and Moral Health Means a Lot to Children

During the past couple of days I have been discussing with you the need for young people contemplating marriage to give some consideration to the type of family they are marrying into.

I know that heredity isn't everything, but a family that shows a history of both physical and moral health means a whole lot, not only for your own happiness but for the happiness of the children you may have. I hope you people won't think me cold-blooded in my attitude, but as a doctor in a country community over a long period I have seen too many cases of people blindly marrying into a stock where a little observation would have shown too many of its members in the asylum; too many cases of disease; too many who are odd.

Naturally the normal person is attracted by a feeling of personal liking in the choice of a life partner more than by the study of family blood and the kind of children he or she are likely to have as the result of this union.

In fact, man would be a cold-blooded animal if this weren't true. He wouldn't be the person to arouse feelings in the opposite sex. But it must be considered that one is a long, long time married, and a little prudence doesn't hurt a bit.

Before we left the university, one of our professors gave us quite a lecture about the girls we would marry when we got got in the world. He pointed out that we should be sure to see to it that we went around with girls whose background made it likely that they would make us the best wives.

He said something to us that I have never forgotten. He warned us that if we married a girl of our own level or above—and I'm not speaking of social levels, mind you—she would help us to greater things. But if we married beneath us, then we would be dragged down.

In the years that have passed, I have seen just that happen many, many times, so I know that it was good advice. I have seen young doctors go out into the country; they work hard, and before long they get lonesome and fall for the first affectionate girl they meet. You can see that even doctors who are supposed to know all about this sort of thing make the same mistakes as anyone else.

I always say to young men: "Try to fall in love with a good, attractive girl with a good background. You may not be good enough for her, but you keep on trying."

I have noticed, too, that you will often see a bright-looking, attractive girl whose mental age is about 12. In spite of that, the men all seem to fall for her. But you don't see many girls going for a man whose mental age is only 12.

One thing I have noticed about the modern generation is a growing tendency on their part to examine their associates with a critical mind. So far as the ordinary person is concerned there is nothing he can do about his ancestry. He can however, adjust himself to his environment so as to make the best of it and lessen any disadvantages he may have inherited.

Christmas Trees

WELL BABY CLINIC

VERY, tiny tots greeted Santa Claus with uproarious excitement yesterday afternoon when that most welcome Christmas visitor paid his annual Yuletide call at the V.O.N. Well Baby Clinic, Pinnacle Street. One hundred and fifty babes and their brothers and sisters of pre-school age who attend clinic filled the spacious rooms to overflowing, even crowded the halls and stairs as three o'clock brought the jolly Santa Claus.

A brilliantly decorated Christmas tree shone with coloured lights and gleamed with mysterious white packages, gifts for all the children. Santa Claus' entrance was a thrilling moment, and in short time he was busy distributing the gifts to the small tots, aided by the nurses of the clinic.

Outside, the scene looked like traffic jam in prams as baby buggies of every variety were left outside to await their small passengers.

The nurses are very grateful to Mr. E. W. Brown whose assistance made the event a wonderful success.

FOXBORO Y. P. U.

The Foxboro Young People's Union was called to order Monday evening by Miss Milligan, convener of recreation. A number of Christmas games and contests were engaged in, after which the sixty-three members present formed a large circle and all sang "Jingle Bells" and two verses of "It came upon the midnight clear." During a short business period Gordon Walt was appointed as delegate for the Winter School at Bridge St. Church, Belleville in January. Mr. Cook explained to the Young People the financial budget of the church.

The worship service was opened with quiet music by Mrs. Spencer. Mrs. Daniels sang "Silent Night". Mrs. Sine gave the call to worship with a short meditation on why we celebrate Christmas. She then directed silent prayer and offered prayer. Mrs. Priest read a poem "Gifts for Christmas" and the Christmas offering was received during the singing of "Come all ye faithful". Leon Wilson read the Scripture from the 2nd chapter of Luke and Miss Milligan read "The Innkeeper's Excuse." Vera Walt sang a solo and Marie Bartlett told a beautiful Christmas story entitled "Christmas Bells." Mrs. Christie gave a reading. All joined hands in the friendship circle thus wishing each other a merry Christmas. The meeting closed with the singing of "O little town of Bethlehem" and prayer by Rev. Cook.

Actions mightier than boasting! Enemies animate an inanimate shrink from giants to pygmies before the face of resolution.

QUEEN MARY SCHOOL

MERRIMENT reigned at Queen Mary School yesterday afternoon when the junior school concert was held in the auditorium. Audience and performers alike had a gay afternoon of it, with the rhythm band in capes and pill box hats, realistic Christmas dolls, folk dancers, strange appearing "Gloomy Gloops" and very energetic clowns to entertain the visitors.

Mr. Frederick, principal of the school, extended greetings to those present, and wished old and young a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year. He acted as chairman for the program, while Miss Arkils was accompanist for the musical numbers and drills.

The interesting program, given with great enthusiasm by the little ones, was as follows:

1.—Rhythm Band Selection
(a) Welcome Recitation—Ralph Neal.
(b) Song—Charles DeLong.
(c) Recitation—Douglas Soule.
(d) Song—Mary Harris, Joan Flindall.
(e) Rhythm Band Selection.
2. Doll Drill—Miss Hatfield's Class—Helen Yorke, Eleanor Canning, Shirley Orr, Betty Sinfield, Carol Smith, Leslie Morris.
3. Chorus—Miss Styles' Class.
4. Folk Dance.
5. The Gloomy Gloops—Song.
6. Clown Drill.
7. Play—The Three Little Kittens
Kittens—Joan Flindall, Barbara Rose, Mary Harris.
Mistress Mary—June Poste.
Little Jack Horner—Charles De Long.
Betty Blue—June Scott.
Jack Be Nimble—Leo Marcus.
Jack and Jill—Billy Campbell, Juanita Kulbeck.
Carols—Miss Elson's Class.

Fashion Flashes

(By ALICE ALDEN)

Some of the smartest of the daytime town ensembles are devoid of fur or trimming. For instance, Marjorie Dunton makes an ensemble with a long, fitted double-breasted coat of heavy dark red wool worn over a dress of matching color in jersey, the bodice draped, the skirt pleated all around.

There's more luxury in some of the cloth coats than in some of the fur coats. For instance, Molyneux makes a coat of silver fox skins placed vertically on broadcloth so that curves and narrow strips of the black cloth show at the waist and down the front.

The most lost man on earth is the covetous man.

Their Excellencies To Dine Informally On Christmas Night

Ottawa, Dec. 23—(CP)—The conventional roast turkey, mashed potatoes and brussels sprouts will form the main course set before the Governor - General and Lady Tweedsmuir at a Christmas night dinner at Rideau Hall.

In company with their secretaries lady-in-waiting, aides-de-camp, a few house guests and children of staff members, Their Excellencies will dine informally at Government House. In the morning they will attend nearby St. Bartholomew's Anglican Church after which the Governor - General will pay a visit to ex-soldiers at the Canadian Legion hostel.

The dinner menu will be:

Consomme Madrilene
Fried Filet of Sole, Tartar Sauce
Roast Turkey with Chestnuts
Mashed Potatoes and Brussels Sprouts
Green Salad
Christmas Pudding and Mince Pies
Fruit Coffee

William Buchan, second son of Their Excellencies, who a few days ago had his appendix removed, will celebrate Christmas in a London nursing home and who will probably be visited during the day by his younger brother, Alastair, who is spending the Christmas season in London with his grandmother, Mrs. Norman Grosvenor.

John Buchan, the eldest son, will spend his first Christmas away from civilization at Cape Dorset, Baffin Land, where he is stationed with the Hudson's Bay Company.

King and Queen To Be Initiated Into Indian Tribe

Toronto, Dec. 23.—(CP)— King George VI may be initiated into a lineage of rulers older even than the monarchy of England when he visits Canada next Summer. Plans to confer a chieftainship in Canada's Six Nations Indian tribe upon the King are being considered by the Toronto Indian Council.

Dr. J. J. Sussmuth, Assistant Sachem of the Council, said today the honor will be conferred upon King George if the Royal itinerary permits. If possible, the ceremony will be held on the Six Nations Reserve at Oksweken, near Brantford. If not, the Indians will come to Toronto and go through the ancient ritual.

The ceremony will be identical with that by which the Indians honored their rulers long before white man ever set foot in Canada. The procedure was almost universal among them, and varied but little among the different tribes, Dr. Sussmuth said.

The plan was suggested by Singing Lark, an adopted member of the Six Nations. Singing Lark's Canadian name is Ivy Meirson, and she is a member of the Council.

The name by which King George will be adopted into the Six Nations will be kept secret until the ceremony. When the Indians of ancient legend honored a mighty warrior or great hunter, the bestowed name was similarly secret until the ceremony.

An Indian guard of honor for the Sovereigns has also been suggested. If plans mature, the escort will be attired in the plumed headdress and colorfully-decorated garments familiar to Champlain and LaSalle.

Weddings

RUTTER—GOODFELLOW

A pretty wedding took place at Cannifton United Church parsonage on Wednesday, December 21st., at eleven o'clock, when Cora, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Goodfellow, Corbyville, became the bride of Mr. James Clinton Rutter, son of the late Mr. and Mrs. George Rutter. The Rev. A. Armstrong officiated.

The bride wore a smart teal blue dress with matching accessories and corsage of roses. She was attended by the groom's sister, Miss Aletha Rutter, who was attired in dark green with rust accessories and corsage of roses.

Mr. Phillip Smith was groomsman.

Wedding breakfast was served in the Quinte Cafe after which the bride and groom left on a motor trip to Toronto and western points. On their return they will reside in Campbellford.

GOOD MANNERS

Your Christmas and You

More About Christmas Thank-You Notes

When you sent out your Christmas thank-you notes, be proud not only of what you say in them but also of how they look. Use your best-looking letter-paper, your favorite pen, and make a resolution to write the finest-appearing and most articulate note that you can.

Space your lines and margins carefully so that your letter will look like a picture in a frame. Don't give an impression of being in a hurry, by cutting short your expressions of appreciation, by being untidy, by abbreviating. Don't write "Xmas" for the more significant "Christmas". Don't write the sign of "and" (&). Address the envelope neatly, legibly. Here, again, do not use any abbreviations, except the accepted ones of "Mrs." and "Mr".

Don't cramp your style by using correspondence cards for your thank-you notes. It is logical that when you take a correspondence card, to write a note of thanks on it, you naturally adapt what you have to say and the amount of your expression of thanks to the size of the card. Therefore, you are apt not to be so generous with your thanks as you would be if you had more space. Choose rather to use letter-paper or note-paper, or the smart and attractive new semi-note papers, the double-sheeted, half letter size papers.

It seems incredible that some people even consider sending ready-made thank-you cards. Sending a printed or engraved card of thanks for such a personal gesture as a gift or cards . . . please, please don't do it.

Some delightful people acknowledge all Christmas cards that they receive. It is a gracious and pleasant thing to do, and a fine opportunity to send New Year greetings.

Jewelry Should Be Returned

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

Should a girl return a wrist watch she received last Christmas if she breaks off her friendship with the giver and becomes engaged to another young man?

S.

This situation is just what is apt to arise when a girl accepts jewelry from a man to whom she is not engaged. Along comes Mr. Right, and in comes embarrassment on the girl's part, remorse that she had such poor social judgment as to accept such an important and inappropriate gift from 'just a friend'. There, in her possession, for her fiance to see and wonder about, is the accusing symbol of her lack of taste. Of course she wants to get it out of her life, and of course, he wants her to.

Now that the damage has been done, the only thing left for the girl in this circumstance, to try to make amends for her lack of taste, is to return the watch to the giver, with a gracious note making as appropriate an explanation as she can.

Advice to the Lovelorn

Famous Authority on Problems of Love and Marriage.

Widower With Children Target of Wily Women

The problem of a man left with children to rear, after the death of his wife, is truly pitiable. He is the victim of all types of female sharpers, who, like the camel of fable, takes this opportunity of sticking a head under the tent and crowding out the lawful occupants.

Let a widower write a letter to this column, asking my advice about getting a suitable housekeeper, one who would help bring up his children decently, and I am deluged with mail. From Maine to California women write, begging me to recommend them to the bereaved gentleman. They adore children, they love keeping house, they're domestic, etc.—but the catch is in the last sentence: They wouldn't object to marriage "If Mr.—is willing."

As this column never, under any circumstances, exchanges addresses, or acts in any way as a go-between among correspondents, letters from these paragon housekeepers never reach their destination. But from them has arisen the following suggestion for unwary widowers: In selecting a housekeeper, don't be romantic. Select one who has good references. Let good credentials guide you rather than any glamorous appearances.

The following letter is not typical thank Heaven, but it is fairly reliable, as showing the jam a widower can get himself into by picking out a glamor girl rather than a reliable "all wool and a yard wide" type of housekeeper.

"Dear Miss Fairfax:

"Very suddenly, my dear wife died of pneumonia, leaving me with three children, all under ten years of age. My pastor suggested that I take Miss—as a housekeeper. She had a good character and was thoroughly responsible. But after I had concluded negotiations with her, I found a very charming woman awaiting me when I returned from the office that evening.

"She was singing and playing hymns at the piano, and my three children were singing with her. It was a lovely picture and I was so unhappy and lonesome that I broke off with Miss—and engaged the lady who charmed not only me but my children as well.

"She claimed to be a widow of 32 years of age. Nothing was said about my children, and I supposed of course she was free of incumbrances. But after we were married, three untamed children made their appearance, and they owned the house. They fought with my children from morning till night. They ran up candy bills at the drugstore. And my new wife outfitted them handsomely with clothes and sent the bill to me.

"I was really so much in love that I agreed to make over my life insurance to her, and put the title of our home in her name. After she had almost wrecked me financially I discovered she was out with her former boy friends during the day, and that my children were running wild.

"I took my case to a lawyer, and now find that I shall have to pay this woman a substantial sum to get rid of her. I'm writing this letter to you in the hope it may reach the eye of some other sap, situated as I was, and that he won't fall for the picture of an attractive woman at the piano, singing hymns with his children. I neglected to say that before the lady removed herself from my home she threw a bock at me, and her aim was excellent.

Wiser Widower."

How You Live--How You Look

DANIELLE DARRIEUX

Good living keeps this talented French actress of the films healthy, happy and beautiful

By HELEN FOLLETT

She is an unwise career girl who economizes on food so that she can display sartorial splendor. She sacrifices health for fur coats and hats that knock your eye out. It won't work out, that system. If she is carrying the hod up and down the ladder from nine to five, she must be well nourished. Any job is wearing. Jangling telephones, gabby customers, this and that tucker one out.

It's no use buying rouge if it is to be wisked over a sallow skin or a pale cutanous coating. Make-up glorifies the good complexion, a skin that is the reward for wise living and strict adherence to the laws of health. It doesn't do much for the girl who isn't in first class physical condition. It doesn't hide defects.

How one lives, what thoughts go on inside one's head are influences that have much to do with appearance. Gloomy thoughts take the sparkle from the eyes. A digestion that isn't clicking normally has a deplorable effect upon the complexion and the central nervous system.

Hard workers need good food, sufficient rest, a certain amount of exercise and recreation. We do wish the members of the beauty class would keep that fact in mind.

Christmas Greetings

Not because it is a time-honored custom but because of the sincerity of our appreciation, we take this opportunity to thank our many friends for the courtesies and patronage extended us during the past year, and to wish you one and all the best Christmas you have ever known since the glorious days of childhood, when old Santa Claus filled your stocking to the bursting point.

Our vote for one of the nicest winter ensembles goes to a plaid woollen frock done in shades of yellow and brown, topped by a hip-length beaver box coat with flap pockets and collarless neckline. It is lined in the plaid of the dress and there is a flat envelope muff of the beaver.

As a change from all the color, several white hats have made their appearance. A nice model is of fine white felt, the brim turned up sharply at the sides, and held at the top by a bow of black grosgrain ribbon. And it is an easy matter to detach the bow and replace it by one of any color desired.

Looking around we note several smart afternoon suits of velvet with fur trim. A typical model is of black Lyons velvet with a loose, boxy jacket and a double collar of silver fox. With it is worn an overblouse of white and silver lame.

PAGING SANTA CLAUS

By

Jane Corby

There was still so much to do! She must stop at a store and buy a travelling basket for Pussy-puff. She would never have forgiven herself if anything happened to Dora's kitten while she was away. Pussy-puff must go with her. Her packing took very little time. Just an overnight case that held a few things she really needed. With her own bag in her hand and Pussy-puff mewing piteously in his basket, she hurried toward the elevator.

"Going away?" There was Mrs. Talbot coming out of her room just as Jan was passing her door. She would run into Mrs. Talbot, thought Jan, annoyed. Not that it mattered at all, but there was no use in broadcasting things before you were ready.

"No. I was just taking the kitten to see Dora." She couldn't think of anything better on the spur of the moment.

"Humph!" said Mrs. Talbot.

CHAPTER XXI

Jan walked to the subway station as fast as she could. She knew she had very little time to spare if she was to catch the afternoon northbound bus. When she reached it she thought for a moment that she was too late. Every seat seemed to be taken. She stepped into the bus quickly and looked over the sea of hats, two by two, in every seat. 'Way back toward the back she saw a break in the solid phalanx of heads and pushed her way down the aisle. Everybody had been Christmas shopping, apparently. Boxes and bundles of every imaginable shape and size all but engulfed the passengers, many of them even resting their feet on one or two of the sturdier purchases.

The unoccupied seat Jan had thought she saw was next to the window. A middle-aged, tight-lipped woman sat on the aisle and had formed a barricade in the space between her seat and the window with all sorts of bundles. "Ready to hold the fort against all comers," thought Jan.

Jan wedged her way down the aisle until she stood beside the stern visaged woman.

"Is this seat taken?" she inquired in a low voice.

Her tone did not mollify the occupant in the least. She turned her steel-rimmed spectacles full on Jan and stared at her without speaking.

"I said, is this seat taken?" repeated Jan.

"Can't you see it is?" the other snapped. "A voice like ground razor blades," thought Jan. But she smiled sweetly. "I mean, is there anyone sitting there?"

At this point the bus driver looked around. He was due to start in one minute flat, and he did not propose to be kept waiting while passengers argued over priority rights, or anything else.

"Everybody seated, please," he shouted. "And I do mean you, Miss," as Jan still stood in the aisle. He was becoming even more emphatic when he remembered the courtesy of the drivers stressed by his company, so he added with an effort toward the jollity of the Yuletide season, "Got to get all you people home in time to trim your Christmas trees. Let's go!"

"I—" began Jan. But for answer the driver got up, and in a moment loomed over the bespectacled woman with the bundles.

"All right, lady—all right, pick 'em up—one seat to a passenger, let's go!" His jollity gave way to unmistakable determination as he spoke, and the woman began in a maddeningly slow way to stow away her packages under the seat and pile others in her lap. She finally moved just enough to allow Jan to squeeze past into the now vacant seat.

Pussy-puff mewed feebly as Jan settled his basket on her knees.

"A cat!"

Jan's bespectacled companion transferred her baleful glare from the travelling case which Jan had had difficulty in fitting in at her feet so that it would not infringe on the floor space belonging to the other, to the cat's basket on her knees.

"I didn't know they allowed animals on these buses!" Jan reached a finger through the wire screen at the end of Pussy-puff's basket and stroked his pink nose.

The heavily laden bus shook itself a little and then rolled smoothly out of the terminal.

It was good to Jan to lie back in the seat and feel that things were now beyond her control. She had set her feet in a new direction and there was no turning back. But the more she tried to put Tony out of her mind the more persistently his face mocked her. She saw it when she looked out into the jammed street. Once she thought she actually did see Tony behind the wheel of a passing car, but it was only a man who held his head with that same touch of arrogance. She let her thoughts wander for a moment to the puzzle that Tony presented.

Evidently he was a man of good background and fine education. He had a mechanical bent too, that Jan, although she knew nothing of mechanics herself, recognized as unusual. He could have made something of himself. Perhaps if he had the right incentive....For a moment she wavered. They weren't out of town yet. She had only to find a subway terminal to be back in a few minutes in the heart of the city.

Jan stirred impatiently. What could she thinking of? Definitely she was not the right influence for Tony. She could adore him if she allowed herself to do so, but she would as surely destroy him. A girl who inspired a man to steal for her was not the one to bring him happiness.

Jan's impatient movement had brought her elbow in sharp contact with her seat mate's arm.

"You don't happen to want this seat, too?" her companion inquired acidly.

"What-t?" said Jan. "Oh, I beg your pardon, I did not realize—"

"That there was anyone else on the bus, I suppose," sniffed the woman. "You and your cat!"

She flounced as far away from Jan as the seat allowed, actually not more than an inch, and fastened her gaze rigidly on the bus driver's broad back.

"It's a wonder that he can drive under that awful glare," Jan thought. "It's like having a death ray directed at you!"

If only the last few days had never been. If only she could go back to those first days at the Devon Arms when Dora and she had been so perfectly happy!

It was only after they had left the city far behind that Jan noticed how much snow was on the ground. Here, in the open country that lay in increasingly long stretches between the small towns snow drifted on the fields and was piled high at the sides of the road. It must be very dee pin the Vermont mountains. For a moment Jan's heart quailed at the thought of her destination, a wintry mountain region that she had never seen. But Brad would be there, she told herself resolutely. And Brad would be glad to see her.

It was silly perhaps to run off like this in search of Dr. Curtis when she knew he would be back in town within a few days. But she could not wait. Now that her mind was made up she was driven by a fierce urge to find Brad at once and get everything settled. That, and the decision to put as much distance as possible between herself and the Devon Arms and the William Anthony Deverest engagement party led her on, and would help her to hold fast to her decision, no matter how strange and unfamiliar were the places where she must go.

She would marry Brad as soon as he wished. Of that much she was certain. Beyond that she did not think at all. Brad would be able to tell her what to do about Dora; perhaps he would want her to live with them — the Curtis house was big enough.

"Why, it's snowing!" Jan almost spoke aloud as she noticed that the landscape, which she had scarcely seen for many miles, was blurred by a drifting veil of snowflakes.

CHAPTER XXII

The bus was nearing a town now, and Jan's seat mate was obviously preparing to depart. She was collecting bundles from the floor under the seat, from beneath her own feet and finally wrenched one loose that was caught under the seat ahead. These were all added to the pile in her lap. She encompassd them with her arms by some sleight of hand gesture that left Jan open-mouthed, and rose as the bus slid to a stop. She then began to cut a wide swath down the aisle, knocking other people's bundles out of her way, and one man's hat completely askew.

Jan set Pussy-puff's basket in the vacant seat. The crowd of passengers had thinned somewhat but there was still that Christmas homecoming look about the package-laden group. The bus lights were on now and the great vehicle hurtling through the snowy dusk must appear to the occasional person they met trudging along the roadside, like a sort of land-going ship, Jan thought.

She stared out of the window as long as she could see anything at all. Real farms sprawled beside the road; Jan could discern outlines of the farmhouses, surprisingly alike for the most part. The same sloping roofs, the same air of having stood in one spot for uncounted years. More often than not the houses were dwarfed by the barns; the barns looked newer—better kept, too.

Sometimes, when a house was situated close to the road, Jan caught a glimpse of a woman's face at a window; sometimes there were other little faces just above the sill.

"Daddy's late getting home for supper," Jan surmised, "and they're getting worried because it's snowing so hard.' '

To keep her thoughts away from her own problems, she began trying to reconstruct the stories of the women she saw as they flashed past.

There was one young woman standing in an open doorway holding a baby in one arm and reaching out the other hand to catch hold of the rocker of a chair, held upside down by a young giant of a man, with his mackinaw collar turned up over his pull-down cap. The chair was partly wrapped in paper.

"It's a Christmas present for her!" Jan figured out the story happily. "They've been married just a little more than a year. She's from the city, probebly worked in a department store. Her house dress is cute and becoming, and her hair has a new cut—she's a city girl, all right.

"The baby is a girl, named Elma. That's for his mother who lives on a farm on the side of that big hill back there. His mother lives with her married daughter and her husband, and they have three children who go to the community school miles and miles away. The school bus calls for them night and morning, but they have to walk down the hill to the highway to meet it. There have been stories of bears in the hills around, and the two youngest children are afraid coming home after school when it begins to get dark so early. But Edgar—he's ten and the oldest—quiets their fears by telling them that he knows how to handle bears.

"'See this big stick?' he tells them. 'Well, just you watch if any old bear comes out from behind any of those trees. I'll hit him on the nose—hard — with my stick. That's the way to frighten bears; sock 'em hard, right on the nose! That's the way the scouts used to do when this part of the country was just full of Indians and bears.'"

Jan laughed at her own narrative ability.

"I guess I ought to write a book, she thought. "I guess if I just wrote the story of my own life it would make a book. The smile died out of her eyes; the book, she thought, wouldn't have a very happy ending. Then she took a firm grip on herself. She would be happy; The past was over and done with; from now on she would look forward—she and Brad would be happy. He was so kind, she reminded herself for the hundredth time; and that great old house was so gracious, so welcoming. It was as if the old place had held out its arms to her last night. She would accept their invitation; she would creep into them and find safety and comfort now, and later, perhaps, contentment.

It had been dark outside the warm, lighted world within the bus, for a long while, it seemed to Jan, when they finally stopped in a fair sized town.

"Half an hour for supper!" the bus driver announced, drawing up before a little lunch room where a girl was making pancakes in the window. She waved a greeting and he waved back. Everybody clambered stiffly out of the bus. For some it was journey's end; most of them, however, like Jan, were going on; they scattered quickly. Jan stood a moment in the driving snow, Pussy-puff's basket and her travelling bag clutched tight in her hands. Then she turned and followed the bus driver and some of her companions into the lunch room behind the pancake exhibit.

A thick - armed, red - cheeked waitress brought Jan the pancakes and honey and coffee she ordered and, when she asked timidly, an extra pitcher of cream. Jan put the kitten's basket on the floor between her chair and the wall, surreptitiously poured the extra cream into her saucer and edged it down to the floor in front of the door in Pussy-puff's basket. Then she opened the door and the kitten stepped out cautiously, sniffing experimentally at the outer edge of the basket doorway, at the leg of Jan's chair, finally observing the saucer of cream. He fell to work on it with complete absorption and Jan, glancing around guiltily, began quickly to butter her pancakes.

She had Pussy-puff's back safe in his basket and was in her seat in the bus before the others began heir straggling return. There was a good deal of turmoil when everybody was in and all settling themselves for the night. The bus was going straight through; there was a long swift-paced night ahead. The passengers had their own ideas of comfort and were very busy for a few moments adjusting bundles, arranging things to meet these notions.

Jan rested her head on the back of the seat. Pussy-puff, after his good supper, was curled up into a contented, almost spherical bit of yellow fluff. Talk among the other passengers gradually dwindled to an occasional few words; some of the people seemed to be asleep, the backs of their seats adjusted so that they were half reclining. The headlights of passing cars loomed out of the darkness less and less frequently; there came a time when nothing except the bus seemed to be moving anywhere on the road.

That they were climbing steadily, Jan knew. Sometimes the road dipped a little and often it ran along at one level for a long time, but every once in a while it began to ascend, gradually but persistently. It was a road cushioned in powdery white; even above the sound of the motor Jan could hear occasionally the creak of the snow, protesting under the impact of a heavy tire.

More and more of the passengers assumed the half-sitting, half reclining position that the gliding seat backs permitted. Jan experimented, found that it was very comfortable. She wouldn't sleep, of course, but it was restful to lie here like this, listening to the steady muted squeaking of the busy windshield wipers. They sang a sort of song, a monotonous chant—

Jan was astonished when she opened her eyes to find herself swinging through murky gray light. Next minute she realized that she was not swinging—it was the bus swaying ever so gently as it ploughed determinedly onward. Why, it was morning! The lights were all out in he bus. She sat up straight. Other people were stirring too, rubbing their eyes, yawning wearily. Somebody asked about the next stop.

"Kent's Corner," said the driver, "straight ahead."

It was later than Jan had thought—almost seven o'clock. But the steadily falling snow and heavy skies threw a pall over everything, even the houses of the small village into which they rolled presently, seemed unreal, their outlines vague, only half visible in this strange dawn

CHAPTER XXIII

It was good to stretch her arms and legs, to breathe deeply of the clear, vitalizing air. They must be well up in the mountains by this time, Jan realized. She could see, off in the distance, steep dark slopes— the fir-covered sides of the very mountains, perhaps, they would presently ascend.

"This is Christmas eve," she thought, with a shock. "Christmas eve, and I am far away from darling Dora."

But Dora was safe and happy, she reminded herself, and what she was doing now would be best for all of them in the end. She drank steaming hot coffee with the others at a little bus station; thought at first that she couldn't eat, found the good morning odor of crisping bacon and sputtering frying eggs irresistible, finished a plateful relishing every mouthful.

Just in time, too, to avert a minor distaster with Pussy-puff in the stellar role. The kitten had lapped up his milk and was nibbling the bit of bacon Jan allotted him when, as the door between the small restaurant and the kitchen swung open, a fox terrier came prancing in, barking in joyous excitement over his discovery of the kitten. Jan upset her chair as she leaped to the rescue of Pussy-puff.

"Get out! Scat! Shoo!" she shrieked at the dog. He had the kitten cornered near the outer door. If someone opened the door, the kitten might escape and she'd never find him again!

Desperately she tried to push the terrier aside so that she could reach Pussy-puff. But the dog put a gleeful nose between braced front paws, emitting sharp little yelps of delight, getting in her way, blocking her every effort to reach the kitten.

It was the owner of the place who came to her aid finally.

"Down, you, Snappy!" he commanded, attracted by the uproar, from the kitchen where he was supervising the cooking. Snappy paused, looked up sidewise at his master, back yearningly at the kitten.

"Come here, sir!" and as the dog reluctantly obeyed, "down, Snappy! Lie down!"

Before the crestfallen terrier had assumed a recumbent position on the floor, Jan had Pussy-puff in her arms and was hurrying him toward his basket.

"You have your dog well trained," she told the proprietor, smiling, as she fastened the door of the basket on the kitten and started back to the bus.

"Good dogs, these fox terriers," said the man, pleased at her praise "easy to teach."

Jan could hear the roar of the motor as the bus driver prepared to shove off. Everyone else had gone. She turned back at the door.

"Merry Christmas!" she called "Merry Christmas, Snappy!"

Paul Harris was often perturbed, but he was rarely upset. And of all the occasions when he was upset, there had been few when he was as worried as he was at ten o'clock of the morning of December twenty-fourth. The chambermaid assigned to the rooms on Jan's floor had come straight to him—very properly, too—with a note she had found pinned to Jan's pillow. The bed had not been slept in, the maid reported. Paul read the note, holding it with fingers that quivered slightly as he absorbed the contents.

"To whom it may concern," he read, "don't worry about me. When I get back I'll explain everything Jan Payson."

Paul thanked the chambermaid and sent her on her way. Then he rang the Deverest residence, found out from the butler where Tony was likely to be at the moment and finally located him.

"I'll be over," said Tony, hanging up while Paul was still speaking.

The next half hour was a nightmare to Paul.

"No, I haven't any idea where she could have gone. No, I didn't say anything to hurt her feelings That note there, Mr. Deverest, was the first inkling I had that she wasn't here."

"But when did she leave? Did she appear in the show last night?"

"I gave her last night off," said Paul sadly. "I thought she ought to rest up for the big doings tonight. And this is what I get for being thoughtful.'

"Maybe Dora knows where she went."

"That's an idea," said Paul, brightening. "I'll go around to the hospital and ask her.'

"Don't frighten her," said Tony from the doorway. He was on his way upstairs to hunt for clues.

"Frighten Dora!" exclaimed Paul. "Really, Mr. Deverest!" And after Tony had left the room Paul stood for a moment, trying to regain control of his injured feelings. When he thought of the high—the very high—regard in which he held Dora Payson, the very suggestion that he might frighten her by careless questioning was devastating. Finally he reached for his hat and overcoat, still suffering, however, from shock.

Tony meanwhile had reached the Payson apartment and had been admitted by the chambermaid. No, the girl told him in answer to his questions, she hadn't seen Miss Payson yesterday at all. She had done the rooms as usual and left. Then when she came in again this morning, there was that note. Had he seen it? Tony had. He got rid of the maid and after staring helplessly around, wondering where he could begin looking for some hint, he began pacing aimlessly up and down the sitting room.

AT THE McCARTHY

"The Main Event

With a heavyweight championship bout scheduled that evening, the defending title-holder is kidnapped just before ringtime to make Columbia's "The Main Event" one of the most thrilling action pictures ever seen at the McCarthy Theatre, where it opened yesterday. The new film, in which Robert Paige and Jacqueline Wells are co-featured as a detective and his girl friend, offers a startling expose of a million dollar sporting racket.

Paige, as a city police officer, takes over the kidnap case, which unexpectedly breaks on the night of the fight. Frustrated in his first attempt to contact the criminals, Paige disguises himself as a cab driver to follow new instructions from the racketeers. He makes the contact only to have his fiancee, Miss Wells, kidnapped and held as hostage.

Paige broadcasts an appeal to police radio cars. The racketeers are tracked to their lair, but manage to escape. Tense sequences develop that are climaxed when, jumping from a speeding motor launch to a speed boat out of control, Paige finds Miss Wells aboard, bound and gagged.

The picture is lavish with comedy, and shows many hilarious moments between Paige and his frivolous girl friend. In addition to excellent performances contributed by the romantic leads, fine portrayals are also given by Arthur Loft, John Gallaudet, Thurston Hall, Oscar O'Shea and Ed Fetherston.

A screen vaudeville presentation, one of the most entertaining that has yet been presented in the McCarthy entitled "International Rhythm", Ken Whitely and his bar six cowboys in a western musical featurette "Buckaroo Broadcast". The latest release of the popular "Screen Snapshot" series and the second chapter of the most interesting mystery story, that has been produced "The Spider's Web" a detective mystery story, all combine to make a splendid advance programme preceding the feature picture "The Main Event", that we urge no man or boy to miss.

AT THE BELLE

"A Christmas Carol"
"Listen Darling"

Love in a trailer is a literal description of "Listen Darling," new comedy featuring Freddie Bartholomew and Judy Garland, on the Belle screen.

The picture is a bow of recognition to thousands who have put their permanent or temporary homes on wheels and made all of America their back yard.

Fully half of the action in "Listen Darling," takes place in and around two trailers, requiring the building of two of the smallest motion picture sets on record. For those who like lavishness as the background of their romance and comedy, however, there are other elaborate and expensive sets.

"Listen Darling," is a story of two kids who "kidnap" the girl's mother in the family trailer to prevent her from marrying the town banker and set out upon the ways to find a suitable husband for her.

Mary Astor plays the mother and the "suitors" encountered are Walter Pidgeon and Alan Hale. Gene Lockhart is the unwanted banker and little Scotty Beckett appears as a small but effective menace, who manages to make things mighty uncomfortable for Dan Cupid.

Freddie Bartholomew appears in a sympathetic role that is in sharp contrast to the unpleasant characters he has played in many of his pictures. Judy Garland, besides singing three numbers, has an emotional opportunity such as has not been afforded her to date on the screen.

"Listen, Darling," is based upon Katharine Brush's magazine story of the same name and was directed by Edwin L. Marin.

"A Christmas Carol"

Read by millions for nearly a hundred years, played on the stage and dramatized over the radio countless times, "A Christmas Carol," Charles 'Dickens' immortal story of Yuletie, has at last come to the audience of the screen. Taken directly from the pages of Dickens, the new picture is the companion feature hit which brings Scrooge, Tiny Tim, the Cratchits and the rest of the beloved characters to life in an authentic reproduction of old London and Dickens' day.

Deftly directed by Edwin L. Marin with Reginald Owen, as Scrooge, and Terry Kilburn, English boy actor discovered in "Lord Jeff" as Tiny Tim, the picture reproduces almost every situation and speech exactly as written by the author.

Owen's portrayal of Scrooge is finely balanced and his make-up recreates the original illustrations of the part. Terry Kilburn is appealing as Tiny Tim, and Gene and Kathleen Lockhart as the Cratchits might have stepped from the pages of the book. Barry Mackay, new English actor, is romantically pleasing as Fred, the romantic lead opposite Lynne Craver. The ghost is played convincingly by Leo G. Carroll.

Authentic reproductions of old London, authentic costumes, and authentic Christmas celebrations of the time lend verity to the haunting story.

On Saturday, the Belle Newsreel with its latest world events will also be exhibited. Saturday matinee a new thrilling adventure of "The Fighting Devil Dogs" serial, the title of the new chapter is "The Baited Trap."

AT THE CAPITOL

"Cassidy Bar 20"

Another fast moving and exciting Cassidy outdoor action picture, "Cassidy of Bar 20" is showing at the Capitol Theatre, and, again hard riding Wm. Boyd plays the leading role in a colourful story or romance and rustlers. In this story filmed against the beautiful natural background of the plains country, "Hoppy's" old sweetheart, Nora Lane, emerges from his past to start him on the road to adventure and peril. Her security and very life are threatened by an notorious cattle rustler, Robert Fiske, boss of the wild ranch country in which they live. The story winds up with an exciting gun fight around an old Spanish mission. The invading outlaws fight off the boys from Bar 20 until Hop-A-Long discovers a secret underground passage and surprises the Texas bandits in the rear. On unusual western custom, seldom, if ever, before used as a part of a motion picture plot is seen in "Cassidy Of Bar 20". It is the "Handkerchief Duel" by which gentlemen of the frontier managed to settle disputes with sixshooters at three paces.

Tarzan's Revenge

The second outdoor picture with plenty of action and thrills is 'Tarzan's Revenge' a Edgar Rice Burroughs' story starring two Olympic champions, Glenn Morris and Eleanor Holm.

On The Stage

At nine o'clock tonight patrons of the Capitol will be treated to another stage Show, Ken Soble's Tour For Talent, which promises to include the finest talent of the series to date.

Rangers Score Third Straight Victory Over Canadiens With Alex Shibicky Leading Parade

Performs the "Hat Trick" With Three Goals in Contest

DETROIT EARNS TIE

Come From Behind to Eke Out 3 - 3 Draw With Chicago

(By Jack Calder, Canadian Press Staff Writer).

What New York Rangers would like for Christmas is a victory over the National Hockey League leaders, Boston Bruins, and their stockings bulged today until it seemed that very thing might be inside.

As Rangers headed for their Christmas night meeting with the Bruins at Boston, they sped to a 5-2 win last night over the Canadiens at Montreal and drew to within four points of the top. Coincidentally, the Bruins had to call up Harry Frost from Hershey of the International-American League because of an unabating injury wave. Rangers' recent road showings and Bruins' growing hospital list may lead to the Blueshirts' first success over Boston this season.

Alex Shibicky ushered Rangers to their third straight win over the Habitants with three goals, while Detroit Red Wings stepped past Canadiens into sixth place by coming from far back to tie the Black Hawks 3-3 at Chicago. Canadiens, beaten for the fourth straight time, stayed all alone in the cellar.

Shibicky Line Bags Four

Shibicky and his linemates, Neil and Mac Colville, contributed all but the last Ranger goal, which Clint Smith bagged. As Canadiens showed lack of lustre, Mac opened the scoring in the second period with the aid of his brother Neil and Muzz Patrick. A minute later Shibicky made the score 2-0 on the brothers' assists.

Big Babe Siebert, playing his best rushing game of the year, tried to rally the Frenchmen with an early third-period goal and another after Shibicky had scored his second. But Siebert's punch was the only one the home club had, and Shibicky and Smith closed the goal-getting with a pair within 16 seconds.

Earl Seibert carried a similar drive from the defence for the Black Hawks, to score two early goals, but Chicago faded when Detroit's veterans began to go. In three meetings this term, the Hawks have failed to defeat the Wings.

Seibert scored an unassisted goal and one with the help of the N.H.L's leading scorer, Johnny Gottselig, and Bob Gracie. Chicago's total was completed by Gracie 22 seconds after the second period began.

Trottier Assists

Dave Trottier, who came from retirement last week to join the Wings, began their comeback with a goal from Herbie Lewis. Off Marty Barry carried it along on a relay from Chuck Conacher and Mud Bruneteau, and Carl Liscombe tied the score five minutes before the second chapter closed. The third overtime went almost without event.

Boston's injury problems became more complicated with Manager Art Ross' announcement that Milt Schmidt, high-scoring centre, would be out for 10 days with injuries suffered against Canadiens Tuesday. Winger Charlie Sands and centre Bill Cowley are other injured Bruins.

N. H. L. STARS

(By The Canadian Press)

Alex Shibicky, and Neil and Mac Colville, Rangers, picked up nine scoring points in a 5-2 victory over Canadiens with Shibicky getting three goals, Mac Colville a goal and three assists and Neil Colville two assists.

Babe Siebert, Canadiens, scored both his team's goals against the Rangers.

Earl Seibert, Chicago, scored twice as Black Hawks tied 3-3 with Detroit Red Wings.

Dave Trottier, Detroit, tallied his first N.H.L. goal of the season in second game with Wings and started team on three-goal drive that netted a draw.

BARTERING MAKES PLENTY OF ROOM FOR ROOKIE CROP

Main Movement Has Been Shifting of the "Deadwood"

VETERANS TO MINORS

Giants - Cubs Trade an Even Affair Experts Figure

(By Hugh S. Fullerton, Jr., Associated Press Sports Writer).

New York, Dec. 23 (AP)— Since the world series every major baseball league club except Philadelphia Athletics has figured in the buying, selling, or trading of players, yet the result of autumn ivory bartering seems to be the making of a lot of room for the 1939 rookie crop.

About a half dozen deals were important enough to be loudly announced. They may have profited the participants, but the main movement has been the shifting of "deadwood"—players past their prime or who hadn't proved especially useful in their old positions—either to new spots or out of the big leagues.

Since October Chick Hafey (Reds) and Wild Bill Hallahan (Phillies) have been handed outright releases. Shipped off to the minors were Joe Cascarella and Dee Moore (Reds), Phil Weintraub (Phillies), Bill Cissell Giants, Jim Asbel, Tex Carleton and Coaker Triplett, Cubs, Bobby Reis, Bees, Roy Henshaw, Cards, Gilly Campbell, Dodgers, Bill Harris, Red Sox and Jo-Jo White and Tony Piet, Tigers.

Both Veterans

White and Piet figured in one of the most important deals, the Tigers' purchase of young Freddie Hutchinson from Seattle for a large wad of cash and four players, two of them minor leaguers. Yet they had one thing in common with most of the others: They're veterans who no longer were able to hold regular places against the competition.

Other veterans, most prominent among them Zeke Bonura, passed from one league to another by the waiver route or who caught on with a new club after being released by the old one.

Eight American League clubs couldn't use Bonura, but New York Giants figure he's the man to tend first base and belt homers for them. Brooklyn picked up Luke Sewell, veteran catcher, on waivers from Chicago White Sox. The Dodgers expect him to lend a hand developing some young pitchers as well as relieving Babe Phelps. They also signed on Tony Lazzeri after he obtained his release from the Cubs.

Boston Teams Prominent

The two Boston teams figured most prominently in the bartering of players who still are expected to play major roles in the 1939 season. The Bees got Buddy Hassett, young Jimmy Outlaw and Fred Frankhouse from Brooklyn for Gene Moore, Ira Hutchinson and Joe Stripp, and Al Todd and Johnny Dickshot and cash from Pittsburgh for Ray Mueller.

The Red Sox gave up a couple of prominent players and got a whole flock of new ones, mostly pitchers. They obtained Tom Carey from St. Louis Browns for Pootsie Marcum; Elden Auker, Jake Wade and Chet Morgan from Detroit for Pinky Higgins and Archie McKain, and Denny Galehouse, infielder Tommy Irwin from Cleveland for Ben Chapman and Boze Berger, an infielder from the White Sox for Eric McNair.

The only other deal of major importance was the Giants-Cubs trade of Gus Mancuso, Dick Bartell and Hank Leiber for Billy Jurges, Ken O'Dea and Frank Demaree. From all indications, including arguments as to who got the better of the trade, that was a pretty even affair.

Farr Mellowed But He is More Eager Than Ever and Wiser

(By Alan Randal, Canadian Press Staff Writer).

New York, Dec. 23 (CP)—Tommy Farr undoubtedly has mellowed during his American stay but those who think four straight ring losses could discourage the one-time irascible Welshman have not met up with this big man from the Tonypandy hills. He is more eager than ever—and wiser.

"You watch," he hollered today as he burned 1938's fistic bridges, "by the summer of 1939 I'll be knocking on Joe Louis' door again."

"Last year was the worst year of my life," he added. "I want to wipe it out—everything. I'm going to burn every stitch of the flashy clothes I bought and wade right back to the top."

A "Hungry Man"

Farr, after losing to heavyweight champion Louis in 1937 and to Jimmy Braddock and Maxie Baer in 1938, finally caught up with himself last week when Lou Nova took him 15 round and won. Tommy found he had everything to beat the Californian but condition because nine months of soft living don't disappear with a few weeks training. Now, in his own words, Tommy is once more a "hungry man."

"I love to fight," he fairly shouted. "I love everything about the business. I'm fighting Red Burman next month and I'll be fighting Louis again because I can give him a better battle than Nova, Baer or anybody else. I'm not afraid of him and the public knows it."

A Successful Failure

You might call Farr the most successful failure the ring has known—popular in spite of losing one fight after another since he shocked everybody but himself by going 15 rounds against the thundering mittens of dusky Joe in 1937.

That performance, embellished with dollar signs for the Welshman, came under the heading of triumph—none too easy to take for a former coal miner 23. Tommy went soft. He admitted as much without being reminded of the nifty hats and haberdashery he sported during the past year around about Manhattan's gayer spots. It took Lou Nova to point it out.

Tommy has linked his sock well. He could retire any time though not right after a year in which he spent more dollars than he made. That comes closer to breaking Farr's heart than ever. Joe Louis will. While there are fights to be fought, money to be made and the chance of another shot at Louis, one can expect to hear more about this "hungry man" from Wales.

Inventions are usually made by men under 40, often without scientific training, is the observation of Sir James Swinburne, president of the British Institute of Plastics.

CALLING 'EM

Between the Lines

with Ken J. Colling

A practice long since abandoned in Belleville is being revived this year and should prove valuable no matter from what corner you take observations. We refer to the provisions for skating rinks on all school grounds sponsored by the Belleville Kiwanis Club. Of course the Kiwanis Club had to get the permission of the Board of Education to erect skating rings in all local school grounds, following which the city Public Works Department employees have been busied getting these rinks ready for ice. No doubt the school kiddies will return after the Christmas holidays to find large skating rinks in all local school tive grounds. Owing to the fact it would be practically impossible to have proper supervision, no hockey, will be tolerated on these public rinks, although adults will have access to these skating facilities at night. Maybe when another year rolls around facilities for hockey can be included, following which a school league would be quite practical. At any rate the erection of free open air rinks in Belleville can almost be called "the Kiwanis Club's Christmas present to the city," and then they'll try to tell you there's no Santa Claus

When Queen's "Collegians" vaulted into the leadership of the Van Horne Memorial Cup series they did so in a most convincing manner. "Flat" Walsh's "students" are not only leading the group, but have scored a total of 22 goals in five games, while the Belleville Redmen have chalked up 19 in four games with one to go, while the Garrison have bagged 14 with one game left to play. With the clubs headed into the home stretch of the Van Horne series, the big race for the top rung is on. Today Queen's is leading the loop with seven points and all their games completed. Belleville and the Garrison, who are tied for second place, have six points each and one left to play. The Garrison meet Kingston City on Monday, while the Redmen tangle with the R.C.A.F. "Flyers" next Wednesday. Upon the outcome of these two games hinge the final league standing before the play-offs commence. The league play-offs are as follows—the first and third placed clubs will meet while the second and fourth placed teams battle it out with the two ultimate winners clashing in the league finals. Belleville is definitely assured of a play-off berth, however.

To those whom it may concern or interest, Tommy Pedder, International 123 pound weight-lifting champion, will give an exhibition of his lifting prowess at the Belleville "Y" next Wednesday night. Other weightlifters will give demonstrations, but Pedder will make an attempt on his present championship weight. This exhibition will be free to the public and held in conjunction with the Y.M.C.A. Christmas holiday program of activities.

"Bunny" Morganson, sports commentator in the Toronto Evening Telegram recently referred to this corner as being "one of the better umpires in Eastern Ontario." (Peterboro scribes please note). Morganson was commenting on our recent note relative to the Peterboro hockey moguls taking Frank Buckland back into the fold as coach of their puck squad in a manner similar to a drowning man grasping at the proverbial straw. The Toronto scribe seemed to think we had something in our remarks, which apparently cut deeply into the Liftlock City hockey quick. Incidentally the Petes took a 6 to 3 shellacking at Owen Sound last Tuesday, but were minus four of their regular players. Maybe the "Trappers" eased off after scoring three goals in the initial period.

Ernie Nevers, former pitcher of the St. Louis Browns, who starred at Stanford University before joining the American leaguers, has been named head coach of the Chicago Cardinals' professional team of the National Football League. He recently retired as assistant coach at the University of Iowa.

Do you remember when Tommy Burns, Canadian-born world heavyweight champion, lost his title to Jack Johnson at Sydney, Australia, 30 years ago on Christmas Day. Police stopped the fight in the 14th round. Johnson was the first negro to hold the title.

No doubt we can expect a revival of sports in and around the Trenton Airport for the next three years. Wing Commander C. N. McEwan, the C.O. of the R.C.A.F. is a former Western Canada athlete prior to the war, being prominent in hockey circles. Then Dave Harding, who will long be remembered as a member of the famous Queen's University football squads in the heydays of Batstone, Leadley, et al, well over a decade ago. Harding's first sport love is still the fall classic and no doubt we will see Dave leading the "Flyers" as a player next year. In an interview with Bill Walshe, Kingston's sports scribe, the following conversation took place between Walshe and Harding: "We asked him if he planned to coach the Trenton team in football next year and he replied that he would probably play a few games if he had the time.

"What do you mean," we asked, "going to come out of retirement?"

"Who ever said I retired," he wanted to know and then he admitted turning out with the Ottawa Rough Riders this year and figured he still has several more good years or football in the future.

Taking a look at his solid frame his alert manner and knowing his knowledge and love of the great fall sport it is easy to believe he can still hold his own with many in senior football today."

It appears to be open season on goal-keepers in the Van Horne series. On Wednesday night a total of an even dozen goals were scored when Queens beat Belleville, but last night the boys set up a new high in scoring as the R.C.A.F. "Flyers" came from behind to win over Perth by a 7 to 6 score. With the exception of positions, the Van Horne series is all settled after last night's tussle, Queens, Garrison, Belleville and the Flyers all qualifying for the play-offs in the loop. Of course there will still be some "jockeying" for play-off berths, however.

CONNIE MACK, 76, WANTS ANOTHER WINNING TEAM

Leader of Athletics is Celebrating Birthday Today

NOT TO RETIRE

Says Yankees Are Greatest Ball Club in History of Game

(By John H. Reitinger, Associated Press Sports Writer).

Philadelphia, Dec. 23 (AP)—Connie Mack, 76 today, will not be completely satisfied with life unless he produces another winning baseball team.

The tall leader of Philadelphia Athletics planned no particular birthday celebration but as he reflected on more than 50 years in baseball he said: "If I had it all to do over again, I wouldn't change a thing."

"Looking back over the years, I have had bad ones in the game, but I also have had many, many happy ones," he said. "My ambition at this stage of life is to give Philadelphia a good ball club again.

"To me retirement is as far away as the stars. That only comes up in the minds of other people; never in mine. When I should go will be known to me first. When my players come to me and tell me to do this or that or question my judgment, I'll know it is time to quit. When I cannot think for myself, I'll step out."

Mack owns 50 per cent of the ball club, and while he does not have legal control, he has the confidence and consent of the other 50 per cent to run the club as he deems best. To Connie Mack, who has managed the Athletics 38 years, no ball club is great unless it repeats. He believes one should repeat a third time, and said:

Yanks Best Ball Club

"In my opinion the Yanks are the best club of all time. I didn't put them in that class until the last world series. Before that, Baltimore Orioles of the 90s, Chicago Cubs of 1906 to 1909 and the Athletics of 1910-14 were, to me, the three greatest clubs.

"The Athletics of 1914 probably would have gone on for years if it had not been for the Federal League. This league and not any desire to sell players caused me to break up that great team.

"The league offered some of our players three times the salary they were getting—it caused dissatisfaction among them and resulted in our losing the 1914 world series to Boston Braves in four games."

Connie Mack regarded Ty Cobb as the greatest ball player of all time. "He was in a class by himself—there has been none like him since he left the game." The greatest pitcher, Mack said, was Christy Mathewson.

TRENTON RALLIES TO SHADE PERTH

Flyers Score Two Goals in Last Minute to Win 7 - 6

Kingston, Dec. 23 (Special)— A sensational last-minute rally for two goals gave Trenton a 7 to 6 win over Perth in a George Vanhorne memorial game here last night. After holding a commanding lead early in the game, Perth pecked away at the Flyers' lead and scored three goals in the third session to go in front. The Flyers broke loose in the last minute to tie the score with about 45 seconds to play, and then collect another with about 30 seconds to finish.

The win improved Trenton's position in the standings and practically assured them of a playoff place, while the defeat virtually eliminated Perth.

Legris, Lecompte and McNeeley played a prominent part in the win.

Trenton: Goal, Gibson; defense, Oleskevis and Jamieson; centre, Lecompte; wings, McNeeley and Legris; subs, Baldwin, McNab, Johnston, Brackenbury and Todd.

Perth: Goal, W. Rutherford; defense, Howie and Banville; centre, R. White; wings, Healey and K. Richardson; subs, K. Rutherford, Beatty, Goodfellow and Elmsley.

Sports Roundup

(By Drew Middleton, Associated Press Sports Writer).

New York, Dec. 23 (CP)—Birthday congratulations to Connie Mack, great manager, great sportsman and first citizen of Philadelphia—76 years young today, Connie says he'll keep command of the Athletics till he's 80...Make it 90, Connie, and give the game a break ....Freddie McLeod of Washington, the United States Professional Golfers Association's senior champion, won't play more than 435 rounds this year....Which makes J. Smith Ferrebee like a piker at that, doesn't it?

They never do anything by halves in Kentucky basketball .... The other night Lewisburg beat Chandler's Chapel 107-5, while at Smith's Grove the home team was licking Horse Cave 1-0 because Horse Cave didn't show up.... Jimmy Aiken, football coach at Akron U., sewed up one of the likeliest football prospects in Ohio the other day in Lloyd Miller, Kenmore high school back. Miller is big, a fine punter and pass receiver and a tricky runner.

Walter O. Briggs, owner of Detroit Tigers, will see his heroes in a few more games next season.... They got rid of Elden Auker, the pitcher, and Briggs never would watch them when Auker was the hurler....Had no confidence in him ....Bad news for football linemen ....Allen (Bally) Compton and William Stewart, head coach and first assistant at Springfield (O.) high school, have invented a football charging sled....It is a dainty machine made of oak and weighing only 1,100 pounds.

Lou Gehrig—who is a bit peeved at reports he and the missus are hiring a butler—got four points on the honorable mention list among money-making western movie stars ....Only 938 points behind the leader....Clark Griffith, owner of Washington Senators, finally has broken down and admitted the Yanks are a pretty fair ball club... Can't hide anything from that guy ....Hey Mr. Griffith, do you think the automobile is here to stay?

OSHAWA'S G-MEN IN SECOND PLACE

Third - Period Drive Nets Oshawa a 4 - 1 Decision

Oshawa, Ont., Dec. 23 (CP)—Oshawa's G-Men were still alone in second place of the Ontario Hockey Associations Senior "A" group today immediate threat of their keen rivals, Port Colborne Sailors, shaken at least temporarily.

A win for the Tars here last night would have sent them scurrying past Oshawa into the second notch, but they failed to hold off a third-period drive by the G-Men and dropped a 4-1 decision. The victory gave Oshawa 11 points, four less than the leading Toronto Goodyears, but three more than either Port Colborne or St. Catharines.

For two periods the Sailors held their own and went into the final session with the score tied 1-1. They took the offensive early in the closing 20 minutes and provided the G-men with openings that brought three goals. The Ports also spoiled their chances by playing shorthanded three times during the third period due to penalties, while the G.-Men were understaffed but once.

Smith sent the G-Men in front early in the opening period but Gooney McGowan kept the Sailors in the hunt when he scored on a solo effort. The second period went scoreless and in the third, Lex Chisholm, Cooper and Doc Rowden scored in order for Oshawa.

FIVE MAN BOARD

To Study Proposition

Members of the commission, which will study the proposed 2,500-mile, $20,000,000 Alaskan highway are: Hon. Charles Stewart, Chairman of the Canadian section of the International Joint Commission; Brig.-Gen. T. L. Tremblay of Quebec City; J. M. Wardle of the Department of Mines and Resources here; Arthur Dixon of Victoria, an official of the public works department; and J. W. Spencer of Victoria.

The official announcement said: "It is expedient that the Canadian Government should have before it a full report on all aspects of the construction before any decision with regard thereto is taken.

The Prime Minister also informed the parliamentary writers that Canada will be represented at the meeting of the Wheat Advisory Committee in London next Jan. 10. There has been no delegate chosen yet.

Appeasement Reached

Reports were current in Liberal circles last night that some form of an appeasement had been reached in the controversy between the Prime Minister and Premier Hepburn of Ontario.

W. A. Fraser, Liberal member of Parliament for Northumberland, and Ross Gray, chief Liberal whip in the Commons, expressed confidence on their return from a visit to Premier Hepburn, that the next federal election would be fought by a united Liberal party.

There was no announcement on the long-awaited diplomatic appointments. Mackenzie King said, however, that the King has approved the government's choices of the new ministers to the Paris legation and the dual legation to serve Brussels and the Hague. The approval of the foreign governments concerned has not been received yet and the announcement will not be made until that endorsation arrives in Ottawa.

Deputy to Retire

It was learned that W. A. Found, Deputy Minister of Fisheries, will retire within several days from the government post. He reaches the retirement age of 65 tomorrow. It was not known who will succeed him.

The next cabinet meeting will not be held until next Thursday and as the capital settled into the holiday doldrums the feature political development reports an accord had been reached in the intra-party controversy between Mr. Mackenzie King and Premier Hepburn of Ontario.

The Prime Minister, when questioned about the reports at the press conference, said he was not aware of them but that "it was a result much to be desired."

In Liberal circles here, however, the impression was growing that there had been an appeasement.

The Government is understood to have the major part of its legislative program completed and after a few more cabinet meetings will have all in readiness for the parliamentary opening next Jan. 12.

ANTI-SEMITIC

600,000 "full" Jews and 200,000 described as "fractional" Jews, in a total population of about 9,000,000.

Appalled By Regulations.

The Hungarian Jewish community, expecting the proposed legislation would be severe, nevertheless was appalled by the sweeping regulations limiting the right of franchise and restricting participation in provisioned businesses to from six to twelve per cent of the total number of persons occupied in the various callings.

The government's attitude, however, was that the proposed Hungarian law was moderate in comparison with some statutes in Germany and Italy, because there was a provision for its gradual enforcement. It was not to go into full effect for five years.

Vote Separately.

As presented last night to the government party of national unity, the projected legislation would also provide that Jews vote separately, thirty days after non-Jews, although the purpose of such postponement was not clarified; the government would be empowered to regulate Jewish emigration; Jews would be limited to six per cent of the total engaged in journalism, engineering, law, medicine and state employment, and in business up to twelve per cent; employers would report at intervals of six months on progress they were making in complying; no Jew could be elected to the Upper House of Parliament; the interior ministry would be authorized to invalidate citizenship of Jews naturalized after July 1, 1914, and to invalidate any citizenship acquired fraudulently; no Jews would be permitted in leading positions in the theatres and motion pictures.

Prompt party approval was anticipated for the proposal, which parliament was due to receive today and vote upon after the Christmas recess.

The reaction of Hungarian Nazis, who had been clamoring for anti-Jewish legislation, was not immediately clarified. Their first expression was one of curiously-voiced dissatisfaction. They accused Imredi of "stealing their program".

Just Suppose that He's YOUR BOY!

AND, while we're still in a fanciful mood, let's suppose he has suddenly become seriously ill—

Then, imagine yourself to be in financial difficulties—your income, never more than $900.00 a year, has ceased altogether because the factory has shut down temporarily.

You think your little boy may be dying—the doctor orders you to rush with him to the Hospital for Sick Children — you learn it's Pneumonia of the most serious type — that serums alone will cost over $400.00, to say nothing of the special graduate nursing and expert medical attention required, nor of the cost of hospitalization itself.

Could you be turned away because of this? There is only one answer to this question. It has been the answer of the Hospital for Sick Children for 63 years—a youngster's real need for hospital care and medical attention is the only ticket of admission required. Race, creed or financial circumstances are not considered. We know the people of Ontario want it that way.

This Hospital has met every emergency which has developed during the 63 years of its existence. It is famous throughout the civilized world for the success and efficiency of its medical and nursing staffs and for the low cost at which it is operated.

And who pays for this humanitarian work? The doctors give their time absolutely free. The Ontario Government pays 60c per patient per day and the patient or the patient's municipality pays $1.75 on the same basis. That leaves over $1.00 per patient per day of bare cost for which we must appeal annually to humane and generous citizens. This Hospital does NOT share in the funds collected by the Federation for Community Service because patients are admitted from all over Ontario.

This year, over $83,000.00 is needed. That means over ten thousand donations if they were to average $8.00 each—or over twenty thousand averaging $4.00. Certainly, a staggering total! So, please make your gift as large as you possibly can. If you cannot afford more—remember that even a dollar bill helps pay for the care of somebody's baby.

Kindly mail your donation to the Appeal Secretary, 67 College Street, Toronto. We cannot afford to use any of our much-needed revenue for canvassers or other organized effort to collect money.

VITAL BATTLES ARE SCHEDULED IN SOCCER LOOP

Derby County and Everton Play Twice Over Holiday

PITCHES QUITE HARD

Scottish League to Play Heavy Schedule at New Years

London, Dec. 23 (CP)—Vital leadership battles between Derby County and Everton stand out on the heavy Christmas holiday program in the English Football League. The pair, counted the strongest clubs in England, meet in home and away matches, Monday and Tuesday.

Only two points divides Derby County, pacemaker for many weeks, from its Lancashire rival. Apart from lapses last week, both squads have been unbeaten for several weeks. The County opens the Christmas series Saturday with an away match at Wolverhampton. Boxing Day the Midlanders visit Everton with the return match at Derby the following day. Everton engages the neighbouring Blackpool eleven in its Saturday preliminary.

After several days intense cold, frozen grounds softened yesterday to the relief of managers, who were worried over the possibility of injuries to players on iron-hard pitches. If the weather continues mild the holiday matches will be played on grounds resembling quagmires rather than football gridirons.

Three Games in four days

Teams in the four divisions of the league will play three games in four days and for some clubs that means spending Christmas Day on trains and in hotels.

Sheffield Wednesday noted second division team, will line up with Catlin and Fallon. The pair were injured when the car in which they were riding crashed into a telegraph post during a snowstorm.

Soccer players in Scotland fill only the regular weekly list of matches but the forthcoming New Year's holiday find them engaging in as many games as their colleagues are required to play at Christmas.

DESPITE a minor annoyance, this should be a day of great merriment and high spirits, with many tokens of good will, sound friendship and a definite gesture of preferment and favoritism from employers, superiors or those in high places. There is promise of cherished advancement, with new plans for the future bringing much good feeling and gratification.

If It Is Your Birthday

Those whose birthday it is may be assured of a year of much happiness and good fortune, with the prospect of promotion, friendly feeling of employers, superiors and others whose preferment may be sought. Success and happiness are assured.

A child born on this day may be talented, willing and ambitious. Its happy disposition and distinctive personality may win it advantage from influential persons.

His Full Stature

By FLORENCE MELLISH

"It's five minutes of 11," said Alma.

John Glendinning glanced carelessly at the assembly room clock, then back to Alma, with frank admiration on his boyish face. The girls thought her too pale and serious to be called exactly pretty, but with the flush of her cheeks and the happiness in her candid blue eyes she was lovely tonight.

"Does that make any difference, Alma?"

"I should think so! Aunt Harriet said I musn't stop a minute after the clock struck 11."

John was not sure whether he preferred the strips of bright sidewalk where he could watch the effect of the moonlight on as many of Alma's fair locks as her fascinator left unprotected, or the longer dark spaces which gave them both a delicious sense of privacy. But what he liked best was going by the Quaker Burying Ground, when Alma's clasp on his arm would tighten and she would allow him to take her hand unreproved. Tonight she shivered a little and seemed almost to return the pressure. It seemed to John, in his tongue-tied fervor, that if he did not seize this opportunity there would never be another.

"Alma", he heard himself saying, his own voice sounding strange, "Alma, I love you. I don't mean just friends. I want to marry you."

"Oh, John!" she gasped. "We couldn't be married."

"Not now but some time. I'm earning my keep now in Uncle Cy's store and after graduation I'll have regular wages. We could be engaged, Alma. I could give you a nice little ring and we'd have it announced. Then Neal Connor wouldn't be always butting in."

"Perhaps, John; but I must ask Aunt Harriet first."

"Oh, of course," he assented, with a resigned laugh.

The next night but one was the night of the debate between Wakefield academy and Putney High. John and Alma waited in the shadow of a Norway spruce until the others had passed on. Then the two walked slowly down Academy street.

John steadied his voice to ask: "What did your Aunt Harriet say?"

"Oh, she says we're just two children and she can't hear of any such nonsense."

"I expected as much," he answered gloomily.

"You see, I haven't learned to make raised doughnuts or turn the heel of a sock properly, and she says you haven't got your growth yet."

"That's a lie," he cried fiercely, "that is—I think Miss Wetherell is mistaken."

"And, you see, she remembers you in your first long trousers and I think she thinks it was last year you had them."

"Very likely she thinks it was last week. But we can go on being friends, Alma and by and by we shall be grown up."

The two went on and turned into Main street at the corner drug store. John wanted to stop there for ice cream sodas, but remembered miserably that he had only 14 cents in his pocket. The heading of a paper in the window caught his eye.

"What!" he cried.

He rushed in and rushed out again.

"Alma, we're in it!"

"In what?"

"In war, I mean."

"Oh, John! must we really fight?"

"We must, little girl. We must fight to help end the fight."

Miss Harriet Wetherell and her niece sat on the porch knitting. They seemed to be always knitting now. Miss Harriet was president of the Wakefield branch of the Red Cross society, and her face had taken on a few more lines and an added sense of responsibility. Alma had been graduated with her class in June. John had left the academy to enlist.

Alma, very sweet in blue and white gingham, held up an olive drab sock, with the heel properly turned, for her aunt's inspection.

"Good afternoon, ladies" came in a deep, assured voice from the bottom of the terrace.

A bronzed, hardy-looking young man came bounding up the granite steps. Miss Harriet dropped three stitches and Alma dropped her knitting. Both sprang to their feet.

John greeted Miss Harriet first, squaring his shoulders and looking into her appraising eyes. He did not flush or flinch.

"John," she said, "you are the image of your father, and he was a good-looking man, I think," she added, "you are about the same height."

John turned to the throbbing Alma with his heart in his eyes. He had lost his boyish stoop, and he carried his 5 feet 11 inches proudly. For John Glendinning knew that he had attained to the full stature of a man.

TORONTO STOCKS

Toronto, Dec. 23 (CP)—Volume dropped to 277,000 shares for the first three hours of trading on Toronto Exchange today. Lack of demand had no weakening effect on prices. Most groups were up and the four indices registered gains by noon.

Massey-Harris pfd. stood out among the industrials with an advance of 3 1-4, presumably on the prospect of a favorable refunding operation. Massey common also advanced. Steels advanced generally, gains ranging up to a point or more and the senior oils, foods and beverages were firm.

Moderate gains appeared in the base metal and gold groups. Waite-Amulet recovered to $8 and Noranda and International Nickel posted fractional gains. Among the penny golds, Broulan and Falkenham were off.

Among the western oils prices were higher for Home, Calgary-Edmonton and Davies and lower for Okalta.

WALL STREET CLOSE

New York, Dec. 23 (AP)—Piloted by rails and pivotal industrials, the stock market today extended the advance which got under way late in the previous session.

Gains ran to a point or so at the best and the list generally rode over profit taking without a great deal of difficulty. The pace quickened on buying intervals and slowed during the infrequent declines. Transfers were about 1,400,000 shares.

RECEIVES ACCLAMATION

Peterborough, Ont., Dec. 23 (CP)—Mayor James Hamilton was returned for a second term by acclamation at the annual nominations held today. Acclamations were also accorded E. R. Shirley.

Ex-Convict Loses Out in Gun Duel

New York, Dec. 23—(AP)— A gunman who attempted a $25,000 rare coin robbery tried his hand at a gun duel with his intended victim and finished in the morgue today.

Police identified the gunman as Albert Weiner, 39, whose police record showed him to be an ex-convict, auto thief, and veteran of 18 arrests since 1919.

Victor in the duel, in the offices of Rud Kohler, Incorporated, coin dealers, was Edmund May, assistant manager.

Weiner and a second man, who escaped, demanded the contents of the company's vaults in their attempted robbery yesterday. May ducked into an adjoining office, obtained a revolver and fired seven shots as Weiner fired at him.

Wounded in the head and chest, Weiner died seven hours later in a hospital.

BIG HOG MARKET AT RIDGETOWN

Ridgetown, Ont., Dec. 23—(CP)—The Ridgetown market handled 8,000 pigs in 1938, enough pork to supply everyone in Ontario with a dinner with a second meal for the unemployed. Estimated total weight was 1,280,000 pounds, sufficient for 3,840,000 meals.

DISSECTING ROMANCE

An important women's magazine, circulating largely on this continent, has asked its subscribers to suggest certain characteristics in which men failed to demonstrate their worth in the past few years.

The results of the poll are interesting.

Thus, it is intriguing to know that the chief charge that ladies bring against them lately is that the latter are not romantic enough; they are more interested, in other words, in business and sports than in women.

There are various other complaints that women on this continent have to make of their menfolk, but they are all rather trifling until we get down to the exceedingly unjust charge that man neglects his personal appearance — that most men are careless in the matter of having a shave.

We don't believe it. If shaving is half so pleasant as the advertising columns depict it, a man would be an utter ass to carry around a load of sticky whiskers when a few feather-light touches of modern shaving contrivances would rid him of the encumbrance.

The final and most bitter complaint that women make about men is their unwillingness or neglect to help their wives with the baby.

Now we believe the women have got something there.

The genuine gentleman for 1939 will be a lad who takes his turn walking the floor when the occasion calls for it. He will make essential changes in the baby's wardrobes with neatness and dispatch. He will whip up the midnight bottle with the same skill and nonchalance wherewith he would throw together a batch of cocktails.

So one hastens to deny the allegation that men lack romance. We admit, with reluctance, that, as a nurse-maid, father is a flop.—Vancouver Sun.

VALUE OF CHORES

The farm chore was glorified by Dr. John Dearness, oldest living graduate of the University of Western Ontario, who addressed the assembly of students and faculty at the annual prize day exercises. Speaking on "Student Responsibilities," Dr. Dearness emphasized the fact that a sense of responsibility brought boys and girls from the little red school house of Canada to prominent positions in public life. "From definition, observation and experience," Dr. Dearness said, "blessed be chores!"—St. Marys Journal-Argus.

WHITE CHRISTMAS LIKELY IN ONTARIO

Today's Storm Adds Two to Four Inches Snow in Many Parts of Province

By the Canadian Press

A "partially white" Christmas was the best the weatherman could promise Canada today in the way of weather for the coming week-end. Eastern sections of the Dominion will see snow upon the ground—if it isn't melted by the higher temperatures in sight—but a green Yuletide is in prospect for the west.

As a fairly heavy snowfall left most of Ontario covered to a depth of from two to four inches, forecaster Frank O'Donnell of the Dominion Meteorological Bureau said in Toronto: "There's not much indication of a really cold Christmas. No extreme cold is in sight and the weather generally will be milder."

Fair weather and moderate temperatures were forecast for western Canada which, in common with other sections of the country, so far has enjoyed the mildest pre-Christmas weather in years. Snow and rain is in prospect for the east tonight with rising temperatures.

Of all the provinces, Ontario had the best chance of enjoying a white Christmas. Heavy falls of snow were reported from eastern, central and western sections of the province. Temperatures hovered around the freezing mark, 32 degrees above zero, and the forecast was that they would go higher.

A near blizzard left Peterborough streets covered to a depth of several inches of snow. The heaviest fall of the winter was reported from Kingston but the fall did not extend as far east as Ottawa where snow that fell in recent days had all but disappeared from city streets.

Snow fell intermittently in Toronto and other central Ontario centres while the fall was general throughout western Ontario. Two inches fell at Woodstock and at Galt sleigh bells were heard for the first time this winter after an all-night fall. Snow shovels were necessary in Galt, Chatham, Kitchener, St. Thomas and other points reported one to four-inch falls.

THE WINDSORS

—The visit of Mr. Chamberlain and Lord Halifax to the Duke of Windsor, when they also met the Duchess of Windsor, is the first official meeting with the Duke since his abdication. The meeting with the Gloucesters was a family matter.

So far the Duke and Duchess have not been visited by any members of the French Government, and when they lunched at the British Embassy it was a private affair with no French official guests. The visit of the British Premier and Foreign Secretary definitely marks a new stage in the position of affairs.

There is reason to believe that the development has come about after a decision of the Duchess that she is no longer concerned about the title and rank of "Royal Highness." As that question was the only important one that delayed the return of the Windsors to England, it is now expected that they will be visiting London in the new year. — Manchester Guardian.

Movie 'Privates' Have Easy Life

Hollywood, Dec. 23 (AP)—When Hollywood movie-makers stage a war, the armies always get out of the trenches by Christmas.

Paramount has just finished redoing a section of the Galician campaign in 1916 for "Hotel Imperial". It's been a model war—good pay, few bullets, almost no hardships.

Battles were reserved for ice, sunshiny days. When it rained, everybody moved inside and hero Ray Milland made love to heroine Isa Miranda.

The ordinary private, when there was fighting to do, had his gun politely handed to him in the morning, cleaned and ready for service. He didn't even have to load it.

At night, he relinquished it to a property man and went home for a peaceful sleep in his own soft bed.

If the private's beard needed trimming, a make-up man attended to it. If his pants got torn going through a barbed wire entanglement, a wardrobe expert did the patching.

Convenience was the watchword of the director. In one scene, some Austrians were hurling hand grenades against "Russian troops", but because of a barricade, couldn't quite find the mark with right-handed throws.

The director eased the situation. He sent in 20 left-handed grenade throwers.

MISS F.E. CARROLL

(Gananoque)

Friends in Belleville of Miss Frances Elizabeth Carroll, will learn with deep regret of her death which occurred at Gananoque this Friday morning, Dec. 23rd.

The late Miss Carroll resided in Belleville for some years and filled most efficiently the position of Principal of St. Agnes School, prior to coming to Belleville she was a valued member of the teaching staff at Bishop's Strachan School, Toronto. She was the daughter of the late Rev. John Carroll.

For some years past Miss Carroll made her home in Gananoque Two weeks ago she suffered a stroke; she had, however, been in failing health for some time.

During her residence in Belleville Miss Carroll was a faithful member of St. Thomas' Church and took an interest in the work of the parish. By many friends she was held in high regard for the many fine traits of character which she possessed.

Surviving her are two sisters, Miss Emily Carroll, Gananoque, and a married sister in Mallorytown; one nephew, Mr. J. L. Carroll, Brockville.

The funeral will take place at Gananoque on Saturday afternoon, Dec. 24th.

GOODWILL EMISSARY

Anthony Eden apparently got along well with everybody whom he met in the United States, from the President down. He received a boisterous farewell as he boarded the Queen Mary and his visit was of just one week's duration. Few men can ever claim to have crowded so much inside one week as did the British statesman and his consort. Or should we say British politician, because Anthony Eden certainly had the versatility and savoir faire, or what it takes to have made himself so much persona grata, without one sour note being sounded anywhere in the great free and unrestrained press of the United States.—St. Catharines Standard.

Butter Prices Drift Lower

Toronto, Dec. 23.—Easier prices appeared in butter, while eggs remained unchanged on the Toronto open produce market yesterday, according to reports issued by the Dominion Department of Agriculture.

The butter market drifted lower under continued slow trading. Offerings were still light, but with the odd car of the Western product available, supplies were enough to cover the requirements of the buyers. One car of Western regraded butter sold locally at 21 1-4c, and others were offered at 21 1-2c. Ontario creamery solids moved at 21 1-4 to 21 1-2c for No. 1 grades.

Churning cream held steady at 21c for No. 1 grades (country truck prices).

Quotations held unchanged on a quiet egg market, with no interest being shown. Graded shipments traded at 33c for grade A-large, 29c for medium, 27c for pullets, 25c for B's and 22c for C grades.

Creamery butter prints to retailers were 22 1-2c to 23c and solids 22c to 22 1-2c.

Graded egg shipments in used free cases were offered at 35c a dozen for A-large, 29c for A-medium, 28c for A-pullets, 24c to 25c for B-large and 21 1-2c for C. Receipts 395 cases.

Local Amateurs Seeking Recognition

Local amateurs seeking recognition in the entertainment world, will compete on the fourth consecutive program of Ken Soble's "Tour of Talent" contests at the Capitol Theatre tonight. Weekly winners are awarded gold watches and cameras, while the grand winner of the Belleville contests will appear on Ken Soble's All-Canadian radio broadcast at the termination of the series.

Augmenting this week's program at the Capitol will be last week's winner amateurs including George Shephard, Belleville's new-found boy tenor, who sang his way into the hearts of local theatregoers last week as first prize winner. Also George Culliver and Cecil Rogers, who were second in choice last week, will appear as guest artists tonight. Eight new amateur contestants will compete for winning honors on tonight's program.

LOST WHILE HUNTING HOUND COMES HOME

Lost during the deer season in the vicinity of Salmon Lake this year, Sport a young hound owned by W. C. West, Stirling, former Warden of the county, was recovered in the north country last week by J. A. Shannon, game warden of Marmora section, and has been returned to its owner. The animal was thin and worn appearing, and had apparently lived on frugal pickings since deserting the camp during the hunting season.

CUSTOMS PARCEL RUSH NOW BEING REACHED

One of the busiest places in the city at the present time is the office of Customs in the Post Office building where a busy staff has been attempting this week to keep up with the rush of parcels destined for local residents from points throughout the entire United States and many British and foreign mailing points. The peak of activity was reached about the middle of this week, and from now on a gradual decline will be noted, it is expected by the office. Parcels of United States origin have constituted the bulk of those received here, it was stated. Volume is well up to that experienced in good years.

Central Cheesemakers Post Group Photos

Group photographs of members of the Central Cheesemakers' Association and visitors to the recent British Empire Exhibition and convention held in the city, have been sent by the local office of the Association to practically every government office or dairying in Canada, the British Isles, and other sections of the Empire where considerable interest was shown in the exhibition.

EXHIBITION CHEESE GIFT OF MAKERS

Neatly packaged pieces of fine, old cheese of exhibition quality are being distributed today from the local office of J. L. Irwin, Honorary President, by officers of the Central Ontario Cheesemakers' Association to members of city council, representatives of the local clergy and others who assisted in the recent British Empire Cheese Ex and convention of the Association in the city. The custom has become an annual one of the organization.

GARBAGE COLLECTORS WILL HOLIDAY MONDAY

Notice was given at the city hall this morning that no garbage collection will be made on Monday, observed as Christmas Day. Residents on the route covered by the Monday collection weekly are asked not to place out garbage containers until Thursday, the next regular collection.

SCARLET BIRD IS SEEN ON LAWN

A large bird with scarlet plumage was seen on the rear lawn at 46 Alexander Street this morning. It is thought to have been a southern grosbeak. The bird stayed about for some time.

Banks On '35 Accord.

Many of the right-wing and centre deputies, who had been wavering, swung into line after the government's narrow escape, admitting they were afraid to run the risk of overthrowing the government by refraining from voting or by voting against the premier.

After his victory in the chamber, Daladier turned immediately to meet Italy's denunciation yesterday of the 1935 Laval-Mussolini agreement regarding Tunisia.

French observers interpreted the denunciation as an indication that Mussolini finally was ready to follow up the "unofficial" anti-French demonstrations with an official notice that Italy was not pleased with the Mediterranean situation.

Daladier's friends declared the premier was prepared to meet "Mussolini's demands with a flat refusal to go beyond the 1935 agreement in territorial concessions.

NEW TREATMENT

This discovery — by Dr. Hector Mortimer, Dr. J. B. Collip and Dr. Percy Wright in the McGill Department of Biochemistry—justified the experimental use of sex hormones on persons suffering the disease. It was found the treatment was "infinitely better" than any other in use, that it effectively controlled and rapidly made the disease inoffensive although not yet showing it definitely curable.

Injections of Sex Hormones.

The physicians found also that the nasal injections of sex hormones improved the hearing of patients. Research showed a "common background" in persons suffered ozoena and those suffering progressive deafness—those who became deaf while still comparatively young. It also found that ozoena and progressive deafness might be found in the same person, in the same family or in different generations of the same family. Such cases treated with sex hormones all showed definite improvement in hearing. So far 55 persons have been experimented upon.

Since there was no adequate apparatus available to obtain sufficiently accurate data on the hearing changes as a result of the treatment, McGill University and Montreal General Hospital cooperated to build a sound proof room. Constructed to plans by Cecil McDougall, architect, it is a room within a room. The outer shell is of foot-thick concrete at top, bottom and sides. From its ceiling is suspended another room measuring ten feet in each direction. The space between the two rooms is of sound-proof material.

An apparatus designed by E. Godfrey Burr of McGill Engineering Department consists of an oscillator which provides a sound pitch of varying density. The patient sits exactly one metre from the apparatus and presses electric light buttons to indicate whether he hears the faint or loud sounds. The American Oto-Laryngological Association assisted in construction of the room.

RAIL TRAFFIC HERE RISES IN VOLUME

Christmas traffic on the local division of the Canadian National Railways has increased noticeably during the past few days, though the peak is expected to be reached over the week end, it was reported this morning. An appearance of activity and bustle is noted with the arrival and departure of nearly every train at the north station. This week some of the main line specials have been run in two sections east-bound from Belleville to Montreal, and have been made up in the local yards.

Children's Letters to Santa Minor Problem for P. O.

Childish hearts of the city still beat firm in the conviction of a benign, bewhiskered Santa Claus.

Santa is genuine, a personality of friendly giving, jolly laugh, whose fixed address is no further away than the letter box on the corner of Front and Bridge Street, or a corner box on Victoria and Ann. And up to the present between thirty-five and forty childish believers in Saint Nicholas have testified to this by their mailing of letters to their patron saint of gifts and goodness at Christmas, to the Belleville Post Office.

This is the number of letters that have so far been received by the local office, with an address "To Santa Claus" it is reported by Postmaster J. V. C. Trualsch.

Even at the risk of disturbing the supreme confidence of the childish writers whose tiny scrawls in the face of the envelopes carry a world of interest to the more imaginative writers, it must be admitted, however, that not all these letters will find Santa. Inflexible, immutable as the laws of the Medes and Persians are the regulations of the Dominion Postal Department which prescribe that all letters for which no addresses can be found must be sent to the dead letter office at Ottawa, and it is to this last authority of improperly addressed missives that the mail will be despatched.

Not that any letter to "Santy" is improperly addressed, because Santa's address is "Anywhere in the world." Santa of the North Pole, Santa of the Belleville Post Office, Santa of Canada, the addresses to which the majority of the letters are sent, are one and the same person. Santa will get these letters, childish writers be assured of that. Perhaps not the literal ones that have been mailed. But he will find the addresses of the writers, just as surely as the letters have been written, it is further confidently predicted.

Annual Concert At Centenary Church

Centenary—The Christmas entertainment held at the church on Wednesday, evening, Dec. 21st, was a decided success. A large crowd of parents and friends enjoyed to the full extent the splendid program provided. Under the direction of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Bates, the children with their bright happy faces and bubbling with excitement at the thought of a visit from Santa Claus did their best and the result was all that could be desired.

Rev. Mr. Flatt acted as chairman and each number was given promptly.

ICKES INCIDENT IS NOW CLOSED BERLIN STATES

'No Official Reaction' by Germany, Says German Spokesman

NAZI PRESS VIEWS

German Says Nothing Must Interfere with Christmas Spirit

Berlin, Dec. 24 (AP)—A propaganda ministry spokesman today declared the "Ickes incident" was closed diplomatically after it culminated in the United States' rejection of a German protest against a speech by the Secretary of the Interior.

Though regretting that the rejection "left a sting behind", the spokesman said the protest was couched in such terms that diplomatic action ended with the strong American retort.

Not even diplomatic quarrels must interfere with the Christmas spirit, so there will be no official "reaction" said the spokesman, adding that "we Nazis are regarded by many as heathen, yet I think we are better Christians than some other people."

Angry Reply To Pittman.

At the same time United States Senator Key. Pittman's four-point statement expressing disapproval of the Berlin and Tokyo governments elicited an angry reply from the officially inspired commentary service Deutscher Dienst.

Under the caption "Disturbance of the Christmas Peace", the service said:

"Senator Pittman's declaration constitutes a carefully timed brutal disturbance of the Chirstmas peace.

"What cynical baseness and at the same time what impudent smugness is apparent from these utterances by a man who, as Committee Chairman, (of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee), occupies a position of responsibility, yet who acts with complete irresponsibility.

"He didn't ask the American people, yet he considers himself authorised to insult a great European power in such an unbelievable manner.

Says Germans Insulted.

"After all he must know he insults the German people in its entirety and in all its strata when he arrogates to himself such an expression of opinion."

THE WEATHER

Toronto, Dec. 24 (CP)—Light to moderate snowfalls have occurred in many districts from Saskatchewan eastward to the lower St. Lawrence Valley, but the weather has been fair in most districts of the Maritimes, East Quebec and in Southern Alberta, a trough of low pressure extends south-southeastward from James Bay to the Sout'. Atlantic coast with relatively high pressure covering the Gulf of St. Lawrene. A moderate disturbance is moving rapidly southeastward from Southern Saskatchewan. The barometer is relatively high over the Mackenzie Valley.

POPE EXPRESSES BITTER SADNESS OVER RELATIONS

Refers to Trouble Between Vatican and Italian Government

CHRISTMAS MESSAGE

Vatican Much Opposed to Recent Marriage Law of Il Duce

Vatican City, Dec. 24 (AP)—Pope Pius accused Italian authorities today of encouraging "mistreatment" of Catholic action which, along with racial marriage discriminations, caused anxiety for the 10-year-old concordat of reconciliation between the church and state.

He spoke in his Christmas address to the Cardinals, expressing "bitter sadness" at vexations in relations between the Vatican and the Italian government. In his statement on Catholic action, an organization of laymen, the Pontiff said:

Statement.

"Observing the zeal in the lower ranks, it appears too clear that, while Catholic action is distinctly contemplated in our pact of conciliation, from above must come wide—or rather occult—gestures of permission and encouragement in order that those vexations not cease in various places from one end to the other of the peninsula.

"And not only in small places of little importance. Yesterday they were reported to us from Venice, Turin and Bergamo, today from Milan and in the very person of the Cardinal Archbishop, guilty of speech and teaching which comes within his pastoral duties and of which we can only approve."

The Pontiff read his speech of nearly 1,500 words to the Cardinals in Rome as they visited him in a body to present their annual Christmas wishes through their Dean. His Milan reference concerned Ildefonso Cardinal Schuster, Archbishop of Milan.

The Vatican protested to the Italian government against the marriage decree after the Pope sought to prevent its adoption by writing letters to Mussolini and King Victor Emmanuel The king later replied with a letter assuring the Pontiff his objections would be given the greatest consideration.

Decree In November.

(The Italian cabinet on Nov. 10 approved a decree excluding Jews from government positions, restricting their businesses and professions and forbidding their marriage to Italian Aryans:

"—and on earth peace, good will toward men."

And there were in the same country shepherds abiding in the field, keeping watch over their flock by night.

And, lo, the Angel of the Lord came upon them, and the glory of the Lord shone round about them; and they were sore afraid.

And the Angel said unto them, fear not: for, behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people.

For unto you is born this day in the City of David a saviour, which is Christ the Lord.

And this shall be a sign unto you: ye shall find the Babe wrapped in swaddling clothes, lying in a manger.

And suddenly there was with the Angel a multitude of the heavenly host praising God, and saying,

Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men.

And it came to pass, as the Angels were gone away from them into heaven, the shepherds said one to another, let us now go even unto Bethlehem, and see this thing which is come to pass, which the Lord hath made known unto us.

And they came with haste, and found Mary and Joseph, and the Babe lying in a manger.

BROKEN BODIES RECOVERED OVER 60-ACRE AREA

Seven Airmen and Possibly Nine Killed as Army Bomber Crashes

HORRIBLE SCENE

Uniontown, Ala., Dec. 24 (AP)—Broken bodies recovered over a 60-acre area indicated today seven men—and possibly nine—died last night in the explosion and crash of a twin-motored United States Army bomber two miles southeast of here.

Major Warren Maxwell, operations officer at Maxwell Field, Montgomery, Ala., said a tramp over the area today "convinced" him at least seven persons were killed.

Effects recovered indicated nine persons might have been killed, but reports from Hamilton Field, Calif.,

Spirit of Christmas Rules Expectant City

Tonight the spirit of Christmas will rule an expectant city.

Throughout the world a hush will come to still the lesser trivialities of living, while upon the stage will be portrayed that annual spectacle of "Peace on Earth, Good Will to All Men".

In Belleville thousands of lights will twinkle on the carefully prepared evergreen trees in the corner of the living room. Thousands of young hearts will beat high in anticipation of that great annual event marked as the most exciting of the year. Weeks of careful preparation which have gone into the making of this great night have ensured its success, even as those past many years before this one have rekindled the fires of faith and hope.

In churches of the city this evening lights will twinkle as brightly, for here, too, preparations have been made for the observance of that great event when a world is stilled and its peoples bow in veneration humbly happy while old, familiar hymns will peal forth from organs and throats in full chorus of happy acknowledgment of that great event so many years ago.

Along Front street the last of the hurrying throngs that have filled the business section for many days past will have completed their shopping. The lights of cheery homes will beckon. Only a few stragglers will remain as the hour advances, to complete the last of their shopping. Restaurants, differing from the annual New Year's trade, have not made extensive preparations for the handling of any large crowds, and the main section of the city is expected to be a quiet one. Christmas this evening will centre around the home in which good will and peace to all will reign.

GREATEST ARMIES OF SPANISH WAR MEET IN COMBAT

Insurgents Main Goal is Industrial Town of Artisa

MAY DECIDE WAR

HENDAYE, France, Dec. 24 —(AP)—Firm government resistance, it was reported today, has checked a great Spanish insurgent offensive all along the frozen Pyrenees front from Tremp to Balaguer.

News filtering across the border into France said the big push, led by General Franco's Moors and Italians, had been brought to an abrupt halt.

The front was said to be completely quiet except for occasional artillery shelling. Heavy snowstorms almost wiped out visibility and freezing cold made fighting virtually impossible in the mountains.

Reports from the front said the cold was so severe that water coolers on machine guns—usually boiling hot—had frozen.

Holy Land Faces Anniversary With The Promise of Peace Still Remote

(By The Canadian Press)

The Holy Land of Chrstianity faced the anniversary of the birth of Jesus tonight with the promise of the peace for which He lived and died apparently still remote.

The cables from Bethlehem, where Christ was born nearly twenty centuries ago, and from Jerusalem, told of the sputtering of airplane motors, the presence of 20,000 British soldiers, equipped with machine-guns, rifles, tanks on the alert for outbreaks of terrorism or disorders.

It was the third successive Christmas on which Palestine's celebration of the holidy was troubled by strife between Jews and Arabs both claiming the country as their homeland—with Great Britain seeking to act as policeman and mediator under its League of Nations mandate.

This year the depression and sadness in the Holy Land have become increasingly acute with the advent of Christmas. Because of the bloodshed and racial strife, there is an almost complete absence of pilgrims and tourists, placing many agencies on the verge of bankruptcy. Thousands are in need, and the general feeling about the future is pessimistic.

Look With Hope.

Leaders of both the Arab and Jewish causes look with hope to the projected Anglo-Arab-Jewish "conference to be held in London next month but fear it may provide no conclusion to the story of arson, pillage, assassination, kidnapping, bombing and guerrilla warfare that has been unfolding in Palestine for nearly three years.

Arab leaders are holding out for a full stop to Jewish immigration into Palestine and have refused to alter their stand, despite the persecution of Jews in Germany and Central Europe. The Arabs also seek nullification of the Balfour Declaration which promised creation in Palestine of a homeland for the Jews.

Must Accept Declaration.

Prominent Jews declare that if the London Conference is to be attended by any degree of success it must begin with acceptance of the Balfour Declaration and permit an increased flow of Jews into Palestine.

Nearly 2,000 years ago, the three wise men of the East left Jerusalem for the birthplace of Jesus at Bethlehem carrying gifts of gold, frankncense and myrrh to lay at the feet of the Prince of Peace. Over the same road tomorrow will travel truck loads of British soldiers to guard against any disturbance on the Holy night.

In Bethlehem, the effigy of the new-born Christ will be carried from the Convent of St. Catherine to the site of the manger in the Church of the Nativity, while the ancient ceremony is being performed, khaki-clad troops will be garrisoned in the cloisters of the adjoining church,

SURVIVORS SPEED TO THEIR HOMES

U. S. Coastguard Cutter Carries Men Shoreward for Christmas

Juneau, Alaska, Dec. 24 (AP)—All survivors of the wrecked motorship Patterson were safe today, and another saga of the sea approached an end as a United States Coast Guard cutter sped nine seamen shoreward for Christmas.

Two of the twenty crew members drowned when the Patterson was driven up on bleak Cape Fairweather beach 150 miles north of here on the Gulf of Alaska during a storm two weeks ago.

Sheldon Simmons, veteran Alaskan "mercy flyer", rescued two men earlier in the week and the pair arrived in Seattle yesterday. Two navy planes from the Sitka base flew seven men there and the Coast Guards boat Haida picked up the remaining nine.

Blames "Old Dogs"

Both groups were rescued at Lituyatbay where the men hiked 30 miles through storms from the wreck scene.

G. McDowell, veteran chief engineer, and Third Mate Steve Johnson, brought to Juneau by Simmons to medical aid, arrived in Seattle with tales of their week of horror.

"The old dogs wouldn't stand the gaff," McDowell said pointing to his legs. "God knows I wanted to stay and see that all the rest of the survivors got away safely, but my leg

ITALIAN PRESS OPENS CAMPAIGN

Experts See it as Prelude to Formal Demand for Concessions

Rome, Dec. 24—(AP)—The Italian press today opened a new and vigorous anti-French campaign which political observers saw as a prelude to a formal demand for concessions.

The new attacks apparently were a result of France's unfavorable reaction to Italy's denunciation of the 1935 Mussolini-Laval agreement concerning North Africa.

The Fascist press insisted the 1935 pact never became effective and that there must be some adjustment of the North African situation to preserve the "equilibrium."

In reply to French newspaper statements that the accord was automatically put into effect by Italian occupation of a 44,000-square mile strip of Sahara desert ceded by France, Italian newspapers asserted the territory never was occupied.

It was recalled that Premier Mussolini, replying on the eve of the Ethiopian war to a suggestion that he be satisfied with what France had ceded instead of taking Ethiopia, said "I am not a collector of deserts."

The newspaper Il Popolo Di Roma stated that "even today France, perilously alone, rises against our claims with violence which alone caused her old ill-will. We had thought that Munich had awakened the somnambulists. We were deceived!"

Shooting at Yule Tree Thieves, Farmer Kills Man, Wounds Wife

Elyria, O., Dec. 24 (AP)—An 84-year-old man with a long white "Santa Claus" beard sat on an iron jail cot last night and told authorities of the Christmas tree slaying of William Rousseau, 37-year-old unemployed trucker.

"The tree was his for the asking," the prisoner, farmer William Case said. "I have never refused to give a tree away. But when people steal them it's different."

Rousseau was shot and killed and his wife critically wounded by Case as they tied to their rickety automobile a small spruce taken from Case's farm, Sheriff Carl E. Finegan said.

Suffering multiple wounds Mrs Rousseau, 29, was brought to a hospital here, where after a blood transfusion she was given a "50-50 chance to live". The donor was Sheriff Finegan.

Case talked freely to newsmen about the shooting.

"I have lost about 200 Christmas trees this year to thieves," he said. "Some of them were two-tonners that had to be hauled away in trucks. I decided to do something about it.

"Yesterday," he continued, "I took my shotgun and went out to the field. I was there for a long time. About 2:30 in the morning a car drove up. Two people got out and went into the field. I saw them dragging a tree across the road. I shot without saying a word.

"After the first shot one ran in front of the headlights and I shot again. Then I started to the house.

"A minute later the horn began t blow, so I shot at the headlights. Then I went over to Lee Martin's (a neighbor) and told him about it. Then I went home and went to bed."

Deputies found Case asleep. And after being questioned today he stretched out on the iron jail cot and went to sleep.

Prosecutor Howard Butler said he has not decided if Case will be prosecuted.

"There's a possibility this might be called justifiable homicide," he said, indicating he would make a decision when the reports of investigating deputies have been filed.

At the Rousseau home in nearby Grafton, two children, Geraldine, 11, and Sarah, , waited vainly for return of their parents. Finally their grandmother, Mrs. Sarah Dahm, 69, told them "papa and mama may not come back".

British Isles Snow-Clad As Christmas Eve Brings Cheer and Thanksgiving

Snow and Slush for First Time in Ten Years but Britons Not Daunted

CAROLS SUNG

British People Remember Poor at Home and in Other Lands

By EDWIN JOHNSON
Canadian Press Staff Writer

London, Dec. 24—(CP Cable)—Christmas came today to the British Isles, snow-mantled for the first time in a decade.

It was a bit slushy in the cities but elsewhere holiday merrymakers made the most of the first white Christmas since 1929, the "year of the great snow." The weather was just what the children hoped for and they revelled. They chucked snowballs, made snowmen and played on sleds, skis and skates. Adults joined in the fun.

The cold and snow have hit some parts of these islands, hard dislocating traffic, curtailing deliveries of food and supplies, freezing water pipes, stranding motorists on the road, and playing havoc with the holiday sports program.

In Cheerful Mood

But Britons are in a most cheerful mood. Business has been good. The country is enjoying peace and other anxieties are forgotten, at least temporarily.

This mood is significantly reflected in London's carollers, who are singing more seasonable airs. Even itinerant jazz bands have switched to carols, blithely syncopating them. Men with bagpipes also are doing their best with "Good King Wenceslas."

Christmas Cheer and Thanksgiving

Throughout the day railway stations were clogged with bundle-laden, smiling throngs hurrying from London to warmth of family hearths. Millions in the cities also gathered about the family Christmas tree or joined in gala festivities at hotels or restaurants. London's hotels alone were catering for more than 50,000 overseas and provincial visitors.

From the royal halls of Sandringham to the humblest tenement dwelling it was a night of cheer and thanksgiving.

The poor at home and the sufferers in other lands were not forgotten. Thousands of gifts and food hampers were distributed to the destitute of the United Kingdom while money, clothing, food and toys were dispatched to the less fortunate refugees from the continent and the war-wracked thousands of Spain and China.

The spirit of the day is aptly expressed by the cartoonist, David Low, in the Evening Standard. He depicts four ordinary decent, peaceable citizens of Germany, Italy, France and Great Britain drinking a toast and shouting in chorus "A Merry Christmas to you anyway, comrades!" on the door of the room hangs a sign "please park your leaders in the cloakroom."

Believe Member Of Musica Family In Canada

Montreal, Dec. 24 (CP)—The Gazette says today a confidential source disclosed "existence of a belief that a member of the Musica family might be living somewhere in Canada under an assumed name."

(Philip Musica was the baptismal name of F. Donald Coster, who killed himself a week ago when his financial empire crumbled. His three brothers are held at New York on Securities Act violation charges.)

The Gazette says the belief a member of the Musica family lives in Canada "is considered to be a reasonable assumption from information gleaned by a reliable investigating body."

The newspaper adds:

"Reason for the belief was not revealed, such information being of a confidential nature at the moment." It stated Crown Prosecutor John Crankshaw refused to comment on the report.

Why the Weather!

By Major A. H. Thiessen
Science Service Meteorologist

Weather forecasting! Fair today; snow tomorrow says the U.S. Weather Bureau's forecast. It may be somewhat difficult for some to believe in these twice daily forecasts, especially if they fail occasionally. But when one considers the present state of weather science, the difficulty of securing good data throughout the entire domain of the atmosphere and the very small amount of time available to the orecaster to assemble and study the data, one wonders that the forecasts are so good. The extreme complexity of atmospheric phenomena makes forecasting an extremely difficult job which is and can only be done by trained scientists.

Community Christmas Concert At Foxboro is Well Attended

Foxboro, Dec. 24. — (Special) — Apparently it takes the children to show their elders just what the true Christmas Spirit really is. If unselfishness and the ability to spread joy and gladness during the Yuletide season, can be termed the true Christmas Spirit, then the pupils of the Foxboro Public School must certainly be true messengers of Christmas. On Thursday evening in the Sunday School Room of the Foxboro United Church the pupils and teachers alike certainly deserve comment because in order to do this, they voluntarily omitted staging a concert of their own in the school room which would have detracted considerably the popularity of two individual Sunday School concerts. Great credit is deserved by the two teachers, Miss Muriel Milligan and Mrs. Wanda Sine, who gave unstintingly of their time and efforts to make the concert a success, also for their generosity in supplying the beautiful costuming which was necessary in the numerous drills. As for the chilrren, no praise that could be given would be unwarranted; they all did their parts with such perfection as can hardly be imagined of children and their enunciation left nothing to be desired. The Sunday School room with its beautiful Christmas decorations provided a truly fitting background for the many varied Christmas plays and drills and the big fancy trimmed tree gave everything a true Christmas setting.

The concert opened with the Rev. Mr. Cook greeting the audience with a short address after which the entire school, about seventy strong, gave the opening chorus, entitled "A Song for Christmas". Six little girls dressed as milk-maids then went through a short drill after which they sang a little Milk-maid ditty. Two short recitations by George Aikens and Fay Hall met with loud applause from the audience after which five boys and five girls dressed as elderly couples who were quite badly afflicted with the rheumatism went through a very realistic drill before singing "A Song of Rheumatics". Six little girls all dressed in suitable costumes then gave "The Dance of the Butterflies" and immediately following, six boys in hobo toggery went through a burleque drill as a sequel. The dialogue "Santa Claus on Trial" was thoroughly enjoyed by the audience. The scene was a law court with Santa on trial, being accused of several offences of which he was ultimately acquitted. Five girls then gave a dialogue entitled "A Song of Gossip" after which a play "A Christmas Eve Pilgrimage" was presented. Sixteen boys and girls, all costumed in Indian fashion went through a drill and then a scene around the campfire was depicted in tableau form and with a young Indian maiden kneeling before the fire the band sang that old Indian love song "Redwing". While another drill was getting organised little Everett Lyons amused the audience with a recitation and then the sixteen little girls all beautifully dressed in bright colored costumes presented "Flowers of Christmas". Miss Ann McCullough gave a very interesting recitation entitled "The Innkeeper's Excuse" after which the Rev. Mr. MacDonald of Roslin addressed the audience. The final item on the programme was a tableau presented by the last season's entrance class which depicted the scene of the first Christmas with the Mother Mary kneeling at the manger while one of the Wise Men stood guard over the cradle.

Following the programme everyone was in a jovial mood while the presents were handed out with the ministers of the two respective congregations, Rev. Mr. Cook, Rev. Mr. MacDonald and the superintendent of the United Church Sunday School all being presented with turkeys for their Christmas dinner. The proceeds of the evening were later announced as amounting to $34.75.

NINE AMATEURS COMPETE AT SHOW

'Tour for Talent' Competition Attracts Large Audience at Capitol

Nine amateurs sought recognition in the entertaining world as they stepped before the microphone at the Capitol Theatre last night in the fourth of a series of programs sponsored by Ken Soble's well known All-Canadian radio broadcasting program in his "Tour for Talent" enterprise.

Numerous types of entertainment were presented by Master-of-Ceremonies the genial Tommy Mason. Aside from the regular entrants of the evening last week's "Tour for Talent" winners, George Shephard Belleville's boy tenor who won first prize, sang while the second prize winners George Gulliver and Cecil Rogers also appeared in an instrumental number.

A special item was added to the evening's entertainment when Arthur Rowland of this city, sang "Mrs Foggerty's Christmas Cake", a comic song that brought loud applause. The only amateurs to appear last night and gain encores were Wilbur Wannamaker, who played the bones and flaxen-haired 13 year old Carol Kiser, who sang.

Others to compete were —Melita and Murray Smith, duet, Bernice Cook, song and dance James Burk baritone solo six year old Barbara Donovan song and dance, Grace Campbell, blues singer and Harry Fry, guitar and mouth organ. Another of Ken Soble's "Tour for Talent" programs will be presented at the Capitol Theatre next Friday night.

Police Blotter

Sneak thieves continue to steal parcels and recently-purchased Christmas gifts from out of parked motor vehicles in Belleville, two such incidents being reported last night despite previous police warnings.

W. H. Kerr, Shannonville, parked his motor car on St. Paul Street and during his absence eleven pounds of butter and two other parcels were stolen from the vehicle.

Mr. Dooker, Campbellford truck driver, experienced extreme disappointment when two pairs of skates and two other Christmas parcels were stolen out of his truck while parked in Belleville. The unfortunate part of Mr. Dooker's loss is the fact he did not discover the theft until he arrived home in Campbellford late last night. Mr. Dooker made some Christmas purchases in Belleville, including which were two pairs of skates for his children. "To steal from Santa Claus is a contemptible trick," Mr. Dooker complained to police.

Sneak thieves entered the premises of J. Martin, 92 South George Street and stole 300 pounds of coal and a quantity of hard wood recently. The robbery was not disclosed to the authorities until yesterday, however.

Napanee police reported the theft of a 1938 black colored Ford car yesterday. The vehicle was equipped with Ontario licence plates number D3365, indicating the vehicle was the property of a physician.

Only nine transients sought warm and dry sleeping quarters at the police station last night, the weather being unfit to travel in the open.

Dog and Cat Chase Upsets Calm of Store

Shopping was at its height in one of the larger downtown stores last evening when a muffled scream and hurried commotion at one of the counters nearest the door, threatened to spread a mild panic in that immediate vicinity of the store.

Feminine shoppers with one accord dashed to the safety of an intersecting aisle, while others stranded in the centre of the main aisle made hurried, skipping jumps to and fro in utter distress. Above the clamor of noise could be heard the scratching and spitting resembling a cage of excited wildcats.

The trouble was of simple nature, shoppers not in the immediate section of the store learned a few moments later. A small but aggressive terrier had flushed a cat in a Front Street doorway. The feline in a hurry to get away from the dog chose the open doorway of the inviting store closely pursued by the happy dog. The matter of the store being crowded only added zest to the chase. A cool counter girl who had observed the cause of the commotion ushered the dog out and restored order.

Poverty is uncomfortable, but for a young man may be most profitable.

F. L. Ward, Picton Made King's Counsel

F. L. Ward, Barrister of Picton, is included in the list of the forty-nine new King's Counsel announced for the Province of Ontario by the Hon. Gordon Conant, Attorney General for Ontario. This list is the smallest since the year 1933, it was reported.

CHRISTMAS MUSIC AT ST. THOMAS

Service to be Held in Church on Christmas Eve

The observance of the Holy Festival of the Nativity will commence at the Church of St. Thomas' at 11.30 o'clock this Christmas Eve with fully choral celebration of the Holy Communion. Special music for the communion office will be sung by the choir and joyful Christmas hymns will be sung during the service.

At eight o'clock Christmas morning there will be a plain celebration of the Holy Communion and at 11 o'clock a.m. there will be another celebration of the Holy Communion which will be choral. Evensong will be said at five o'clock in the afternoon.

The vicar, the Rev. A. Beauchamp Payne, will conduct all services and Mr. Ernest Wheatley, Mus. Bac., will be in charge of the musical parts of the services.

Following is the order of the musical parts of the communion office which will be sung this evening and Christmas morning at 11 o'clock:

Bac., A.R.C.O.; (a) "Jesu, Joy of Man's desiring", Bach; (b) "Adoration" from "The Holy City", Gaul; Processional "Hark the Herald"; Introit, Chant 121; Kyrie Stainer; Gradual "White Shepherds Watch" Offertory "The First Nowell" with Descant; Sanctus, Benedictus and Gloria, Stainer; Carols by the choir during the Communion; Paternoster and Gloria, Merbecke; Hymn "O Little Town of Bethlehem" Recessional "Adeste Fideles".

Obituary

THOMAS B. HICK
(Orlando, Fla.)

The death occurred at Orlando, Florida, of Thomas B. Hick on Saturday, December 17th. Ten days previously he had entered a hospital there for an operation.

The late Mr. Hick was born in Roblin Ontario, on July 23rd., 1852, a son of the late Walter Hick. He spent his early life at that place and was there married to Elizabeth Lewis. When about thirty-five years of age, he moved to Roslin, where he conducted a meat business for two years. He moved to Thomasburg where he operated the Latchford Hotel for the space of two years. About this time his wife died and some time after he went to Fredonia, Kansas, where he bought a fruit farm, consisting of twenty acres of grape lands. This he managed for fifteen years when he sold out. Moving to New York State he conducted a country store up to fifteeen years ago. Disposing of this business he moved to live with his son, Archie Hick, a dentist in Pennsylvania, with whom he lived until he went to Florida in 1935.

Three years ago he was in Belleville renewing acquaintances. He was a member of the Anglican church. There survive him, three children, two by his first marriage, Charles Hick of Belleville, and Jenny (Mrs. Clayton Harkins) of Ilion, N.Y., and one son by his second marriage, Dr. Archie Hick of Pennsylvania, besides his widow.

Burial took place at Orlando, Florida.

MISS FRANCES L. FAHEY
(Marysville)

After an illness of one week's duration, Miss Frances Loretta Fahey passed away at her late residence in Marysville early this Saturday morning, Dec. 24th.

The late Miss Fahey was born thirty three years ago in Marysville, her parents being the late Mr. and Mrs. John Joseph Fahey. All her life was passed in Marysville and she was held in high esteem in the district. Many friends regret her death. In religion Miss Fahey was a faithful member of The Holy Name of Mary Church. She took an active interest in the work of the parish and was a member of the Catholic Women's League and the Altar Society.

Surviving her are four sisters, Mrs. James Shaughnessy, Toledo, Ohio; Mrs. T. V. Scanlan, Belleville; Miss Mary Fahey, Marysville; Mrs. P. L. Kavanagh, Marysville; two brothers, Mr. Michael Fahey, Marysville and Mr. James Fahey, Toronto.

The funeral announcement is made elsewhere in this paper.

Victim of Disease He Was Studying

New York, Dec. 24 (AP) — Dr. Americo Garibaldi, 45, internationally known Peruvian authority on cancer, died on Thursday, a victim of the disease he had spent his life combatting.

He had come to New York to pursue his research work and also to undergo treatment for his own illness which started fourteen years ago. He underwent an operation in Lima and another in Paris four years ago.

Dr. Garibaldi's principal interest was in research and he was the author of a number of books and treatises.

In France he received a Doctorate in Physics at the University of Rouen and took his doctor's degree in medicine at the University of Paris. Later he was appointed Research Associate in Experimental Biology of the College of France.

Dr. Garibaldi was called back to his native Peru to become Professor of Pharmacology at the University of Lima and last year he came to New York to pursue his work on a grant from the Peruvian government.

S. A. DISTRIBUTES CHRISTMAS CHEER

Inmates of County Home and City Home for Aged Presented With Gifts

Christmas cheer was brought to inmates of the Hastings County House of Refuge yesterday afternoon by Major H. Alderman, acting on behalf of the local Salvation Army Corps. Ninety-three gifts tied in seasonal wrappings were distributed there, and seventeen packages at the Belleville Home for the Aged. On Sunday 37 inmates of the Hastings County gaol will have the day brightened by gifts from the local Corps, and fifty inmates of the public ward of the Belleville General Hospital are also to be treated on Sunday. Santa Claus will make the presentations. These gifts have been made possible through the kind donations of local and district residents, and by funds collected through the Christmas kettle, for which a grateful word of appreciation was given by Major Alderman.

On Sunday the Salvation Army Band, as has been popular custom, will visit the County gaol, the County Home and the Hospital and play a series of Christmas airs for inmates of these institutions, between ten and eleven o'clock in the morning.

Zeller's Pay Bonuses To Store Employees

Announcement was made this morning by Mr. J. W. Merklinger, manager of Zeller's local store that the Zeller's Company, in keeping with the usual Christmas practice has granted cash bonuses to Belleville store employees, and the employees of 23 other Zeller's stores throughout the Dominion. A total of $8,000 in cash will be distributed to employees.

FINDS CHRISTMAS CHEER

Washington, Dec. 24 (AP)—Four bottles of Mrs. Evalyn Walsh McLean's best champagne will provide Christmas cheer for an anonymous workman. The sparkling wine turned up while workmen were removing cellar debris from the McLean mansion, soon to be torn down to make way for an office building.

School Children Present Annual Concert

Rawdon.—The pupils of Allan Public School, S.S. No. 3 and Williams' School, S.S. No. 4 with their teachers, Misses Esma Cole and Penice Joyce, staged their annual Christmas concert at Mount Pleasant Hall with a large number of interested parents and friends in attendance. Each school has twenty pupils and the proceeds amounted to $32.30. A beautiful lighted Christmas tree adorned the platform and added to the scene. The accompanists were: Mrs. Kenneth Weaver, Mrs. Percy Hubble and Mrs. John Holmes. Rev. J. E. Beckel was chairman and introduced the two teachers. The programme opened with a chorus, "Don't Wait 'Till the Night Before Christmas To Be Good." The main feature of the concert was a three-act play entitled "The Love Gift."

The first scene was the interior of a woodcutter's cottage in the middle ages. The second act portrayed an outdoor scene with the pilgrims travelling to worship the Christ child. The last act depicted the beautiful cathedral with the worshippers sitting on the floor and the gowned choir sang several Christmas carols. Miss Cole took the part of the minister and when the love gift was offered the chimes were beautifully rendered. The play closed with the words, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these My brethren, ye have done it unto Me." Between acts, Jerry Melville recited "Christmas Day", Miss Gladys Summers sang with guitar accompaniment, Miss Joan Hoard rendered a piano solo and Ralph Johnson gave a recitation.

Three dialogues were given, entitled, "The Christmas Lesson", "Christmas with the Ruggles", and "Aw, Gee." Raymond Dunkley recited a number and Miss Lois McAdam sang "The Toy Town Jamboree." Sixteen juniors from both schools sang "Dear Old Santa Claus." The massed pupils of both schools contributed two choruses entitled "The Beautiful Story of Christmas" and as a closing number they sang "Snow Flakes."

Miss Evelyn Melville gave a humorous Christmas monologue with local hits. Six of the girls dressed as fairies, delighted with a number. Fifteen of the younger pupils sang "Jackie Frost" and ten children contributed a "Christmas Bells" exercise and song.

Santa arrived on the scene with bags of candy and nuts for the children, and he also distributed the gifts. Mr. Kenneth Weaver manipulated the curtain and the concert was a decided success.

Several visitors attended this function from Hoards, Bethel and Ridge Road.

Wellman's Y.P.U. opened with quiet music and Miss Mary Sharp offered prayer. Jack Dunham read the Bible lesson and the president spoke briefly. Roll call was answered with favorite hymns. Miss Carlyn Johnson then presided and gave the topic based on "Living Creatively" followed by a discussion group. Mr. and Mrs. George Godden sang a duet. Rev. J. E. Beckel gave a talk on "Problems of Young People." Misses Mary Sharp and Mabel Sharp sang a duet after a hymn. Miss Isobel Beckett staged a contest.

Three autos filled with young people of Wellman's, went carol-singing on Sunday evening and delighted the community with the Christmas hymns. Later they gathered at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Russell Johnson where lunch was served and a brief program given. Christmas stories were told by Mr. Lorne Watson and Miss Mary Sharp. Miss Essie McQuigge read an appropriate poem. This service took the place of the regular week night meeting.

OBITUARY

HENRY ALFORD

(Belleville)

An aged and highly respected resident in the person of Henry Alford died at his home 31 North Front Street, Belleville, late Friday afternoon after an illness of lengthy duration. He was born in Ireland, 92 years ago being the son of the late Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Alford and came to this country as a young man settling in this district. For many years he lived at Roslin and nineteen years ago moved to this city, where he was well and favorably known by a wide circle of friends. The deceased was fraternally identified with L.O.L. No. 295 Tyendinaga, being one of the oldest members in this district. Surviving are one daughter, Mrs. S. E. Vermilyea of this city, one son, W. H. Alford of Roslin and one sister, Mrs. Edward Wilson also of Belleville.

Funeral announcement will be found elsewhere in this issue.

Not money, power, place, or fame should be life's object, but manhood.

Many Children Perform in Stirling Christmas Concerts

Stirling.—The annual Christmas entertainment of the St. John's Anglican Sunday School was held in the Parish Hall on Monday evening with a large happy gathering of children taking part in a most interesting program which was climaxed with the visit of Santa. Dialogues, recitations, musical numbers and short plays formed a part of the entertainment provided. The program opened with the singing of carols and prayer by Rev. A. S. McConnell, who later introduced the talented performers in the order given. Each presentation was well received and keen interest was taken in the awards given to faithful students of the year by the Rector.

The Program

"The Story of the Wise Men" by Clinton Heath; "Christmas Greetings"—Marion Gravers; Dialogue with a cast including Dorothy West, John Lanigan and an unseen choir; Vocal solo—Jimmy Wright; Playette by the girls of the Junior Women's Association; Guitar duet—Dorothy West and Mary L. Lannigan; Recitation—Lorraine Gravers; Recitation—Roy Strickland; Play, "The Birthday Party"—Junior W. A. Girls; Recitation—Gladys Clarke; Instrumental solo—Dorothy West; Recitation—Harry Conley; Recitation—Vernon Clarke; One-act play, featuring Marjorie West and a group of the Junior Sunday School Students.

This part of the program was brought to a close with the singing of another Christmas carol and Rev. A. S. McConnell, rector of the parish, presented a number of the pupils with copies of the new edition of the hymn and prayer books for faithfulness in attendance at Sunday School. The awards are as follows: Senior Girls—Catherine Wright; Intermediate Girls—Aleita Conley, June Conley and Marion Gravers; Intermediate Boys—Jimmy Wright and Ronald Wicket. Story books were presented to the following junior students—Marie Ackers, Charles Covart, Creighton McConnell, Shirley Ackers, Loraine Gravers. Gladys was awarded the prize for regularity in church attendance.

The visit of Santa was looked forward to eagerly by the happy children and his arrival climaxed an evening that will long be remembered by all present.

St. Andrew's Christmas Concert

The annual Christmas concert and entertainment of St. Andrew's Presbyterian Sunday School was held in the church parlors on Thursday evening and included one of the finest programs ever presented on such an occasion. Mr. Harper Rollins, superintendent of the School, expressed the gratitude of the teaching staff for the interest shown in Sunday School work by the parents. Attendance was rising and the interest of the pupils was displayed freely on every hand. Mr. Robert Eggleton, past superintendent of the School, also addressed the gathering and though he retired from active service some time ago, he is still vitally interested in the school he served so nobly and well. Rev. W. H. V. Walker officiated as chairman for the evening and the following numbers were presented on the program: "Welcome" by Mary Agnes Fox; Chairman's address—Rev. Walker; Vocal duet—Marilyn Eggleton and Margaret McIntosh; Dialogue, "Days of the Week" by the members of Mrs. Rodger's Class; Recitation—Marion Mitts; "Fan Drill" by Jean McIntosh, Marilyn Eggleton, Margaret McIntosh, Eileen Gibson, Doreen Fox, Elinor Fox, Isobel Fox, Shirley Montgomery, Ruth Tulloch, Barbara Gibson and Frank Waller; Piano solo—Mary Agnes Fox; Vocal solo—Barbara Fargey; Recitation—Frank Waller; Pageant entitled, "Away in a Manger" by a group of Junior Girls; "Tipsy-Turvy Chorus" by a group of girls and boys; Vocal duet by Mary Agnes and Doreen Fox; Solo, Marilyn Eggleton; Recitation—Gordon Mitts. A one-act play "Rev. Peter Brice, Bachelor" included the following senior girls: Dorothy Gay, Shirley Ormiston, Helen Fitchett, Dorothy Montgomery, Marybelle Rodgers, Mary Tulloch and Jean Dafoe. The visit of Santa Claus was the final number on the program.

At The Theatres

AT THE McCARTHY

Anne Shirley Next in "Girls School"

Lovely 17-year-old girlhood has been glowingly recorded on the screen, according to some of Hollywood's greatest stars (just read carefully today's advertisement on page two of the Ontario Intelligencer) regarding the McCarthy feature production "Girls Show" which opens on Sunday midnight.

Anne Shirley, the talented star of "Mother Carey's Chickens" to name her most recent film, is featured in "Girls School," together with Ralph Bellamy and Nan Grey. Miss Shirley is cast as the scholarship winner working her way through the school. Miss Grey is seen as a romantic young senior who plans to elope immediately after the senior prom, that night, with a boy friend who has kept her out all night.

When the dormitory monitor hears of this escapade on the part of Miss Grey, a series of the most delightfully amusing and entertaining episodes to ever unfold to an audience, brilliantly keeps everyone in an uproar of laughter and excitement until the final fade-out scenes.

Noah Berry, Jr., is seen as Anne Shirley's boy friend; Kenneth Howell is the lad over whom Nan Grey got into difficulties and Ralph Bellamy is the love interest of Gloria Holden, a young teacher.

Directed by John Brahm, "Girls School" presents the true spirit of yout hin its quest for romance and adventure, truly one of the finest of all fine entertainments, the screen can bring to you.

"Toyland Casino"

One of the first of the new season short subject hits, that has a wealth of interest for both adults and children, entitled "Toyland Casino," brings to the screen the juvenile entertainers of today who will become the stage, screen and radio headliners of tomorrow, their naivete and their refreshing talent lend a refreshing note to added attraction entertainment. The whole family will love. "Hectic Honeymoon," a twenty minute comedy, produced in feature style, with an all star cast, has all and more that it takes to make you laugh out loud. It is a happy-go-lucky laugh riot. An amusing all technicolor musical cartoon is also tops in entertainment.

AT THE BELLE

"Stablemates" Xmas Treat

A new screen team will be introduced to Belle theatre audiences Sunday midnight, Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, matinee daily, and not since Wallace Beery and Jackie Cooper appeared in "The Champ," has an audience been so receptive and enthusiastic. The new team is that of Wallace Beery and Mickey Rooney who are co-starred in "Stablemates."

Beery is seen in the role of a once brilliant veterinarian who changed to a race track bum because he was framed into a murder charge. Rooney, fresh from his triumph in "Boys Town," won more admirers, if possible, in his characterizations of the stable boy and jockey who befriends Beery in order to get the latter to operate on his injured horse. The two join forces and tour the country with the race horse, which Rooney has been given in lieu of his salary.

When the horse is in perfect condition they start for Hollywood Park to participate in the big race. One day Rooney listens to a radio broadcast and learns that his travelling companion is an escaped convict. Having learned to love Beery like a father, he tries to persuade him not to come to the track without letting him know the reason. Capture is sure if he does. But Beery goes along. There they meet the man who was responsible for Beery's framed charge. He is the former owner of Rooney's horse and takes it from the boy because he can't show ownership papers. Then things really start to happen, with the action of the big race matching the tempo of the climax.

Harry Rapf, producer, made excellent use of the new Hollywood track at Inglewood as well as featuring five champions of the turf in Seabiscuit, Dauber, Specify, Indian Broom and Lloyd Pan.

The work of the stars is brilliant and is ably supported by the performances of Arthur Hohl, Margaret Hamilton and Marjorie Gateson. Sam Wood, as usual, gives the picture a race track tempo with his direction.

Not only does the film show Hollywood Park, but gives sport fans a chance ot see Santa Anita, home of the $100,000 Handicap, Bing Crosby's Del Mar track, and San Francisco's Tanforan.

"Follow The Arrow," another of those entertaining Pete Smith specialties, a funny Captain and the Kids cartoon "Captain's Christmas," and the popular Belle Newsreel, will be presented on the same program.

"The Citadel"

"The Citadel," the novel ten million peoplt have read is now a motion picture to storm your heart, and will be presented at the Belle next Thursday, Friday and Saturday, matinee daily with Robert Donat and Rosalind Russell in the leading roles.

AT THE CAPITOL

"The Storm"

Revealing for the first time the untold drama of wireless operators on merchant ships, Universal's big-scale production of "The Storm" comes to the Capitol Theatre Sunday midnight, Monday and Tuesday.

Graphic action and realism is indicated through an all-star cast, which includes such rugged performers as Charles Bickford, Barton MacLane, Preston Foster, Andy Devine and Frank Jenks. Romance in the story is carried by Tom Brown as the young brother, and Nan Grey as his sweetheart, the pretty nurse.

Impressive scenes in the screenplay by Daniel Moore, Hugh King and Theodore Reeves show the crashing of a ship into an iceberg, the explosion of an oil tanker as it sails from port, and several rousing hand-to-hand battles between rival ships' crews when they meet in waterfront cafes.

Logical motivation of the story is provided by Bickford, as a reckless wireless operator, who loves the adventure of his profession but seeks to prevent his brother, Brown, from following the same career. Nan Grey, cast as the ship's nurse, has her most important opportunity since she scored with Deanna Durbin in "Three Smart Girls."

The programme is augmented by selected short subjects which include Charlie McCarthy and Edgar Bergen in "Free and Easy," also "News of the Day," a "Musical" and a cartoon.

Manager "Wannie" Tyers of the Capitol has gathered together nine of the best "short" subjects and put them together to form a special show for the children next Wednesday at 2.30. The programme will consist of a Mickey Mouse cartoon, a Popeye cartoon, 2 reel comedies, etc. He hopes that the mothers and fathers of Belleville will take advantage of this matinee and send their children along. More than likely many an adult will be present too, as grown-ups seem to enjoy these shows as much as the kiddies.

"On Earth
Peace
Goodwill Toward Men"

As 1938 draws to a close, the divine message which has shone like a beacon light for humanity through the ages reveals to yet another generation all of its spiritual essence: significant for all time as the foundation on which humanity must build, in order that the full flavour of a rich world may be enjoyed by all the Children of the Universe.

We as Canadians and members of the great British Commonwealth of Nations, proud of our origin and heritage, devoted to the principles inherent in Democracy, are confident that the first divine Christian Message of "Peace on Earth and Goodwill Toward All Men" will prevail.

In this spirit, we wish You, our many friends, happiness, and A Merry Christmas.

MERRY CHRISTMAS

A universal message is heard throughout a great part of the world at this season with the words "Merry Christmas." All classes, all ages, use this greeting with its universal message of goodwill and brotherhood to express the overwhelming sense of the greatness of the Christmas festival in their lives. It is the language of the marketplace, of the shop, of the street, of the home, and of every possible place of meeting.

It is with this salutation that The Ontario Intelligencer wishes all at this time the joys of Christmastide.

No greeting used at any other time of the year conveys as much as these two words, which have been the salutation in Christian lands for long long years. They are words which challenge the spirit of him who greets and of him who is greeted. No one can speak them in a listless manner or in a way which would indicate meaninglessness. They carry enthusiasm and spiritual quality, they ring with cheer and goodwill. They are like the bells which ring out at this season, they speak joy, merriment and faith. These words fall from the lips and ring in the ear with the very tingling spirit of life.

This greeting has caught the meaning behind the greatest of all the festivals of the Christian calendar, and they hear that meaning whenever they are spoken. The words will be spoken for ages yet to come as long as people remain to speak English. Even words may change their meaning and their content of thought but the phrase "Merry Christmas" must linger to express the joy of meeting friends, the happiness of family reunions, the spirit of bestowing benefits on others and the principle of human brotherhood.

IN CANADA AND ELSEWHERE

Canada this year is among the favored nations. It observes Christmas without let or hindrance and for that reason as Canadians look out upon the sad state of the world in Europe and Asia, they feel themselves blessed in the freedom they have to pay homage to Him whose gift to man is celebrated at this time. Here parents and children and their friends observe in their chosen way the season and no one dares to order how they shall celebrate the hallowed time. As they are free to observe it, they mark it well in the home, in the church, in the gathering wherever it may be. They think of the situation in Europe where people dominating minority groups submit them to wholesale persecutions never before equalled. They think of the promise which the Christmas message brought, "peace on earth, goodwill to men." In many parts goodwill is still lacking and because it is absent, there is not peace.

More than nineteen centuries have passed and still such things can be because of man's hardness of heart and his selfish desire for power and influence. At this time people, in lands far from this bitter repression of the minorities, will remember in their prayers the unfortunate dwellers in lands which do not want them and try to crush them. They will pray that the burden may be lifted and that somehow these persecutors be brought to see the error and injustice of their actions.

At home the Canadian people feel grateful that Canada has enough and to spare of the good things of life, which have come through their national heritage of material and spiritual resources and that old time festivities and happiness may be experienced throughout the land.

WEATHER IN EUROPE AND HEREABOUTS

Northern Europe has just come out of the grip of bitterly cold weather, scarcely a country being spared. Temperatures in lands mentioned in despatches are not as low as those to which Canadians are accustomed at certain portions of the winter season but other conditions make such temperatures as were experienced this week the cause of great suffering. Canadian homes are built to meet the severest winter cold and some winters ago they were put to a test when the temperature went down to as low as thirty-nine degrees below zero. That was abnormal as this week's conditions have been in Northern Europe.

Paris felt the weather keenly, for the temperature was but five above zero. It was the coldest day in sixty-one years. Berlin at one below zero must have felt the bitter cold, for it was a record for eighty years. Moscow true to the general impressions of Russia as a land of cold, reported 26 below, one of the coldest experiences on record. But people of every land on earth are accustomed to pictures of Russians dressed in furs.

Winter is no sparer of the nations. Hitler, Stalin, and such have to endure along with their peoples just what nature sends them. No dictatorship can prevent winter's icy hand being laid upon their countries.

When Canadians read of the sufferings of Europeans in the present week's severe spell, they must admit that Canada after all, though it may be cold at times, possesses one of the finest climates in the world. Her spring, her summer and her autumn are generally of a kind to excite the admiration of visitors from all parts of the world, except of course those who are used to equatorial or arctic conditions, who might feel the cold or the heat unbearable. Others find Canada a lovely country in which to dwell. Her winters are long but they have their place in developing a hardy race.

Not often does the weather play Canadians a surprise visit. Canadian houses are armed against winter and can stand almost any frigid temperature. The winter defences in Canada are impregnable. Very rarely does the heat of summer oppress.

CHRISTMAS GIFTS

O'er Judean hills on that far-off day
The wise men journeyed far,
Led on by the bright and beckoning ray
Of a shining silver star;
Oh! brightly it gleamed and showed the way
Over trackless wastes and wild,
Till it stood over Bethlehem town, where lay
In a manger rude—a Child

And they bend the knee to the Christ they see
And their costly gifts unfold;
To the new-born King rich gifts they bring
Of frankincense, myrrh and gold;
A lesson the wise men left for us
From the ages past and dim—
As we give to His children—the least of these
We are doing it unto Him.

ONE HUNDRED DOLLAR CANADIAN BILLS CARRY THE PORTRAIT OF SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD. If you haven't noticed this look carefully at the next bunch of hundred-dollar bills you get for the likeness is remarkable and worth looking into, as was everything pertaining to that lovable old statesman. Lest it may be imagined that we are accustomed to gazing into the face of Canada's Greatest Statesman on one hundred-dollar bills, let it be said quickly in extenuation that our first intimation of the fact came from "Judith" in the Toronto Globe Mail and "Judith" had the pleasure of receiving several one-hundred dollar bills as gifts for a pet charity of her's. However, we intend to look closely at the next hundred-dollar bill that comes our way, if for nothing else than the friendly feeling we still feel for that Grand Old Man and the memory of a scene at a railway station not many miles away one snowy, blustery winter's day with the Premier snugly wrapped in that famous old fur coat making his way from the train to the waiting sleigh, while the crowd cheered itself hoarse. Sir John A. Macdonald was human, so human that he even believed in God and religion, and had a reason for his faith, and practised what he preached. He was the leader of a people who feared God and loved their neighbours — not like those leaders in fear-crazed Europe where men have set themselves up as Gods and at the devil's bidding have declared God and religion fables, forgetting that the religion of Jesus Christ has survived the lions and the fires of fanatics and risen triumphantly over every obstacle placed in the way, and will continue to do so.

ANOTHER CHRISTMAS EVE—what a flood of memories, sad and glad come trooping back out of the past, with the merry faces of friends, some of whom have passed on to Never Never Land, others here, but far away, but all leaving an impression on our lives and memory reminding us that life without friends would be hardly worth while, friends unselfish and true who do not value their friendship in dollars but in good deeds.

"OLD SCROOGE" WAS MADE TO SEE THE LIGHT by a ghostly review of Christmases Past and Gone, with a preview of Christmases yet to come—and he became as a little child again, filled with the Spirit of Christmas, and with every trace of selfishness purged from his being. If there are any Old Scrooges in existence today would that the same vision might be theirs that they would be able to see just what a wealth of joy and blessings they are missing.

'MEMBER THE DAYS WHEN IF CHRISTMAS BROUGHT a pair of wooden skates with a curved, curleycue-toe blade imbedded in the wood and a screw to enter the heel of the boot to assist the straps to hold the skate on—then the clamp skates which had a habit of tearing off the sole came as an improvement—on and on to the hockey skate and boot ensemble, and the fancy skates for the girls and artificial ice. It's a far cry from the old creek where we used to shovel the snow for our own rink and have a whale of a time with bonfires burning cheerily. And just to think that this generation knows not the pleasure of straw rides in the moonlight—the big box sleigh with the buffalo robes and the straw, and perhaps some hot bricks wrapped in flannel for the feet. The Good Old Days sure missed a lot of comforts but it sure did leave a lot of pleasant memories, colored, no doubt by the passing years.

THE POETIC AND THE PROSAIC

A rustic who saw a lady artist sketching a landscape in which she had given prominence to the sky, took a respectful interest in the work.

"Ah, said the artist, "perhaps to you too Nature opens her sky-pictures, page by page. Have you seen the lambent flame of the dawn leaping across the livid east—the red-stained, sulphurous islets floating in lakes of fire in the west—the ragged cloud at midnight, black as a raven's wing, blotting out the shuddering moon?"

"No," replied the man—"not since I gave up drinking."

FOR SHORTER HOURS

Ottawa civil servants, employees of the Government in the capital, are proposing that their hours of work be five days a week, ending at 6 p.m. That means, instead of working six days a week with Saturday afternoon off, they would work an hour longer each day and take all of Saturday off.

This is not a move for shorter hours. Under the proposed change, the workers would, perhaps, put in an hour or two more than they would under the present system. The question to be considered, however, concerns the effect it will have on the public. In the first place, will the public be inconvenienced if the offices where the civil servants are employed are closed all day Saturday? In the second place, will the public, even if it has no contact with the civil servants, and is not inconvenienced in any way, feel that it is being "gyped?" Whether right or wrong, a feeling has grown up throughout the country that the size of the civil servant army at Ottawa, and in certain other places in a lesser degree, is far too great, considering the necessary amount of work done. One of these days, we feel, this movement for a reduction in the cost of administration of the nation's business is going to strike Ottawa seriously and a lot of those people who are clamoring for five-day weeks and such like will have to get out and scramble for jobs of any-hour weeks. — St. Thomas Times-Journal.

That Body of Yours

Counting White Corpuscles—Disease Fighters—Before And After Operation

I have spoken before of a patient with pneumonia in whom the number of white corpuscles (disease fighters) was low instead of being high. This showed that the patient had not enough disease fighters to overcome the pneumonia and he died a few days later.

It is the increase in the number of these white corpuscles (leucocytes) that shows the degree of illness present. If number is very high patient may be very ill but his leucocytes are keeping up with his illness—giving it a strong battle. An increase in the leucocytes then is a natural and favorable sign in illness.

Just before an operation the number of leucocytes in the blood is often counted to show degree of illness and the resisting or fighting power of the patient's blood. The examination of the leucocytes sometimes after operation is also very important.

Dr. J. Van Duyn, 2nd, Syracuse, in Archives of Surgery, Chicago, states that in a progressively downhill course of the patient's condition after operation, examination of his blood frequently shows a decrease in the number of leucocytes. This shows a wearing out of the fighting power of the blood and explains why the patient does not gain strength despite treatment given. It shows that the leucocyte reserve in at least some cases is at a low level before operation.

Leucocyte exhaustion occurs not only in cases of severe or prolonged infection but in cases of much milder strain or no strain at all.

The suggestion is that the leucocyte count should be taken (a) at the time of admission to hospital and especially before operation to compare with number after operation, (b) frequently when severe infection is present to detect early exhaustion of leucocytes, and (c) when patient's condition becomes worse after operation and abdomen becomes distented.

The treatment of leucocyte exhaustion (low number) should be the same whether strain is mild or severe. "Giving liver extract by mouth or injected into the muscles and blood transfusions, appeared to be of great value if given early enough in the course of the breakdown of the processes manufacturing the leucocytes or white corpuscles."

PUTTEES ABANDONED

If another war comes there will be at least one minor compensation for the troops. Both the British and United States armies have finally abandoned the puttee.

The puttee, as everybody knows, is a piece of military apparel adopted from the Hindu consisting of a long narrow piece of cloth which is wound, bandage fashion, tightly and spirally about the leg from knee to ankle and takes the place of legging or gaiter.

But it was much more to the vast army of civilians who put on khaki during the late war. It was an instrument of mild torture and millions of men between the year 1914 and 1918 muttered a plague on its inventor. The inventor was not the real culprit, however. It was the group of generals who decided, with a total lack of imagination, that it should form part of the uniform of the British fighting forces.

Few men mastered the art of rolling the puttee to perfection. For fumblers, half awake in the blue-gray dawn, it was a nuisance. Rolled too tight, it resulted in a few hours in a numb leg. Rolled not tight enough, it brought on nightmares connected with being improperly dressed on parade. It was a devilish thing to clean, and once it got wet, as it often did, it heightened the general discomfort. And it was a time-waster.

Now it has gone. Nobody will mourn. And for the next generation of cannon-fodder a new freedom will come.—Ottawa Citizen.

Peace on Earth, Goodwill to—

Time crowned with supreme and radiant content seems to pause in its mad career for a few short days of contemplation in the crystaline air of a glittering world. It was 1,938 years ago in a Heaven pure and remote, crammed with pulsating pin-points of light, that the large Star in the East shone with such magical brilliance; when lo! an extraordinary awe hushed the spirit of our troubled world to a sense of enchantment and miracle, charity and love. The busy world of today is grateful for the annual pause in honor of this sacred event as evinced by the universal spirit of peace, goodwill and joy.

Those Yuletide symbols of beneficence—Christmas trees —soon to become fairy-like lodestones in glowing pageants of jollity, stand like sparkling pyramids in a virgin-white dream-landscape. Young and old, rich and pour, hale and sick are aglow with warm anticipation of an indefinable, bejewelled something which may be awaiting them on one of these trees.

On the balsams the cones stand proudly erect; the flattish leaves which, on many branches, appear to be two-ranked, form apparently flat sprays. These leaves will stick tight even in the heat of the house. Spruce trees allow their cones to droop as if ashamed of the objectionable habit of shedding their sharp, four-sided needles (which bristle out all around the branches) over the party-rug. But the needles will remain attached to twigs of herbarium specimens if they are boiled in three-quarters of a gallon of water for half and hour to which one ounce of copper sulphate has been added.

As resonant chimes merrily clash and clang in the freshness and romance of Christmas Eve, churches are filling with worshippers for the midnight service of the Feast of Nativity, who will inhale with tingling reminiscence the rich fragrance of floral decorations — garlands of aromatic cedar are draped and festooned in bold contrast with flaming poinsettias, sweetly-scented roses and carnations. Plaintive and heart-searching carols melt into a dream deep and mellow as Time itself. The notes of the grand organ, which soar in triumphant melody, seem to promise a nobler living and glories yet to be; indeed the very voice of Goodwill speaking to our hearts and souls.

The Christmas dinner tables, of the fortunate, are loaded with good cheer, mostly the produce of our vegetable friends. Many of us treasure lasting mementos of a happy time like this, and have provided such, as living plants. Seeds of the orange, grapefruit, lemon, figs or date will germinate and grow quite readily in the warmth of the house and live with reasonable care for many years thus establishing a pleasing, evergreen, indoor garden. The fig will lose its leaves towards spring but will grow new ones when enjoying an outdoor summer vacation. The pineapple will add variety to this exotic garden if the rosette of leaves be potted in sandy leaf-mould.

Garden, field and forest are now desolate with the apparent death of December; but there is no winter in the soul of the plant lover; only serenity and hope, as he recalls with supreme gratitude a world of great simple things where contentment, meets him and takes him tenderly by the hand as he revels in the sweatly mystic notes of the Pipes of Pan which even the ribald bellow of an ugly and ruthless reality can never quite subdue.— Montreal Gazette.

A Letter to Santa Claus

There is a good deal of confusion regarding Santa Claus in a city as large as New York, and well there might be, with character actors in red suits and false whiskers popping up on every street corner and in every department store. They all help to spread the Christmas spirit. But surely among the most appealing amateur impersonators of the saint are those anonymous souls who call every year at the postoffice to retrieve the dead letters sent by childish correspondents specifying the Christmas presents they hope to receive.

Perhaps the major tragedy of Christmas is the lack of good-will in the world today. But these letters at least represent one of the minor tragedies. They are all spontaneous and rise in the trustfulness of young hearts. About 1,500 letters to Santa Claus are dropped into the mail boxes each year. They bear various addresses, though "North Pole" is the most popular.

Before it was sold, the old New York World used to get a good many of these letters because they were hopefully addressed to "Santa Claus, The World, New York." This year one from Harlem was addressed "Colored Santa, South Pole", where the weather is presumably warmer and therefore more suitable to colored folk. Another was for "The Santa of the Bronx." Others addressed to "South Tenth Street, Philadelphia," to Indiana and North Carolina, probably mean a touch of homesickness in child writers who have moved here from other States. But north is the general direction indicated, with Alaska, Iceland and the Arctic Circle all included.

The number of these letters does not tend to increase from year to year. Rather, it dwindles. Possibly this is because children hand on to smaller children the sad news that the letters usually end in disappointment. But not always. About one in ten is answered.

This is the surreptitious but beautiful enterprise of the amateur Santa Clauses. They are allowed to run through this mail and select the more touching pleas. Nearly all the letters are from tenement addresses and some of them mention a sick parent or a dead relative on whom the child is still depending for a happy Christmas. None of the big charities attempts to handle these letters, but gentle-hearted individuals do. Some couples who have lost children of their own ask for a batch of this dead mail every year. Usually they are people who are in modest circumstances themselves. Two years ago three young girls took twenty-five letters. Postoffice officials are confident that in every case gifts or comforting messages go back to the children.

The trouble, of course, is that Santa Claus has never adopted an official address. Perhaps the staggering amount of his mail prevents him from doing so. But children have a pretty shrewd notion that there is only one genuine Santa Claus, if they could only locate him. They interview the department store Santa Clauses, and accept them for the rapturous moment. But they instinctively feel that these jolly old fellows don't live on the premises. They are only ectoplasmic Santa Clauses, so to speak, made of the right stuff, to be sure, and imbued with the proper spirit. It would never do to show them any disrespect or let on that they are tolerated merely as subsidiary saints. This, at least, is the attitude of the child old enough to write. The very little children naturally are of faith unshaken.

But the boy or girl who has begun to put two and two together realizes that the visible Santa Claus is not the tremendous individual who drives his reindeer up the Northern Lights and though the stratosphere. He is definitely known to exist, but is not much of a mixer in crowds. One may sometimes glimpse him in the twilit Winter sky storming across the zenith in a furious hurry to deliver his packages. But nobody has ever followed him home. That is probably the reason that the United States Postoffice, so efficient for the most part, has such difficulty in delivering his mail. If our government were not run entirely by persons more than 21 years old, it would take up this matter with Santa Claus and either force him to register his correct address or lose his vote like any other citizen.—New York Times.

Along the Zuyder Zee

Walking along the top of the great dyke which holds back the restless North Sea from the level coast of Walcheren, one is conscious of the strength of this western line of defence. A high wind blew across the flats; larks sang overhead and the blue sky was flecked with small white clouds. On the horizon, the smoke from passing steamers made sepia smudges. The shining mailboat coming in from England to Flushing, passed West Kapelle at a speed that sent the water lapping up along the dyke.

From the sea edge of this high wall one looks down landwards, as from the rim of a saucer, to where the village lies safe beneath the shelter of its protective height. Houses and streets gaily painted, as only Holland paints its most simple dwellings, stretch out into the flats, with a windmill set boldly on the edge of the ridge above and a fine church spire ominating the landscape, West Kapelle lies on and by its dyke; the men, other than the fisher folk, are kept hard at work on its structure and maintenance.

They are great builders, these calm Dutchmen. Not long ago they reclaimed more land for Holland from the Zuyder Zee; and where, only a few years ago lay a waste of waters fertile farms, grazing pastures stretch within the mighty encircling dyke that has added several thousand acres to the country. On the west, however, it is still the task of the Walcheren defences to keep the sea at bay; and the men of West Kapelle are its lieutenants.

In the autumn the long wooden breakwaters, running far out into the water, must be strengthened and tested; the brushwood matresses, which lie beneath the sea, weighted with tons of pebbles, renewed where their edges are weak. There have been times when the very existence of the villages along the coast was threatened; but this is no new thing in the history of Holland, and life goes on with equinimity and assurance in the bright-painted houses under their red roofs. In the narrow streets leading from the sea, the children play, the girls with blue aprons over their short full skirts and black shawls wound tightly round their bodices.

A vivid, almost fiery temperament is hidden beneath the strong reserve of these island people. In them the Spanish strain is strong, differentiating them sharply from the other Netherlands. No one has better painted them than the Fleming, Reimond Kimpe, who has settled in Walcheren and whose work as engineer on the dyke has brought him into intimate contact with the people for many years. His studies of the bronzed fisher-lads, gold earrings under their black curling hair, of the village girls, demure in their lace coifs, and of the dignified elders, men and women alike, are wonderful pieces of portraiture. The workers on the dyke have accepted Kimpe as one of themselves; he has consequently been able to penetrate their reserve as no other living painter of this part of the Netherlands has done.—E. C. DR. DAFOE'S COLUMN on the Quintuplets and the Care of Your Children

Change Mode of Living to Minimize Any Hereditary Weaknesses

While we are on the subject of heredity, it might be a good idea to point out that people whose family history shows a weakness in some direction such as a tendency toward contracting some particular disease, can do a great deal to save himself from it.

Take, for instance, a person whose family has numbered a good many diabetics. He can't change that tendency, but he can change habits. These people have a type of cell in their pancreas that can only do so much work. If more work than they can handle is thrown on them, they just gave up. If you are of this type, if a number of your family have suffered from diabetis, then be careful. Check your tendency towards overweight; avoid too much sugar and starch. Try to find work that doesn't involve too much strain and worry.

There are a lot of beliefs about the inheritance of disease that are nothing more than superstitious. For instance there is a common belief that a taste for whiskey is inherited. That isn't so, or at least I have never had it proven to me. But just the same if, say my father and my grandfather had died from alcoholism, I'd be pretty careful about any drinking I did.

Certain eye weakness are inherited; if that tendency is in the family, don't take a job involving a great deal of eyestrain . . . Deafness in certain forms is handed down from parents to children. There are people known as bleeders, who almost died of hemorrhage every time they cut themselves. This tendency is often inherited—handed down from mother to son.

It is on account of these inherited tendencies that the marriage of persons who are first cousins is discouraged. For if you marry your first cousin, you are quite apt to find all the family weaknesses intensified in your children. In fact the good tendencies as well as the bad ones are accentuated in the offspring of such a union, so if you do marry your cousin, you know what to expect in yor children.

There is an idea, too, that cancer is hereditary. It hasn't been proven, though, and in my opinion it isn't true. But the tendency to have cancer may be inherited. To such people, I say beware of such predisposing causes as chronic irritations.

Members of families in which cancer is prevalent should be careful of certain skin conditions. Moles often cause trouble; should be removed. Prolonged trouble with stomach and bowels, might lead to cancer, but with modern methods of treatment this is unnecessary. Don't forget to see your family doctor.

When there is any hereditary reason to fear cancer, persons should beware of chronic sores that don't heal, and with growing lumps.

When Marie, the smallest of the Quints was just a few months old, we treated her for a tumor on her hip with radium. Dr. Edmund Kelly with his father, Howard, of John Hopkins University, came up here all the way from Baltimore to look after her for we were afraid to leave the tumor there too long for fear something more serious would develop. No subsequent treatments were necessary and now she is well.

Remember that hereditary isn't all-important. You can change your mode of living in such a way as to minimize hereditary weaknesses.

DUNDAS STREET MISSION

Scholars of the Sunday School department of Dundas Street Mission entered enthusiastically into the Christmas spirit when they held their annual Christmas entertainment last evening. The Mission was crowded with parents, friends and children, who enjoyed to the fullest the interesting program by the members of the Sunday School of which Mr. R. J. Smith is superintendent.

The address of the evening was delivered by Rev. Mr. Henderson and the success of the program was due largely to the efforts of Miss Reeves, treasurer of the Sunday School, Mr. Atkinson and Mr. Crank of Albert College. The program was opened by Hymn 298 and prayer. Recitations and songs were given by Bobbie Gray, June Ostrom, D. Roach, Don Hanna, Jean Warren Helen Nolan, Jackie Grey, June Henderson, Verna Warren, Florence Daly, Gerald Garrison, Noreen Smith, Arnold Smith, Ruth Cook, Phyllis Grey, Betty Grey, Wilbert Callery and Garfield Aylesworth.

Choruses were given by the primary department, Mr. Crank's class, Miss Reeve's class, Mr. Smith's class, some of the numbers being, "We Three Kings," "Santa Claus is Coming to Town," and "Silent Night."

Rules to Follow For Improving Appearance

JOY HODGES
Good dress sense enhances her lovely figure

By HELEN FOLLETT

LONG, TALL, thin girls have especial need of cultivating the dress sense. The low-crowned, wide-brimmed hat will delete inches while those funny little stove pipes will make girls appear even taller. The same rule holds for the coiffure. When the rolls and wavelets go up, the thin face looks downright scrawny.

Thin arms should be softly draped with chiffon or georgette. The long neck can be hidden with scarf-like decorations that are chic and sassy this season. A necklace of several bands will provide a cross line, make the neck seem shorter.

The longer the skirt, the longer the legs appear to be. The uneven hemline is a blessing, and the fuller the skirt the better. The winter coat should be three-quarter length. A full high fur piece is a good bet, coat sleeves should puff out and not leap up, as is the fashion.

If health is present, the skinny darling can take on two or three pounds a week by eating properly. Every meal should be finished off with a glass of milk and cream, half and half.

Gooseflesh on arms and legs is distressing. Women hate it. What's the use of flaunting the lovely new evening robe if one's fins are like the complexion of a speckled trout?

Every day scour the arms briskly with warm soap suds and a brush with bristles that take hold like a guilty conscience. Use plenty of elbow grease; you're trying to chug up circulation.

Rinse away the lather with clear water, dry with a soft towel. Pour some cocoanut oil into the palms of the hands, give the arms a vigorous massage. Dust over with talcum powder which, with the oil, will form a beauty pack. Let it remain on over night.

In the morning bathe with warm water, dry and friction with eau de Cologne.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

(Copyright, 1937, King Features Syndicate, Inc.)
Famous Authority on Problems of Love and Marriage

Should Our Government Subsidise Young Couples Eager to Marry?

Occasionally, persons who run "lovelorn columns" turn the printed page into a wailing wall because girls don't meet the right sort of men, and vice versa. They wail, but no solution is offered.

Mr. Hitler, who does a little lovelorning in his papers occasionally but has never undertaken the holy state of matrimony himself, urges his subjects to marry and live happily ever after. Easier sain than done.

For the past decade, colleges, churches, community centres and clubs have taken into account the fact that if the world is going to carry on we must have homes, proper homes in which our future citizens will grow up with some sense of responsibility. Such organizations try to impress on youngsters some better solution of their marriage problems than rushing to Reno for three or four weeks and coming home, free to try another failure.

It's easy enough for columnists to see all the uncharted rocks which wreck that one marriage in every six. Some of them are lack of money, economic insecurity, if you like the collegiate word, irregular employment and work at less than a living wage, or, indeed, no work at all.

And almost equally important is the fact that the right sort of girls have no opportunity of meeting the right sort of men. Hundreds of letters come to this column about this tragic state of affairs. After work girls go home to families living in over-crowded apartments. Or they go to dreary boarding houses, where they never met anyone worth while. Or perhaps their destination is a spinster apartment where they fry an egg or two, and eat it in lonely rebellion.

It's practically the same with the men, who, after a day's work are forced to eat at uninviting restaurants or soda fountains. Then they take a walk, go to the movies, and return to the cheerless places they call home.

Far be it from me to endorse the Fascist way of doing things. But there is something to be said for that scheme of Mussolini's, started a couple of years ago, when he saw to it that young people met decently in their home towns, and when they married, sent them to Rome on a wedding tour, furnishing the cash. He now hands out something in the way of a nest-egg as an inducement to young people to marry.

Why don't we do something of the sort, We seem to have money for everything else—the old, the poor, the blind, the lame, the halt, even the ne'er-do-wells. But not a copper for people who want to marry and who would probably give us our best citizens of the future.

Fine meetings places could be built in every town, where boys and girls of good character could meet become acquainted, enroll in cooking classes—for marriage must be sustained by means—learn to balance a household budget, have some illustrated talks on good taste in the home.

An English member of Parliament stated something like this about ten years ago. And when I published an account of it in this column, I had to satisfy a number of readers with names, dates and place of meeting.

Instead of the sweet smiles of Mr. Hitler, urging young people going to manage it, and drowning them meantime in heavy taxes, let's go to bat for the young.

GOOD MANNERS

By MRS. CORNELIUS BEECKMAN

(Copyright, 1937, King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

Spoon or Fork—or Both

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

Last evening, while at dinner, a discussion arose over the matter of using a dessert spoon and a dessert fork for eating dessert. In this case square molds of ice cream were served, and one person insisted that it was correct to use both fork and spoon—the spoon to cut pieces and the fork for carrying it to the mouth.

I can fully realize that if cake and ice cream were served together, the fork would be used for the cake, and the spoon for the ice cream; but to use both seems a bit awkward when only cake is served.

Reader

This custom of placing and using the double silver service (dessert spoon and dessert fork) for dessert is a Europeaon custom that has found high favor in this country with many people interested in the niceties of table service.

Enthusiasts for the double silver service use a salad knife as well as a salad fork for eating salads, an entree knife and fork for entrees, a fish knife and fork for fish. And a dessert spoon and dessert fork when eating desserts. They feel . . and I enthusiastically agree . . . . that, in most cases, convenience and ease are served by the use of two utensils instead of one.

A person whose habit it is to use two silverpieces for eating desserts would quite naturally use a dessert spoon and dessert fork (if he were provided with them by a thoughtful hostess!) to eat a square mold of ice cream. But when eating ice cream (or fruit compote, cut-up fruit, short cake, fruit tart, pudding with a sauce, dessert in pastry shells or meringues) he would eat the dessert with the spoon in the right hand and guide the division of the dessert with the fork in the left hand.

Whether we use one silverpiece or two when we eat dessert is a question of choice . . . based, in most cases, on one's early training or acquired habit. The point is to be a neat and tidy eater, no matter which method you use!

It is interesting to note how many proselytes there are for the double silver service method. It is interesting to note, also how many more hostesses provide their guests with two silverpieces for most courses, leaving the choice to the guests as to their use.

Should Ask Her Mother First

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

Will you kindly answer this question for me? I have a daughter, sixteen years of age, and she is in her third year of High School. She is quite advanced in every way.

Recently she met a young man of nineteen and they like to go places together. Although I do not object to her going, do you think it is correct for her to make appointments to go out with him without telling him that, although she would like to accept, she must ask her mother?

C.

This is just what your daughter should do. And since you are apparently such understanding friends, I am sure that she will be co-operative with you about this, if you talk it over with her. You can so easily explain that this is such a small thing you are asking of her, and by doing it she will be making every one concerned happy. You will be pleased with her cooperation with your wishes; she will be pleased that she has made you happy; and the young man will respect her so much more for her respect of you and of herself.

The Stars Say—

For Sunday, December 25

By GENEVIEVE KEMBLE

SUNDAY'S horoscope indicates a paramount attention to the spiritual and humane attributes of the year's outstanding period of festivity and celebration of the festival of good will and peace on earth. A more than ordinary attitude of these mystical qualities is likely to mark the annual period of joyousness, kindliness and mutual appreciation. All trivial intrusions of jealousy, strife and ill will should be summarily dismissed.

Those whose birthday it is may approach this holiday season with subdued reflective, sympathetic and philanthropic appreciation of the meaning of Christmas, and a more sober reaction to festivity and celebration. The mystical and idealistic or altruistic impulses are emphasized although the social congenial and youthful attributes are not wanting. All petty or ignoble impulses should be decisively dismissed.

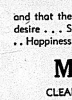
A child born on this day may be versatile, diligent and talented, as well as audacious, adventurous and romantic. It should be friendly, companionable and jovial, although having deep religious and humanitarian impulses.

For Monday, December 26

MONDAY'S astrological forecast is for a jollification of the annual period of good cheer, although there may be somewhat of a reaction from high tension and acute indulgences. A surprising stroke of good luck, primarily affecting the social, domestic or emotional life, is indicated. Persons of high station figure in this and may join in prolonging the festivities. Cultivate this by hospitality.

Those whose birthday it is are on the eve of a very promising year, with a sudden stroke of good fortune looming large and affecting the social as well as business status. Persons of high prestige and standing seem disposed in this direction and should be cultivated by gestures of hospitality and grace. Much depends on such social or humanitarian contact.

A child born on this day may be excellently endowed with fine attributes and talents to win the support and friendship of those in high places. It may have an arresting personality, many graces and social charms making for a probably fashionable or influential career.



Season's Greetings

To all of you at this joyous season we extend our sincere hope that your Christmas be merry and that the New Year bring you all that you desire . . . Success to crown your every effort . . Happiness and peace to attend your success.

Successful Concert Given By Pupils

Rawdon, Dec. 24—The pupils of S. S. No. 17 Snarr School held a very successful school concert under the direction of their teacher Miss Ruth Higgins with a large attendance. The programme opened with "O Canada" and Garnet Thain recited "A Christmas Gift." Harald Linn and Donald Matthews gave a musical number, guitar and harmonica. Arden Dracup rendered "Sleepy Tulips". Rev. J. E. Beckel was master of ceremonies and at this picture he gave a brief address. Norma Cotten sang "I Don't Want to go to School Today." Kenneth Matthews rendered "Three Little Mice." Douglas Cotten recited "Live to Rise", and the school sang "The First Noel." Racourn Thain gave a good-bye reading and Norma Cotten gave "Camellas Hump." Norman Leury contributed a harmonica selection. On operatte entitled "The House Gnomes" and Joan Dracup recited "The Snow Man." D. McGee gave a vocal solo with guitar accompanient.

Harold Linn gave "A Possibility" and Raeburn and Garnet Thain contributed a musical selection, guitar and harmonica. Norman Leury recited "The Holiday". The junior pupils sang "Away in a Manger." Some of the children wrote original verses about Santa Claus and these were read at this time. The school rendered a chorus "Don't Wait Till the Night Before Christmas." Messrs. R. McGee and Carl Linn gave a musical number "Your the Only Star in my Blue Heaven." Donna McGee recited "All Wool" and a play entitled "Three Wishes" was staged by the pupils. Donald Matthews sang "Texas Rose." The special event of the programme was "a Highland Fling" given by Joan Dracup, Donna McGee and Norma Cotten. A group of the children formed an orchestra of guitars and mouth organs, and they rendered "Silent Night." The Ribbon Band delighted with "Jingle Bells" and "Good Night Ladies." Garnet Thain recited "No Stockings to Wear." The pupils gave a clock song and Mr. Morris of Tweed contributed two musical numbers on the saw. Don Matthews gave a reading "Last Wishes for Christmas" and at this time Santa arrived and distributed the presents from off the beautiful decorated tree.

TOO SERIOUS

Probably, for the good of their health, many people nowadays take themselves too seriously. Others are scared into seriousness by the 'blat' of the radio and sensational newspaper headlines. Often you give a person a position with some authority over others and they immediately begin to take themselves too seriously. It is hard for an individual to keep their spirit of wanting to have legitimate fun, for as soon as a child enters public school the general run of teachers abhor any one who has initiative enough to have fun. Until this year pupils in high schools had a forenoon and afternoon recess when they could be on their own for relaxation and fun for ten minutes, but this year the department officials who have a little authority have discontinued recesses. This, in our opinion, is a mistake, for, with the amount of homework given, we think the children would grow up to have better health and better judgment if relieved for a few minutes each morning and afternoon from the directions of those over them.—Kincardine News.

ony reached the hospital just time to meet Paul Harris com- down the corridor from Dora's m.

What did she say?" Tony ask- breathlessly.

Nothing," said Paul, "except t Jan brought all her presents r yesterday and put them away a drawer to be opened on ristmas morning. She doesn't expect Jan today. She thinks she's getting ready for the party tonight and is too busy to come over here."

"Mrs. Talbot says Jan had the kitten with her, and that she was taking it to Dora. Did you see it around the room anywhere?"

"I'm sure it wasn't there" said Paul. "Dora certainly would have mentioned it to me."

"Go back and ask her," Tony urged. "We've got to know!"

Nothing loath, Paul returned to Dora's room.

"I forgot to tell you," he said with what he considered positively Machiavellian cleverness. "Pussy-puff sends his love."

"I haven't seen him for so long" mourned Dora. "I suppose he's grown to be a great big cat, so big I wouldn't know him!"

It took a few more minutes to cheer Dora and persuade her that Pussy-puff was doing all he could in her absence to improve his looks for the express purpose of pleasing her on her return to the hotel.

When he rejoined Tony, Paul found that young man almost beside himself with impatience.

"Dora hasn't seen the cat'—'

"Then what are we waiting for?" cried Tony, hustling Paul down the stairs and out into his car.

"Let you off at the hotel,' 'said Tony between clenched teeth. "I am going to make a round of the railroad stations."

"Don't forget the buses," Paul called after him, standing on the sidewalk in front of the Devon Arms as Tony shot away.

Tony tried all the ticket windows at the Grand Central and repeated the performance at the Pensylvania Railroad Station.

"Did a girl buy a ticket here yesterday?" he asked each astonished ticket seller in turn. "A very beautiful girl, red hair, you know, and the most unusual expression, sort of gay and sad at the same time?"

At about this point the ticket seller usually interrupted with some abrupt query, tending to bring the description more closely down to facts, the upshot of each conversation being that no such girl as Tony described had bought a ticket from the man he happened to be questioning. Had he asked the man at the next window? What time would it have been when she bought the ticket? Any time from three o'clock on? Oh, he wouldn't have seen her in that case. He wasn't on duty then! If the gentleman would come back after three he would be able to talk to the man who had sold her the ticket if she had been buying one!

A few of these men admitted that they had been in their cages during the hours mentioned, but they were sure that no girl answering Jan's description had appeared.

Tony wondered if he ought to ring up the hospitals, but decided against it. Jan's note indicated clearly that she was going somewhere. And there were still the buses.

He had about given up when he discovered a man who remembered seeing a girl, in a green coat and carrying a basket with some sort of animal inside, buying a bus ticket. Had he happened to hear where the girl was going? Let's see now. After deep thought and carefully weighed alternatives Tony's informant decided that it must have been a northbound bus. After consultation with those in charge Tony learned that there was only one-bus leaving at about the time, according to his aide's calculations, Jan had left. He got a map of the route the bus would take. He was hampered by having no knowledge whatever of Jan's destination—but this was enough for a start, anyway.

Getting through the city traffic was the worst part now. If Tony had obeyed his natural impulse he would have driven relentlessly through the streets, mowing down all before him. Rut of course he did nothing of the sort. He threaded his way carefully, avoiding collisions by no more than a whisker—but avoiding them nevertheless. As soon as he was out of the city he made up handsomely for lost time.

At every bus station he stopped and questioned the attendant. Generally somebody remembered the girl in the green coat, and at one station the man was bursting with information. His Aunt Hattie had come home from New York yesterday by bus, and she had been telling the mabout a city girl "too good lookin' to be real," who had forced her way, mind you, into Aunt Hattie's seat. Aunt Hattie was tired after all her shopping "on them hard city pavements," and she had all she could do to manage her bundles as it was. But this girl had insisted on Aunt Hattie moving all the packages so she could sit down next the window while she balanced on her knees an enormous basket in which she was carrying the biggest cat Aunt Hattie had ever seen the like of. The animal must have got her in such a nervous state that she had her blood pressure today. No—the girl hadn't got off at this station.

Tony drove on again furiously. It grew colder as it grew darker, and the road continued to rise steadily, winding between steep fir-crowded slopes. The snow, which had been falling lightly when Tony left town, was coming down in earnest now. With one window open the icy blasts made him turn up his coat collar. Wind tore shrilly at the top of the car; clogging snow seemed to drag at the wheels.

It was good to see the lights of the next station and Tony was glad enough to find he could get something hot to eat. He was chilled through. Between bites he put his usual questions. Yes, the man in charge remembered the girl in green.

"By cricky, but she was a purty one....smart, too! And what she thought of that little yaller kitten she had with her! She made a pitcher a-holdin' it in her arms when Snappy here was carryin' on the way dogs do when there's a cat naywheres nearby."

Well, he was still on the right trail. Tony drove on with increasing difficulty. After a while he began to be afraid that he was not on the right road. There were so few houses. And they were so far back from the road that he hesitated to try to plow across the unbroken fields to ask directions. "It's a real old-fashioned blizzard," he decided.

After what seemed hours of wallowing in the muffling white he was certain something was wrong. The only sensible thing to do was to turn around and make his way back to the last station. Just then he saw a cluster of lights, dim in the distance. Lights meant a village He breathed easier. There must be a bus stop in the town; perhaps the bus he was trailing was here, waiting for a break in the weather. Surely no driver would try to go on in a storm like this.

CHAPTER XXV

"Say!"

A big gruff man Jan had noticed getting on last night spoke sharply from the seat across the aisle. His voice sounded very loud in contrast to the lassitude that had overtaken the other passengers. They looked at him in surprise; even the couple Jan had privately called "the honeymooners" stopped their intimate whispering and turned to stare.

"Say, drivers!" the man shouted again and it seemed a long while before the driver answered, looking up into the mirror over his head:

"What do you want?"

The man's face was red as he realized he had the attention of the entire bus, but he went on doggedly:

"This here's a real snowstorm, brother. I know the look of them —I've lived here all my life."

"You're telling me!" the driver commented, easing his machine slowly around a sharp turn.

The other passengers, most of them, laughed. But Jan was looking at the reddened, weather-beaten face of the man who had spoken, and something in his expression frightened her.

"It ain't so funny," he said sharply and the driver answered in the same tone:

"So what do you want me to do? We're coming to a stop up here in Valleyville. You can get off there if you want to. But me, if the road's all right, I'm taking the bus on."

The passengers chattered excitedly among themselves about the situation that confronted them. Jan talked to no one. but she opened the latch of Pussy-puff's basket and stroked the soft ball of fur. A tiny paw batted at her fingers and she felt his "little glass teeth" as Dora called them, biting her. Then, in apology, a warm tongue darted out and licked her fingers softly.

Jan looked out as the bus crunched to a stop. The place was not large and it stood all alone, in the midst of loneliness.

The proprietor, a young, fresh faced lad, waited on them nonchalantly, slapping the coffee in front of Jan so that it spilled over into the saucer.

"Quite a little flurry, eh?" he asked jovially. "We have all kinds of weather up here—all bad." He laughed loudly at his own remark.

But the driver did not laugh with him. He said only: "Road clear?"

"Sure it's clear," the boy grinned and added, "as far as the Moose River bridge."

"What's the matter with the bridge?'

"How should I know? The man who called just said to tell you you couldn't get through. But they're workin' on it—you. wait here, he says, till he calls again."

The man who had objected to driving on became, now that he found that they were stopped, anxious to get away. He questioned the boy behind the counter at length as to every other means of transportation, but the young man shook his head as he answered that there were no railroads, no other bus lines, no houses nearer than the village ten miles away, and he wouldn't take his car out on the road if you paid him.

Jan asked timidly how far it was to Moose River, and was told that they would make it in a little over an hour as soon as the road was clear.

"But you don't know how long that will be," a middle-aged man who had not spoken before said in a discouraged tone. The driver shook his head. A woman who was urging her little girl to finish her glass of milk said impatiently. "But we're going beyond Moose River. Do you mean to say we're likely to be here all day?"

"No telling." The driver was exasperatingly noncommittal.

Jan hoped they would soon be on their way again. After riding so long, she had become accustomed to movement and it was oddly irritating to be left stationary out here in what to herself she called a wilderness.

"More like a desert though, really," she thought, staring out at the long stretches of white snow unbroken even by trees. The country must be a waste of barren rock when the snow was gone; it wasn't possible that all the underbrush was buried in drifts. For the first time since she had started on the trip, discouragement overtook her. New York seemed very far away, and the bright warmth of the Devon Arms might well have been nothing but a dream.

"Mama—may I play with the kitty?" asked the small girl who had finally abandoned all pretense of drinking her milk.

"You'll have to ask the lady, Helen. And be sure to say please," said the mother.

"Pleathe?" said the child, turning round eyes to Jan's face. "May I play with your kitty?"

Jan drew the youngster down beside her and opened the basket. Pussy-puff obligingly stood on his hind legs and waved two fat paws. Helen laughed in childish delight and tried to pronounce "Pussy-puff" after Jan. They romped contentedly for the next hour.

With maddening slowness the time dragged on after that. Some time during the afternoon — Jan had given up looking at the clock —a motherly looking woman came over and sat beside her. Jan looked up and smiled, and they talked a while. The woman seemed perfectly calm; only her hands twisting a handkerchief showed her restlessness. She said finally:

"This waiting is so terrible. I was hurrying to my daughter. They told me her baby is expected tonight."

Jan, ashamed of her own impatience, said softly:

"Born on Christmas eve! What a lovely birthday. You mustn't worry." She returned the tired Pussy-puff to his basket and patted the broad shoulder next to her own.

After a while the woman moved away and Jan tried walking up and down in front of the little station. The snow seemed to have lightened, although the sky was still grey. The wind was rising. Jan thought, as she listened to its shrill whistling. She was glad enough to get in out of the cold again.

"Doesn't that telephone ever ring?" somebody asked, when it seemed that the silence in the little room was becoming unbearable.

"It's getting dark," muttered someone else.

"Be here all night, folks, I guess," the boy behind the counter said cheerfully. "Can't work on that bridge after it gets dark."

The telephone rang.

Everybody straightened as the bus driver took down the receiver.

"Yeah? ....Good!.... Okay .... I get it."

He hung up the receiver and started for the door. "The bridge is safe. Come on, folks. Step on it. Got to make up for lost time."

Everybody, relieved and laughing, scrambled into the bus after him. It was like getting home to be settled again in the soft seat. Jan leaned back contentedly. The stout motherly woman was in the seat ahead; Helen and her mother and father were well up toward the front.

The bus was making good time. It was quite dark now. In the path of light made by their headlights, Jan could see that the snow was still sifting down. Apparently the road was covered with drifts; the bus lurched occasionally and once, as it swayed around a sharp turn, the red-faced man muttered a protest under his breath. The driver did not slacken his speed, however. Looking at his broad back, Jan's sense of security deepened and the heavy purring of the motor gradually lulled her into a sort of waking dream.

CHAPTER XXVI

With her eyes closed, Jan pictured the scene when a few miles further on she would reach her destination. She would phone Brad immediately. It was heart-warming to think of his pleasant voice, of the way he would take command. She could almost hear his admonition to stay right where she was until he could come to her....

The bus with a sudden lurch slid sideways; the bride screamed. Instinctively Jan felt for the arm of the seat with one hand and braced herself as she reached for Pussy-puff's slipping basket with the other.

The bus seemed to hang suspended for a second as if undecided whether or not to turn over. Then, slowly, so that Jan felt she could almost see the wheels sink gently into the snow covered ditch, the bus tilted to one side and lay there, panting. The driver cut his engine and turned around to face his passengers—a discouraged sag to his shoulders.

"Well—that's that. Of all the rotten luck!"

Through the sudden babble of voices the middle-aged man made himself heard.

"You mean we're off the road?"

"In a ditch," said the driver wearily.

The bride gave a low moan, "I —I think my arm's broken," she whimpered.

Immediately the bus was in an uproar. The travellers stumbled and fell over each other as they tried to make their way to the girl on the tilted floor. The young husband tried to keep them back.

"No one touches her except a doctor," he said grimly.

"Don't crowd her," someone put in, "get back, all of you."

"Keep your seats," the driver ordered. "I'll get out and put flares on the road."

"How far are we from Moose River?" asked the middle-aged man.

"About fifteen miles," said the driver, "and it's ten miles back to Valleyville. Can't walk either way in this snow."

"Young man, do we have to stay here all night?" The mother of Helen sounded outraged.

"Maybe they'll look for us," the motherly woman put in.

"Unless the storm gets worse," said Helen's mother, gloomily.

The driver clambered out and they saw him, presently, floundering through snow up to his knees. He disappeared in the darkness beyond their lights, but after a few minutes they saw the flicker of a match and suddenly, as the kerosene caught, a wavering flame shot up and silhouetted his bulk against the snow. They followed him with fascinated eyes as he lit another flare beside the bus, and craned their necks to look through the back window as he struggled for about ten feet behind them, where he placed a third signal light.

They were all quieted when he returned, puffing and shaking the snow from his clothes. The young husband stroked his wife's tear-stained cheek as her head rested against his shoulder. The eerie whine of the wind seemed louder, mocking them, blowing the snow in fitful gusts against the windows. Helen began to cry. "You said we were going to visit Santa Claus," she said accusingly to her mother.

Jan sat silent, feeling helpless in the face of this disaster. Pussy-puff mewed plaintively and Helen, hearing the faint sound, made her way slowly along the slanting floor.

"May I play with the kitty again?" she asked in a subdued voice.

Jan made room for her beside the basket and gave her a handkerchief to dangle in front of the little wire-covered door. In a few minutes his antics had the child laughing gleefully.

"He likes me." Helen said shyly, looking up at Jan.

"Of course he does," cried Jan warmly. "We all like you—you're such a good little girl." But she sighed as she turned back to the window, now frosted over in grotesque patterns. It must be freezing outside.

A shriek from Helen startled her and she turned quickly to discover that the child had unfastened the basket door and that Pussy-puff was leaping in his new-found freedom from one chair back to another.

"Ooooo-h!" shouted Helen. He got away."

"Oh, please—" Jan turned to the other passengers. "Help me catch him."

Glad of something to relieve the monotony, the occupants of the bus, for the most part, joined in the pursuit—at least they made futile grabs for the cat as he flitted by. Pussy-puff thought they were playing and entered into the spirit of the thing, flying through the air when a hand came too close, eluding a too-confident gesture with feline facility. Helen's tinkling laughter was soon echoed in guffaws from the men and finally everybody, even the bride—now lying quietly in her husband's arms—was smiling. A last Pussy-puff was caught and put back into his basket.

"The child's right," the middle-aged man said suddenly. "What are we so downhearted about? It's tough, of course, to be marooned here, but it won't be forever. After all, we're warm and can be comfortable for a time...."

In the silence that followed, Jan impulsively began to sing. Just the chorus of her gay Jingle Bells song, under her breah. Then, as she finished, she was startled at the burst of applause. She looked around diffidently.

"That's the ticket, sister," cried the bus driver. "Give us a little Christmas cheer."

"It is Christmas eve," said Jan.

"Come on up here," invited the bus driver, "where people can see you. Take my seat."

Laughing, Jan made her way to the front of the bus and leaned against the back of the driver's seat as he made way for her. She did not know what a picture she made as she stood there, hatless, her dusky hair loosened a little and lying softly against the collar of her green coat. Her golden eyes were dark with excitement.

"[illegible] won't sing alone," she laughed. "[illegible]veryone must join in."

In the embarrassed pause that followed, the motherly woman began softly in warm contralto:

"We Three Kings of Orient are."

Jan nodded, raising her hand to mark the rhythm.

"Bearing gifts we traverse afar
"Field and fountain, moor and mountain,
"Following yonder star ....
"O star of wonder, star of night,
"Star with royal beauty bright"

Jan's valiant young voice drew the less confident voices in its wake. Those who did not know the words hummed, and even the bus driver, catching the tune, bellowed loudly: "De-de da-de da-de da!" until the bus was filled with sound.

When the old simple tune had come to an end everybody felt better. Jan, looking around at the brightened faces, thought a minute.

"Let's try 'God rest ye merry, gentlemen,'" she began, and the others chorused heartily,

"Let nothing you dismay."

After that they tried "Silent Night" getting some really good harmony from the middle-aged man and motherly woman. Everyone was pleased with the effect and with one accord began to sing again.

The little bride smiled from the circle of her husband's arms. The motherly woman spoke for all of them when she said:

"It's going to be a real nice Christmas, after all."

CHAPTER XXVII

Surprisingly enough the lights of the village did not seem to come any closer. Tony tried desperately to see if a road led off from the main highway, which, evidently, ran some distance from the town, but the soft unbroken snow effectively concealed any such road, even if there were one. He went on more slowly, fearful that he had failed in his mission.

The little wayside stand before which he finally drew up did not seem firm enough, to withstand the fury of the wind that rushed at him as he opened the door. He ducked his head and plunged through the snow, bursting into the brilliantly lighted room, propelled by the gale behind him.

"You'd better shut that door, mister," the young man tending the counter said brusquely, "It's one freezing night!"

Tony, still blinded by the light, felt his face tingle with the sudden warmth. He found a stool in front of the counter and took off his snow laden hat.

"You can give me a cup of coffee," he began, trying to ignore the obvious interest in the young man's bright eyes. "It certainly is bad weather. Do you suppose that the buses try to get through on a night like this?"

"Oh, sure. Nothing stops them," settling himself for a long and, to Tony, unwelcome monologue. "You see, they're so heavy they can hold the road when a car like yours or mine mights go into a skid. Say, I've seen them go by this station forty-five miles an hour on a road so glassy you wouldn't believe it!"

"Make it short," Tony interrupted. "Just tell me if the last bus went through."

"Sure, about two hours ago. But, as I was saying—"

"Two hours ago?"

"Yeah. They was late on account of the bridge bein' unsafe—"

"They had to go over a bridge that wasn't safe?"

"I'm tryin' to tell you. The bridge got fixed."

Tony gave a sigh of relief.

"But they never did get to the next station. Had a call from Moose River an hour or so ago. Must have been some sort of accident."

As if there'd been a bomb under it, Tony leaped from his stool, sending both cup and saucer flying to the floor. His steel grey eyes seemed to bore straight through the young man, whose smile suddenly disappeared from his lips.

"You fool!" Tony shouted. "What do you mean by standing there grinning like a hyena? Why didn't you tell me there'd been an accident when I first came in? Where was the accident? How badly were they hurt?"

"Say, mister," the young man said aggrievedly, "I'm no receiving set! Just an accident, that's all they told me. Somewheres along the road...."

But the last words were lost on Tony as he slammed out of the station and flung himself into the car. The next minute, careless of drifting snow, he was driving headlong around hairpin urns and down the steep grades of the mountain road. Just in front of his headlights he could see Jan's face, framed in soft waving hair that reached her shoulders. Sometimes she seemed to be smiling and at other times he could swear her golden eyes were looking pleadingly at him.

Accident!

Why had he ever allowed her to think for a minute that he was not in a position to take care of her? Even on that last night, why hadn't he turned to her and begged her forgiveness? He had talked like an idiot. Tony told himself bitterly; he had allowed her to think that he really wanted to be mistaken for his own chauffeur, when actually he had just found it amusing for a while. Well, it was amusing now, wasn't it? If only he could see her, speak to her just once more!

Above the hum of his motor, laboring through the heavy snow, an alien sound reached his ears.

A moan?

A cry?

Tony slowed down for an instant, straining to hear over the roar of the wind. Perhaps it was just that he had heard. But no, it was something else. It sounded like music....But of course that was impossible in this lonely waste! He topped the next hill and saw the road stretching out emptily before him. But now the strange sound came through more clearly. Singing!

The gratitude that enveloped Tony made him realize how miserably sure he had been, that he would come upon a silent and frightening scene. Of course Jan, brave as she was, would sing in the face of disaser. But as the chorus swelled louder and he heard many voices joined with hers, he was definitely reassured.

"O come, all ye faithful, Joyful and triumphant—"

As the beautiful old hymn rolled forth toward him Tony felt that he wanted to sing, too. He could see the bus now, like a small lighted ship, outlined by its three flares —a warm spot of hope in that vast snow-covered waste.

"Hello there! Are you all right?" The color left Jan's face as she realized whose voice it was that hailed from outside the bus. Before the driver could move she had flung open the door and reached out her hand to draw him into the little friendly circle of people who had kept the long, lonely vigil together.

"Tony!"

For a few minutes questions and answers flew thick and fast from each of the passengers. Tony finally held up his hands helplessly, and explained that he had only heard of their trouble a little while before and had not yet had time to discover whether or not the reserve crew was already under way. But, he assured them, his car was there. Moose River was only a few miles away and he would go for help at once. He and the bus driver discussed it briefly and it was settled that this was what he should do.

FORMER CHAMPS PREPARE TO MAKE A RING COMEBACK

Schmeling, Braddock and McLarnin in Line for Bouts

ALL PAST THIRTY

McLarnin and Armstrong Would Provide Fans With a Sizzler

By GAYLE TALBOT

New York, Dec. 24 (AP)—It is learned from what the foreign correspondents term an unimpeachable source that three former world boxing champions are preparing to make comebcks and are waiting only for promoter Mike Jacobs to name their opponents and the dates.

They are Jim Braddock and Max Schmeling ,the two old geezers who held the heavyweight championship some years ago, and Jimmy McLarnin, the ex-welterweight titleholder from Vancouver, whose last important fight was in 1936.

Braddock, out of the ring a year, wants to try it again because he has been bored stiff since his restaurant folded up some months ago. He is aware, too, that the boxing business is enjoying its greatest boom in years. The book says Jim is 33.

Schmeling, fully recovered from the back injury inflicted by Joe Louis last summer, is dickering from Germany and will go into training as soon as Jacobs decides upon a spot for him. Max plans to have two tune-up bouts in Germany before coming over. Max also is 33, according to the book.

After McLarnin.

They have been after McLarnin to come out of retirement and try to put the slug on Henry Armstrong and in spite of his denials, "Baby Face" is said to be ready to give it a whirl if the inducement is right. He is willing to fight Armstrong next spring but only if the welterweight championship is on the line. Jacobs fully expects to arrange that to Jimmy's satisfaction.

Such a fight would just about fill any of the local bowls, and Jacobs, who presently is sunning himself down in Florida, knows it.

Alone of the three come-backers, Braddock has no illusions about regaining his title. The memory of that final punch Louis landed on him out in Chicago still is with him. He wants no more of it. Jim simply has fought so long he knows nothing else to do, and he figures he still can whip most of the heavyweight crop.

Sports Roundup

(By Drew Middleton, Associated Press Sports Writer).

New York, Dec. 24 (AP)— Sid Luckman definitely will play pro football next year, according to Potsy Clark, manager of Brooklyn Dodgers....Potsy added he not only had assurances that Luckman would play, but that 17 of the 20 college heroes he drafted would appear at the Dodgers' camp come next August....Gilmer Willis, Jr., a better than fair place . kicker, booted Harrisonburg (Vam) High into the co-championship of Virginia by kicking a field goal 38 yrds against the wind.

Here are the bowl football games prices betting Commissioner J. J. Carroll of St. Louis is the man .... You must put up five to win two if you bet on Southern California and if you want Duke, five will bring you nine....Get aboard, Durham, they're going fast....Bet 10 on Tennessee and if they win you win —three dollars....Oklahoma is the shortender at 11-5. Texas Christian bettors must place $20 on the line to win $7 while Carnegie Tech fanciers will be accommodated at 19-10....Texas Tech is 13-10 over St. Mary's and the East 9-20 over the West in the All-Star game.

The Dodgers loudly deny that the purchase of such ancients as Luke Sewell, Tonyy Lazzeri and Ray Hayworth means they are building for 1929....Barring St. Louis Cardinals, writes John McDonald, the Dodgers' starting lineup is the youngest in the National League.

* * *

To all of the sporting fraternity we wish the very best there is to be had. As we are leaving the old work bench for a belated vacation until another year rolls around, we will have to add "A Happy New Year" and may Belleville's sportsdom enjoy a prosperous and successful 1939. To those who assisted this department in lessening our daily burdens throughout 1938, we sincerely add our thanks.

* * *

As has been our custom for the past years we will make a short resume of the activities of Belleville's sporting activities during the year now fading rapidly on the horizon. After hitting the gong for three provincial championships in 1937, we find a blank was drawn in this title-winning realm in 1938.

* * *

HOCKEY—After winning the intermediate "B" title in 1937, the Belleville Redmen advanced to the Intermediate "A" semi-finals last season, but were then eliminated by the Owen Sound "Trappers". The R.C.A.F. "Flyers", Allan Cup contenders in 1937, failed to emerge from their group, which was won by Peterboro last year. The "Airmen" won the George Van Horne Memorial cup for the second time last season, however. Our juniors didn't go so hot, but a juvenile team later met with success and will doubtless be the nucleus of better hockey days in Beleville. Local district leagues enjoyed a good season, however.

* * *

BASEBALL—Belleville was represented in the O.B.A. with an intermediate team in the Bay of Quinte League. The locals advanced to the league finals, but lost out to Napanee. The Belleville Kiwanis juniors won their junior league, but fell before Oshawa in the playdowns. Although the future of baseball looms brilliant for the district in general, the future outcome of the summer pastime is rather drab in Belleville, however.

* * *

SOFTBALL—Softball enjoyed a splendid season locally, a keen six-teamed league functioning. Corbys A.C. won the loop, but were eliminated by Kingston, after some hectic games. In turn the Point Anne squad, provincial champions of the previous year, took the Kingston nine out after another fine series, but the "Cementmen" fell before the strong Oshawa nine. The Belmont kids, a local junior nine, won over Peterboro and Kingston before bowing in a third game to Toronto. The Ki-Y and playground softball loops enjoyed a fine year, however. Local softball mentors are planning big things for 1939, however.

* * *

GOLF—Both the Bay of Quinte and the Belleville Golf Club enjoyed a splendid season, the weather being ideal. Tommy Carruthers won the Central Ontario amateur golf title at Port Hope displaying his usual sterling brand of golf, but in the city championships Harry Ridley not only defeated Tommy, for the Belleville golf title, but the city championship. This match attracted widespread interest in the local golfing realm, Carruthers having won the Quinte honors prior to meeting Ridley.

* * *

TENNIS—Belleville had two tennis clubs in operation and Point Anne one, all competing in the Central Ontario League. Both the Belleville Club, playing on the Quinte Skating Club courts and the Bay of Quinte clubs enjoyed good seasons.

AQUATICS—The feature of water sports was the second annual Gold Cup races at Picton, which had the misfortune to have Jupiter Pluvius dampen the proceedings. The Belleville Yacht Club held their weekly punt races with increased interest, Skipper Maurice Callaghan replacing Duke Smith as the club winner. Much interest was seen in swimming around Victoria Park and the new Belleville Beaches, which are a decided asset to the community. Anglers also reported an exceptionally good season of fishing in local waters for a change for the better.

RUGBY—In the realm of rugby football the Albert College seniors advanced to the C.O.S.S.A. senior interscholastic finals, where they lost to Niagara Falls by a close score. The Belleville Panthers failed to win a single game in the O.R.F.U., Cobourg winning the group. The Panthers managed to develop several young players and are in a position to advance the game another season. At the B.C.I.V.S. a complete schedule of six-man football was played with success.

BASKETBALL—The city cagers fared well within their respective groups, both the intermediate and junior "Y" teams winning their loops, but in turn falling before the strong Toronto opposition. Albert College held the senior interscholastic torch well, while at B.C.I.V.S. inter-form basketball held the spotlight.

* * *

BOWLING—Both alley and lawn bowling enjoyed a good season of activity. On the alleys new team champions were crowned at both the Recreation and the "Y" alleys, while the Belleville Lawn Bowling Club saw increased membership and additional tournaments, thanks to the good work of President John Shaw and his able associates.

* * *

SKATING—One of the outstanding sporting features of the year was the ice carnival presented by the members of the Belleville Skating Club augmented by several well known skaters from Toronto. The presentation was unique, pleasing and a revelation to the general public, who appreciated the efforts of the local artists in their applause. A new and more interesting program of fancy and figure skating with additional ice pageant are being planned for 1939.

* * *

After eighteen months absence from his native Belleville, George Pepper, Belleville's gift to the English motorcycle racing world, returned home to visit his parents recently. George is now considered one of England's premier dirt track riders and is captain of the Newcastle team. He returns to the English racing tracks in a few weeks at which time one might well say, "Local boy makes good".

* * *

There was a general decrease of attendance at indoor sporting events, which left the promoters of boxing and wrestling rather dubious and the fans without any ring shows. Both Belleville playgrounds saw increased attendance and additional facilities provided however.

* * *

Tommy Pedder brought honors to the city during 1938 when he won the city, Canadian and North American weight-lifting championship for the 123-pound class. Pedder is ranked highly in the U.S.A. where he is known as "America's best built small man". Unfortunately Tommy's acquired laurels fell on deaf ears in Belleville, little recognition being afforded his winning of the North American weight-lifting championship. We can at least add our congratulations as Tommy has brought the name of Belleville before many hundreds of Americans.

* * *

No local sports resume would be complete without mention of the Belleville Badminton Club, one of the most thriving enterprising sports and recreational clubs in the city. Thanks to President Bob Brown, Len Pozard and others. Belleville badminton fans saw the world's champion, Jack Purcell, give an exhibition here last spring and only recently four of Canada's ranking badminton players materially assisted the pastime with another splendid exhibition in the city, when outstanding players such as Rod Phelan, Jack Sibbald, Dave Robertson and Horton Smith all contributed to the uplifting of badminton with splendid exhibitions at the armouries.

* * *

Today's contribution winds up another year of comment on local sports. We endeavour to keep our sports notes as nearly local as possible, although at times it seems difficult. However, the success of the column is due to the co-operation we receive from those at the helm of sports in this community. To them we reiterate the prosperity of the New Year as we now lock up the old Remington in vacation until 1939. So farewell until 1939 and we are glad we live in a country where it is a privilege and honor to broadcast to the world that we are Canadians, who voice our opinions with ballots, rather than bullets.

BRANTFORD LOSES TO ST. CATHARINES

Score is 9-5 With Teams Collecting 23 Scoring Points

St. Catharines, Ont., Dec. 24 (CP) —Goalkeepers apparently entered the spirit of Christmas gift-giving here last night for fourteen goals were scored in a senior "A" division, Ontario Hockey Association game between St. Catharines Chiefs and Brantford Red Birds. Chiefs won 9-5 and players of both teams benefitted to the extent of 23 scoring points.

Through the winning debut in the new Garden City Gardens, St. Kitts took over undisputed possession of third place in the standing of the six-team league. They are one point behind Oshawa and five in arrears of the leading Toronto Goodyears. Brantford, who have won but one game this season, are fluttering about in the cellar.

Four Brant goals came in the final period. Ebby Edmison counted two of them in the final three minutes. Other Bird marksmen were Hamilton's Ab Conick, with two, and Tony Torti, one.

Eddie Lister celebrated the Yuletide season with three goals and Arn Rombough followed with two. Bobby Pinder, Rudy Pilous, Sam Phillips, and Ossoe Carnegie, Toronto negro, each scored one.

President James Douglas of the O.H.A. and other association officials attended the game and were introduced to the crowd of 1,000.

LEAFS HANG UP THEIR STOCKINGS

Horner, Bad Man of Team, Does Not Believe In Santa Claus

Toronto, Dec. 24 (CP)—Toronto's Maple Leafs will hang up their blue-and-white stockings following a game with Detroit here tonight in hopes that Santa Claus will fill them to abundane with hockey goodness. That is, all except Roughouse Red Horner. He doesn't believe in Mr. Claus.

Horner, once again regaining the heights as the National League's "villian", doesn't think there's a Santa Claus because "some guy dressed like Santa Claus told me the Leafs would be in first place by Christmas." Horner hissed as team mates appended a list of hopes to the genial old gent.

Although reluctant to discuss their Christmas wishes, players admitted they all pertained to hockey. Here's what a few of them admitted:

Goaler Turk Broda—"I asked for seven or eight more shutouts."

Harvey (Busher) Jackson—"I wrote for a receipt for the Stanley Cup."

Bucko McDonald — "Bigger and better bodychecks, and I want to make good with the Leafs."

Gordie Drillon—"A voucher for 20 goals."

Syl Apps—"I said I'd be satisfied with 20 assists."

Jimmy Fowler—"A guarantee of fewer fatal injuries."

Manager Conny Smythe and Coach Dick Irwin—"More wins and a fast return of all our injured."

JOHNNY LONGDEN IS BEST RIDER IN NORTH AMERICA

Highest Money Winner Followed Closely by Nick Wall

$17,000 FOR CONTRACT

Longden Weighs 105 Pounds and Has a Great Pair of Hands

By ALAN RANDAL

New York, Dec. 24 CP)—It's about time now to mark little Johnny Longden down as the ridingest fellow of the year wth Nick Wall, the saddle mite from Glace Bay, N.S., alongside him for winning the most money on the North American turf in 1938.

Galloping Johnny from Taber, Alta., and Calgary, showed 232 winners today, 19 more than his nearest rival, Kansas' Johnny Adams and, with Tanforan's season over and but one week left this year, Longden can virtually call the laurels his.

As for Wall, he was top money winner by more lengths than there are for horses. A year ago Charley (Big Heat) Kurtsinger found 120 firsts, 94 seconds and 106 thirds good for $384,202 and top money honors. This year Nick got the mount on Stagehand in the Santa Anita Handicap, won the 100 grand, and went on to bring his total to better than $400,000.

Rode Nine Ponies.

That was a long way for Wall to come from the days after he moved with his family from Newfoundland to Glace Bay and found his fun riding mine ponies in the Cape Breton coal fields.

The same might be said for Calgary Johnny, a familiar figure on Western Canada tracks before he mde his eastern debut in 1935, placed second on the United States turf in 1936, and dueled down the stretch at Tanforan to beat out Adams this year.

Not only did Longden bring home the most mounts to supplant Adams as the leading rider — the Knsas kid scored 260 first in 1937—but he placed right behind Wall in purses won with better than $250.

In Great Demand..

The tiny 28-year-old Alberta rider —he wouldn't weigh more than 105 pounds sopping wet — has always been in great demand. First call on his services cost his contract holders $17,000 a year and when one considers that Longden gets $10 a mount, plus $15 extra for every win, it is enough to make a bank president here and there wish he had never got his full growth and knew how to ride.

In 1935 Johnny won five out of six races on Bert Baroni's Top Row. In 1936 he won three derbies, the Latonia, the Illinois and the Louisiana, aboard Rushaway, the so-called "iron horse" of A. G. Tarn of Winnipeg. Up to now, those were his big thrills.

His old trainer, Jim Fitzsimmons, used to say Johnny was one of the most industrious boys that ever worked for him. He called Johnny one of the few riders who "have a clock in their head".

Mountain View

Mountain View, Dec. 24—On Thursday evening December 22, the annual Christmas entertainment was held in Mountain View church with a good attendance. A splendid programme was put on by representatives from the day school Sunday school and the Young People. Mr. Andrew Harris, day school teacher, acted as chairman and the programme was put on as follows: Opening Chorus, Welcome Toyland; Reciation of Welcome, Pauline Sprague; Chairman's remarks; Dialogue, "An Unsuccessful Advance"; Song, "Good King Wenceslas"; Recitation, Bennie Hickerson; Baby Santas, An exercise of small boys; Recitation, Mary Lough; Sailor Band selection; Dialogue, "The Sonambulist"; Recitation, "Little Midget", Doris Pringle; Song, "We Three Kings of the Orient Are"; Dialogue, Donal, Conal and Taig; Recitation, "When Pa Shaves," E. Lott; India nDrill; Dialogue, "Train to Mauro"; Recitation, "A Christmas Song", Eleanor Sprague; Play, "Christmas at Finnegans Flats"; Recitation, Audrey Pringle; Play, "Money Makes the Difference"; "Goodnight" by Maureen Neal. God Save the King.

After this programme presentations were made. Eileen Minaker read a short address and Shirley Thompson presented Mrs. Hamilton with a gift on behalf of their Sunday School Class.

Edwin Lott read the following address and Mr. Andrew Harris was presented with a gift by Pauline Sprague. Both Mrs. Hamilton and Mr. Harris made replies thanking them for the gifts.

Mountain View, Dec. 22, 1938.
Mr. Andrew Harris:

Dear Teacher,-

On this happy occasion, we your pupils of Mountain View School, felt we could not let the evening pass without in some way showing you our appreciation and gratitude for the patience and many acts of kindness you have shown us.

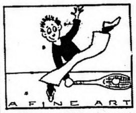
As a slight token of esteem and good wishes we ask you to accept this gift as a remembrance from your pupils at Mountain View.

Signed on behalf of Mountain View School, Willet Barber, Leland Sprague, Doris Lough.

To the joy of the children Santa Claus arrived and with the help of the boys unloaded the Christmas tree. All the children were rpesented with an organge, candles and nuts from the Sunday School.

Little Benny's Note Book

After supper ma was looking at the headlines and reading the paper, saying to pop, Here's another picture of that boy Budge, it seems he's going to get 75 thousand dollars just for going around the country hitting a little tennis ball.



A FINE ART

I used to think they were little, too, till one clipped me on the chin, pop said. As a matter of fact, this game of tennis is a fine art. I tried it out once, when I was a young fellow, but I finely gave it up and went back to the violin, he said, and ma said, Such a comparison, how can tennis possibly be a fine art?

Well, a champion tennis player has to be a combination Russian dancer and contortionist, pop said. He needs a thorough nollege of biology because he's got to go up in the air like a bird and down on the ground like a snake and he has to double on his tracks like a fox, he said, and ma said, Such nonsense, he's got a racket to hit the ball with and when the ball comes along he hits it.

That's what you think, pop said. As a matter of fact if he doesn't hit the ball away from his opponent he mite as well kiss it goodbye, so he thinks where shall I hit it, shall I sock it to the rite corner or slam it in the left corner, or shall I pretend to wham it into the rite corner and then when he starts to run in that direction suddenly crack it to the left corner, or would it be better to act as if I wasn't sure wich corner I was going to hit it to and then biff it rite between his feet while he's hopping doubtfully up and down, pop said, and ma said, And where is the ball all this time for goodness sakes?

It's proberly over my head just out of reach or elts nicking my sideline like a rifle bullet, pop said. I'm exhausted, I'm going to retire for a rest, he said.

Wich he did behind the sporting page.

—and Good Wishes to the many patrons who found the answer to their Gift Problems in this store, as most of them have for many Christmas Seasons in the past. We wish all our patrons and friends a VERY MERRY CHRISTMAS.

A Christmas Story

IF HE HAD NOT COME

—by—

Alan Edgar Haw

The late afternoon sun filtered in through the big oriel window of Rev. John Steadfast's study and glowed colorfully on the volumes neatly arranged on the bookshelves which lined the panelled walls.

The clergyman heaved a tired sigh and smothered a yawn as he placed his notes in the Bible, for a book-mark, and languidly closed the book. He had overworked himself these last few weeks and Christmas Eve found him on the verge of exhaustion.

Why was it so hard to get certain church members to do their share of work? There were the faithful ones, of course, upon whom he could depend at all times. But it seemed a shameful imposition to be always running to these people at the last minute when others, with lame excuses, had sent their regrets that they couldn't do this or do that. Patience was not a prevailing virtue with Rev. John Steadfast and rather than wheedle someone into doing a job he usually ended up by doing it himself.

"Christmas Eve," he muttered, and the sands of another year of strife, greed, selfishness and unbelief almost run out. Is the Church failing in its purpose? Are people becoming increasingly indifferent in their attitude toward religious truths? Is Christmas but a material celebration with very little spiritual significance?

He sighed. One would almost think Jesus had not come.

Startled by the thought, he sat up with a jerk and stared reflectively at the logs, glowing sullenly in the open fireplace. The Savior had said once, "If I had not come——"

The clergyman got up from his easy-chair and poked the logs, making the sparks dance higher up the chimney. Then he sat down again and relaxed, his brow wrinkled with a thoughtful frown. Presently his eyelids drooped; his head nodded and his chin dropped on his breast.

Suddenly a timid knock sounded on the study door. He listened. It was repeated, louder this time. He got up and opened the door.

On the threshold stood a little girl, shabbily dressed and shivering with cold. Her large, sad eyes stared out from a pinched face that depicted misery and want. She looked more like a little old woman than a child.

A current of air swept into the room which struck damp and chill as a newly opened vault. A foreboding of some unimaginable tragedy made its impress on the man's brain. He shivered.

"What is it, little one?" The minister found his voice at last. He spoke kindly but his tone sounded unnaturally hoarse.

"Please sir—it's mother—" the girl piped in a thin, reedy voice, "she's very sick—dying I think. Oh, sir, can you come and comfort her"

The pitiful little frame was convulsed with a fit of coughing until the tears began to glisten in her big, staring eyes—eyes whose cup of bitterness had long since overflowed. The minister placed a comforting hand on her narrow shoulder.

"I'll come at once, my dear. Warm yourself by the fire a moment till I get my things."

He donned a coat and hat, picked up his Bible and thrust it in a capacious pocket while the child gratefully absorbed heat from the open fireplace.

As John Steadfast followed the little girl into the bleak out doors the sinking sun was casting its pale beams from beneath dark clouds hovering low on the horizon. There should have been a responsive glint from the cross, high up on the spire of his church, a short distance down the street. Strange, he couldn't detect it.

Strange, too, the houses were gloomy and silent. There were no Christmas trees, no colored lights and no gay wreaths of holly. Wondering, but having no time to investigate, he hastened after the little girl.

Presently they came to the poorer section of the town and turned down a mean, malodorous street that was little more than an alleyway. Halfway down the street a coarse, bleary-eyed ruffian of a man was brutally beating a little boy with a heavy stick. Though the little chap screamed piteously no one seemed to be concerned with the cruelty of the act. The clergyman made as if to interfere but the brute held his stick threateningly and the little girl dragged at his sleeve, hastening him on.

The child stopped in front of a tumbledown shack, that was gloomy and uninviting. She pushed open a gate that swung awry then they traversed a short, broken walk and entered the house.

The room that evidently served for both kitchen and living-room was almost devoid of furniture. The mouldering, distempered walls were cracked and stained with huge damp blotches. The paper hung in long, dismal streamers.

Man and child passed through to the equally melancholy bedroom where lay a woman whose drawn and haggard face bore the mark of suffering and hopelessness.

The child knelt down beside her mother's bed and took the thin hand that hung out from the ragged blankets.

"I found a kind man who is going to talk to you, mother," said the child in a trembling voice.

"Kind man—are there any kind men?" whispered the sufferer, a look of wonderment creeping into her eyes.

"My poor woman," said the clergyman, gently, as he seated himself on the edge of the bed, "have you no doctor attending you?"

The woman looked surprised.

"Doctor, you say? Doctors don't come to poor people." Her voice was bitter.

"Oh—but they do," went on the minister, earnestly. "They are kind men and never turn anyone down. And then there are the service clubs that do splendid work for unfortunate people. Haven't you been in touch with them?"

The woman's face took on a hard and scornful look.

"Do you think it's a joke to come and mock a dying woman with such tales? Away with you!" She hissed fiercely.

The little girl sobbed and looked up appealingly at the man, then to her mother's resentful face.

There were no charitable institutions, no service clubs of kindly men, no one to look after the poor and the sick; there was no example to love thy neighbor, no restrictions on cruelty and bullying.

He had not come!

While the tapering vistas of impending doom swept across the curtain of his mind, the hand of death reached forth and claimed its toll.

SEVERAL days later John Steadfast and the orphaned girl stood beside the coffin at the place of interment. Dully, he conducted the burial service and as the coffin was lowered he could only repeat 'ashes to ashes, dust to dust.'

There was no message of consolation, no word of glorious resurrection, no open Heaven, but only one long, eternal farewell.

Sorrowfully, John Steadfast returned home and threw himself in his chair, his soul tortured with anguish, until he became dazed and his head hung low on his chest.

Suddenly he sat up with a jerk and listened attentively. Organ music! And as his brain began to function he realized that a choir was singing!

"Oh come, all ye faithful, joyful and triumphant,
O come ye, O come ye to Bethlehem;
Come and behold Him, born the King of angels.
O come let us adore Him, Christ, the Lord."

With a great shout of joy and praise Rev. John Steadfast sprang to the window. He could see the lighted stained-glass windows of his church depicting the Madonna and Child and other familiar scenes of sacred memory. The last rays of the sinking sun caught a golden gleam from the cross high up on the spire as it pointed to Heaven.

He could see houses lighted up with colored lights. There were Christmas bells and wreaths of holly and little stockings hanging in the chimney corners.

A group of young men and women, with sweet, earnest voices were singing joyous Christmas carols.

He knew that at that very moment church organizations of every denomination and creed were distributing their white gifts, exemplifying their love toward humanity. He knew that kind-hearted clubmen were holding Christmas Trees for little boys and girls and deriving greater joy from watching happy little faces than they knew from any other source.

"Thank God!" shouted Rev. John Steadfast. "He has come! He has come!" Tears of joy streamed down his cheeks as he sank down at last in his chair.

Then, gently, he whispered to himself: "God must have sent that dream to prove to me beyond all shadow of doubt that the world is a better place for His having come. It has its dark spots, to be sure—but men have been shown the way to live and just as surely as they decide to follow His teaching, will His Kingdom come.

"I shall work harder than ever in His service and never grumble because the way seems difficult and the progress slow."

He shuddered.

"What a terrible world it would be if He had not come."

said only seven soldiers left there Thursday aboard the plane en route to Mitchell Field, N.Y.

An eighth member, army sources said, apparently boarded the plane at March Field, Calif., but alighted at some point before the big B-18 type plane plummeted down through a rain storm. The terrific explosion shook many houses in the vicinity.

Names Released.

First Lieut. James Underhill, 28, pilot, Morgantown, N.C.

Second Lieut. John Hydle, Pres-Calif., co-pilot.

Second Lieut. John Hydle, Presidio, Calif., a passenger.

Capt. Fred Ruebe, San Francisco, a passenger.

Privates Humbert Narro, 27, radio operator, Los Angeles; Ben Jones, 34, Los Angeles, and Sheldon Johnson, 26, Northville, N.Y.

Warren Wunderlich was reported to have boarded the plane at March Field, and effects found in the scattered wreckage indicated a Capt. Reiber also had died.

Knee-deep mud hindered investigation, and most of those who came because of curiosity went away horror struck. Even veteran newsmen and photographers turned away.

ICKES INCIDENT

Berlin, Dec. 24 (AP)—A charge of disturbing the Christmas peace was laid on the United States' doorstep today by the German press in heated editorials stressing the possibility of the severance of strained German-American diplomatic relations.

The Nazi press, unanimous in sounding the diplomatic rupture threat, apparently had received a clue to the future trend of developments from higher up. Official sources still remained silent on the rebuff Germany received when she demanded an apology for an address last Sunday in which Harold Ickes, United States Secretary of the Interior, criticized dictatorships.

Newspapers were united in saying the Reich would draw the consequences in "calm determination" if this "miserable campaign of hatred is approved in the future by responsible leaders of the American government and that part of Americans who have regard for themselves."

Hitler's Paper Angry.

Chancellor Hitler's own newspaper, Voelkischer Beobachter, was especially angry at Senator Key Pittman's statement—expressing dislike of the Berlin and Tokyo governments—which the paper captioned "An American Interdict".

Describing the statement issued by the chairman of the United States Senate Foreign Relations Committee as parallel to "the medieval excommunications of Roman Popes", the paper scornfully declared "we have come to the conclusion that responsible America conducts an open feud with us. As this quarrel was in full swing long before the German anti-Semitic decrees were announced and as it lacks a pertinent motive, we are convinced that it s..ves no American but dark sinister interests instead."

Poets and Christmas

One of the most familiar rhymes about the festival which is to be celebrated on Sunday and Monday is that of Tusser in "Five Hundred Points of Good Husbandry."

"At Christmas play, but make good cheer,
For Christmas comes but once a year."

The poets have dealt in their finest language with the season of Christmas and Yuletide.

John Milton has one of the most majestic of hymns on the Nativity—

"This is the month and this the happy morn,
Wherein the Son of Heaven's eternal King,
Of wedded maid and virgin mother born,
Our great redemption from above did bring.
For so the holy sages once did sing,
That He our deadly forfeit should release,
And with His Father work us a perpetual peace."

Shakespeare always the master of language, of thought, speaks in the opening scene of his great "Hamlet" of the tradition that "ever against that season

Wherein our Saviour's birth is consecrated,
The bird of dawning singeth all night long."

Through the Middle Ages down to the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, Christmas revelry was at its height. The festivities lasted until Twelfth Night which was January 6th.

It was a time when the mistletoe hung in the castle hall, the holly branch hung on the old oak wall.

Modern poets are no less inspired by the theme. Longfellow has a number of very fine references to the season.

"I heard the bells on Christmas Day
Their old familiar carols play,
And wild and sweet
The words repeat
Of peace on earth, good will to men!"

Walter Scott naturally deals with the riches of the Christmastide

"Old Christmas brought his sports again.
'Twas Christmas broached the mightiest ale;
'Twas Christmas told the merriest tale;
A Christmas gambol oft could cheer
The poor man's heart through half the year."

Whittier sees in Christmas the progress of brotherly love in the world:

"Blow bugles of battle, the marches of peace
East, west, north and south let the long quarrel cease;
Sing the song of great joy that the angels began,
Sing of glory to God and of good-will to man."

Tennyson has an apt picture of Christmas Eve;

"The time draws near the birth of Christ;
The moon is hid, the night is still;
The Christmas bells from hill to hill
Answer each other in the mist."

Carols which have come down the ages are played and sung in churches at this time, by serenading bandmen, by bands of singers and by scholars at Christmas concerts. The masters of music contribute their richest treasures of music for this season. So great is the inspiration of Christmastide.

Variations in Prices Considered

Variations eo-aoa'pVV wgetW

The wide range of variations in the prices paid for hogs has been given much consideration by the market service of the Federal Department of Agriculture.

The efforts of the department have been in the interest of a more organized production. The exceptionally heavy marketings or light marketings are not in themselves directly responsible, but the fact that these conditions were not anticipated by the trade has caused the trouble.

The department hope to bridge this gap that exists between the producer and the packer.

Some good lots of hogs received during the week of December 24th are as follows:

Name	Address	No. of Hogs	Grade A	Grade B	Grade C	Premium
Percy Caverley	Belleville	6	3	3		$3.00
Everett Hubble	Belleville	3	2	1		2.00
Earl Bird	Foxboro	4	2	2		2.00

Says U.S. People Deceived.

What was described as world Jewry's might in the United States was denounced as the driving force by the paper which regretted that "the American people as a whole, through systematic misrepresentations, are at present hindered from clearly recognizing the connections and breaking the deceivers' bones."

Beobachter's editorial was typical of other Berlin morning newspaper comment.

The financial paper Boersenzeitung asserted world Jewry was pinning its last hopes on Dodd (former Ambassador William Dodd), Pittman, Ickes and others who as "fanatical haters of Germany, deliberately steer a course to rupture relations between Washington and Berlin".

"Mass Psychosis in America"

Boersenzeitung wondered whether such a step would be approved by the American people and suggested such approval might be a possibility because of "Americans' fateful susceptibility to mass psychosis."

The commercial Tageblatt and the industrial Allgemeine Zeitung stressed the same idea. The latter, however, addressed the United States government asking directly "Does the entire American government think of such a development? (Rupture of relations) if such is really the case, the German answer would be not held in abeyance long."

Nazi newspapers drew a distinction between the majority of the American people and what they termed "America's wave of anti-German hatred."

Yuletide Briefs

Brigden, Ont., Dec. 24 (CP) — Santa Claus arrives here today by airplane, weather permitting. If it doesn't he will come by the afternoon train for the annual parade.

* * *

Parkhill, Ont., Dec. 24 (CP)—After the first theft, Archie McPherson wasn't bothered again by trespassers stealing Christmas trees from his farm. He posted a sign: "Beware of the bull".

Toronto, Dec. 24 (CP) — Robert Graham, 98 years old Sunday, says he's never had a birthday present, nor a birthday party nor a birthday toast, but isn't worrying about it. He's had enough Merry Christmases to more than make up for it. He was born on a sailing vessel in the Atlantic Ocean in 1840.

* * *

Erie, Pa., Dec. 24 (AP)—Little Maxine Yarrington won't see Santa Claus again tonight and, perhaps, she never will—although her deep blue eyes are wide open.

Tossing fitfully in fever that comes one day but always vanishes the next, Maxine has slept through three Christmas holidays, a victim of encephalitis lethargica (sleeping sickness). They call her the "sleeping beauty' of St. Francis Hospital. The physicians fear she may never recover. Her Christmas dinner will be the liquid diet she has received since entering St. Francis in 1935.

Chicago, Dec. 24 (AP)—Christmas eve found tiny Mary Ellen Reardon finishing her ninth month in a coma.

The three-year-old golden-haired child, a victim of sleeping sickness, lapsed into unconsciousness last March 25 after an attack of the measles.

Though her eyes remain open during the day she is unable to recognize anyone. Doctors have told her parents she would never recover.

Vancouver, Dec. 24 (CP)—A young infantile paralysis victim who has spent several months in a Vancouver hospital's iron lung, will be out of the apparatus for Christmas dinner Sunday. The young man, whose name was withheld, was 21 in September. He's looking forward to turkey with all the trimmings during the four hours he can spend out of the machine.

* * *

Vancouver, Dec. 24 (CP)—James Bell is happy because he's getting "a better Christmas present than anybody"—the use of his right arm. Bell was wounded in the Spanish civil war. A Vancouver doctor operated on his useless arm and yesterday confirmed Bell's belief the operation was successful.

* * *

Winnipeg, Dec. 24 (CP)—Winnipeg policemen won't get a five per cent pay boost this Christmas. The Civic Finance Committee postponed decision on increased salaries for the police force yesterday.

* * *

Torrance, Calif., Dec. 24 (AP)—Christmas carols ring out over this oil field community every quarter hour from truly homemade chimes. The chimes were constructed in the electrical department of an oil company. Oil pump plungers form the chimes themselves, and discarded fly wheel spokes form the hammers.

POPE EXPRESSES

riages should be recognized as legal by civil authorities and that cases involving nullification of church marriages should be decided by canon law.)

The Pope said he had offered his life for peace in a broadcast just before Sept. 29 Munich agreement on German annexation of Czecho-Slovakia's Sudetenland and he again offered it that Italy's "internal peace" and prosperity remained unaffected.

He said his remarks were prompted by thoughts of the approaching tenth anniversary of conciliation between the Church and the Italian State in the Concordat of Feb. 11, 1929.

Thanked Sovereign.

The Pontiff expressed appreciation and thanks to the "most noble sovereign" King Victor Emmanuel and "his incomparable minister" Mussolini, whom he credited with bringing the negotiations for that concordat to a happy conclusion.

But, he said, "we must unfortunately say, as a duty of apostolic sincerity and truth that the coming decennial as it approaches and is made to approach cannot bring the serene happiness with which we would like to see it take place but rather brings real and serious preoccupations and bitter sadness."

"Bitter indeed," he said, "when it is a question of real and numerous vexations—we do not say general but certainly very numerous and in several places—against Catholic action, this well known apple of our eye."

The Pontiff declared that "it had to be recognized and confessed in the raiding of various headquarters and archives" that Catholic action was not in politics or in "undesired competition" with the Fascist regime.

Imperial Veterans Entertain 150 Children at Party

Last evening in the Armouries the Imperial Veterans' Club of which James Shepherd is president, entertained one hundred and fifty delighted children at a Christmas party. Lieut. Fred Jobson acted as Master of Ceremonies and Dr. Tennent was chairman. Carol singing was an interesting feature of the evening.

Tap dances by Joan Marsh and Joyce Woodhouse were given in an expert manner while George Shepherd, boy soprano, delighted his hearers. Little Muriel Jobson contributed a well rendered reading.

An interesting part of the program was the announcement that three baskets presented by the Kiwanis Club would be sent to the family of Mr. Fred Smythe.

Brief addresses were given by Rev. A. Beauchamp Payne, Chas. Cameron, K.C., M.P., and Mayor Bone.

Robin Spends Winter In Vicinity of Foxboro

At least one robin will not spend its Christmas in the balmy breezes and summer sunshine of the sunny south. The little red-breasted fellow is and has been for some time a guest of John Hall, Foxboro. Regularly, he is fed by Mr. Hall, and shows at least thus far no intention of leaving for warmer climes.

POULTRY THIEVES MAKE GETAWAY

Despite the successful efforts of police to track poultry thieves for some distance in the new-fallen snow, the authorities subsequently lost their trail as the bird thieves took to the centre of the street in east Belleville late last night.

Five valuable ducks were stolen from the barn of John Rushlows premises at 85 South George St., late last night. Police were notified and although the officers were able to track the poultry thieves in the snow east as far as Franklin St., here the tracks were lost. The ducks were all prize birds, Mr. Rushlow informed police.

ATTACK BY ICKES STIRS CRITICISM

Senator Burke Claims Such an Attack is 'Unwise'

Washington, Dec. 24 (AP)—Criticism of the American State Department's stiffened attitude toward Germany, as demonstrated in its brusque refusal to apologize for Interior Secretary Harold Ickes' recent denunciation of that country's treatment of minorities, developed in United States congressional circles today.

Fear of retaliation against Jews in the Reich as well as concern over the possibility that this attitude might needlessly entangle the United States in a controversy which would accomplish no good prompted several Senators to counsel caution in future exchanges.

Believes It "Unwise"

Asserting that he agreed with Isles' blunt criticism of Nazi treatment of Jews, Senator Burke (Dem-Nebranks) said, however, he believed it was "unwise." Ickes said Jewish persecutions had taken Germany back to an "unlettered, benighted and bestial" period.

"There can't be any war between United States and Germany unless spokesmen for executive departments like Ickes make inflammatory statements that take us beyond the point where level heads can operate," Burke said.

Senator Lewis (Dem-Illinois), the administration whip, said he feared acrimonious exchanges between officials of the German and American governments might be followed by new outbreaks against the Jews in the Reich.

Avoid Strain Advised

Senator Schwartz (Dem-Wyoming) also cautioned against putting any avoidable strain on relations with Germany.

Representative Fish (Rep-New York) agreed with the State Department's action, but said that cabinet officers "should not publicly denounce foreign governments or indulge in abusive tirades."

Menawhile, Frederick Libby, executive secretary of the National Council for prevention of war, suggested that "the question may well be raised whether recent statements by administration officials are a part of an effort to create an international spirit of fear and hate which will overcome rising opposition to the President's armament program."

Sees Possibility of Ballyhoo

Senator Frazier (Rep-North Dakota) voiced a similar view in wondering if the statements might "be more ballyhoo for the super-defence and armament programs."

Senator Norris (Ind-Nebraska) said, however, that the United States had done the right thing in bluntly refusing Germany's demands for retraction of criticism.

While Congressional discussion of Foreign afairs centred about the European situation, the executive branch in two unrelated actions moved toward better protection of the Panama Canal which Secretary of War Woodring said recently must be made impregnable. They were an announcement the present temporary Atlantic squadron would become a permanent unit of 35 warships on Jan. 6 and President Roosevelt's decision to elevate the American degation in Venezuela to an Embassy, United States' eighth in Latin America.

The recognition accorded Venezuela follows similar elevation of the legation in Colombia Oct. 1. Both countries lie in close proximity to the canal.

Just Suppose that He's YOUR BOY!

AND, while we're still in a fanciful mood, let's suppose he has suddenly become seriously ill—

Then, imagine yourself to be in financial difficulties—your income, never more than $900.00 a year, has ceased altogether because the factory has shut down temporarily.

You think your little boy may be dying—the doctor orders you to rush with him to the Hospital for Sick Children — you learn it's Pneumonia of the most serious type — that serums alone will cost over $400.00, to say nothing of the special graduate nursing and expert medical attention required, nor of the cost of hospitalization itself.

Could you be turned away because of this? There is only one answer to this question. It has been the answer of the Hospital for Sick Children for 63 years—a youngster's real need for hospital care and medical attention is the only ticket of admission required. Race, creed or financial circumstances are not considered. We know the people of Ontario want it that way.

This Hospital has met every emergency which has developed during the 63 years of its existence. It is famous throughout the civilized world for the success and efficiency of its medical and nursing staffs and for the low cost at which it is operated.

And who pays for this humanitarian work? The doctors give their time absolutely free. The Ontario Government pays 60c per patient per day and the patient or the patient's municipality pays $1.75 on the same basis. That leaves over $1.00 per patient per day of bare cost for which we must appeal annually to humane and generous citizens. This Hospital does NOT share in the funds collected by the Federation for Community Service because patients are admitted from all over Ontario.

This year, over $83,000.00 is needed. That means over ten thousand donations if they were to average $8.00 each—or over twenty thousand averaging $4.00. Certainly, a staggering total! So, please make your gift as large as you possibly can. If you cannot afford more—remember that even a dollar bill helps pay for the care of somebody's baby.

Kindly mail your donation to the Appeal Secretary, 67 College Street, Toronto. We cannot afford to use any of our much-needed revenue for canvassers or other organized effort to collect money.

OBITUARY

MRS. WESLEY SAGER
(Ameliasburg)

Mrs. Wesley Sager died suddenly about noon on Friday, December 23rd at the family residence in the first concession of Ameliasburg Township, Prince Edward County. Throughout the district her sudden passing was a great shock to many friends.

The late Mrs. Sager, who was in her 77th year was born in Ameliasburg Township and resided there all her life. Prior to her marriage she was Miss Marietta Francma Weese, a daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Weese. In religion she was a member of the United Church and was held in high esteem in the community.

Surviving her are her husband, Mr. Wesley Sager; two daughters, Miss Bessie Sager at home; Mrs. William J. Hubbs, Rednersville; one sister, Mrs. Lucinda Wilson, Trenton; three grand-daughters, Mrs. (Rev.) C. R. Wragg, Peace River, Alberta; Mrs. Gordon Waterhouse, Mountain View; Miss Helen Hubbs, Rednersville; two grandsons, Haviland Hubbs and Malcolm Hubbs, Rednersville.

The funeral will take place on Monday; the announcement is made elsewhere in this paper.

MARY LOU COYLE

Word was received this morning by Mrs. Murray Black of the death in the Hospital for Sick Children, Toronto, of her niece, Mary Lou Coyle, daughter of Pauline and William Coyle, in her third year.

Friends in Belleville of Mr. and Mrs. Coyle will regret to learn of their bereavement.

LATE DR. J. A. THOMPSON
(Tweed)

Tweed (Special)—The funeral of the late Dr. Josiah Albert Thompson, who passed away suddenly early on Wednesday morning, was held on Friday morning to Tweed United Church under the auspices of Tweed Lodge A. F. and A. M. Following the services, the remains were conveyed by motor hearse to Omemee, where the late Mrs. Thompson was buried. The funeral service was conducted by Rev. H. Lloyd Morrison, pastor of Tweed United Church.

The late Dr. Thompson was a prominent dentist, coming to Tweed twenty-three years ago from Havelock. He was born in Uxbridge, sixty-eight years ago, a son of George Thompson and Elizabeth Shire. Following his graduation from Normal School he entered the teaching profession, leaving his profession a few years later to attend Dental College in Toronto. He practised this profession in Omemee and Havelock before coming to Tweed in 1916. In 1910 he was married to Annie McCaffery who passed away in 1923.

The late Dr. Thompson was a prominent citizen of Tweed. He was especially interested in educational matters and in sport. For several years he was a member of the local High School Board, acting as chairman in 1937. His interest in sport locally was centred particularly in baseball and hockey. In 1919 he was manager of Tweed's championship baseball team. Politically, the deceased was a Conservative acting as Seceretary of the local association, and as Vice President of South Hastings Conservative Association.

Surviving are three daughters, Helen, teacher in Thurlow Township; Maxine, nurse-in-training at Toronto East General Hospital, and Edith, at home. Three half-brothers and a half-sister: Dr. Frank Thompson, Ralph Thompson, D. N. Thompson and Beatrice J. Shire of Toronto also survive.

The funeral which was largely ing. The bearers were Dr. W. A. attended was held on Friday morn- Paul, and Messrs. T. C. Graham, C. E. Way, T. H, Beatty, W. H. Sayers and E. W. Jones.

A LUCKY CHRISTMAS

Reading, Pa., Dec. 24 (AP)—It will be a lucky Christmas for thirteen prisoners in the county jail. Twelve will get their freedom. The thirteenth will remain in jail—because he wants to. He told Mayor Henry Stump he'd rather stay, get a good dinner and have somebody to talk to, because he had no place to go.

GATHER AT SANDRINGHAM

Sunday also is the birthday of the Duchess of Gloucester, who will be 37, and of Princess Alexandra, daughter of the Duke and Duchess of Kent, who will be two.

It will be a big family party at Sandringham, around a tree which the King found time to choose from his estate during a shooting party last month.

TRANSPORT BOARD ADVOCATED IN U.S.

Program Proposed for Rehabilitation of Carriers

Washington, Dec. 24.—(AP)—President Roosevelt's special committee on railroads recommended today creation of a Transportation Board to be charged with responsibility for regulating all modes of States.

The committee, composed of three representatives each from railroad management and labor, proposed a comprehensive program for immediate rehabilitation of the carriers.

The committee urged revision of the rate-making rules of the interstate commerce commission and substitution of a new rule "applicable to all modes of transportation".

Repeal of Haul Charge

Repeal of the so-called long and short haul clause, which prevents railroads from charging less for a long haul than for a short haul over the same route was also proposed.

The committee suggested that a court be established to have exclusive jurisdiction over matters connected with railroad reorganizations, relieving the interstate commerce commission of all responsibility in that field.

The committee also recommended that the I.C.C. be relieved of responsibility for prescribing a general plan of consolidation for railroads, "thereby restoring to the carriers all initiative, but requiring approval by the Transportation Board of any proposed consolidation".

Road Report

Heavy, wet snow covers most of the roads of the county at the present time and traffic is difficult on the lesser travelled ones as the result of yesterday's snowfall, it was reported this morning by local bus and truck drivers. Main highways are open, however, and plowing has been undertaken. Ice on some of the highways is reported by the Ontario Motor League in its daily statement to the local office of the League. On No. 2 Highway between Toronto and Montreal the road is reported clear with some icy spots between this city and Montreal. The Toronto to North Bay road is "very icy from Orillia north, but well sanded". Port Hope to Peterborough is "slippery in places". In the Haliburton district four inches of snow is on the ground but roads have been well plowed.

LITTLE INTEREST IN MARKET TODAY

Small Display Poultry and Few Vendors on Outside Market

"Twas the day before Christmas" and all through the market only a few vendors offered a slim display of Christmas poultry in an eleventh hour effort to dispose of their stocks.

Prices hovered around the twenty-seven cents the pound mark for turkey until a late hour when a noticeable decline came into effect. Belated buyers however, took advantage of the drop in prices and buying picked up towards noon.

Geese sold sluggishly at twenty-two and twenty-three cents per pound with some choice birds being offered. Ducks were scarce the few available selling at from one dollar each. Chicken displays were negligible with a few pairs of five months old birds selling at from one dollar per pair upwards.

Only a few of the hardy vendors were in the outside market where staple vegetables in bushel lots were the feature. Potato prices remained steady with no further rise in price being noted over quotations of a week ago. Bag-lots were quoted at one dollar and fifty cents each with pecks moving fairly well at twenty-five cents.

Northern Spies and Tolman Sweet apples were offered in hamper lots at one dollar and fifty cents each with a few varieties of cooking apples available at one dollar per bushel Christmas trees again flooded the outside market with "blue spruces" offered at one dollar each. Other varieties sold at from twenty-five cents upward.

Fresh whitefish was offered for lovers of this food with a fine quality fish selling at twenty cents per pound. The popular mudcat was in evidence selling at two pounds for twenty-five cents.

WALL STREET

New York, Dec. 24 (AP)—The rails carried a load of Christmas buying cheery for the stock market today and steels and specialties were among excursionists. With the exchange taking a recess over Monday, speculative forces were more than usually careful in taking on fresh commitments, and many issues lacked support. Transfers were about 500,000 shares.

Illinois Central shares again stepped into new high territory for the year. Others in the climbing van were Santa Fe, Southern Railway, Great Northern, Northern Pacific, U. S. Steel, American Steel Foundries, General Motors, Chrysler, Western Union, U.S. Rubber, Westinghouse and American Can.

Canadian issues were virtually ignored. Lake Shore and Canadian Pacific were marked down fractionally while others were unchanged.

TORONTO STOCKS CLOSE

Toronto, Dec. 24—(CP)—Bulk of sales on Toronto Stock Exchange today were in the Western Oil listings and Augite Porcupine. Firmer prices were in the majority but only Okalta, Home and Calgary and Edmonton made much headway. Volume was about 250,000 shares, lowest in three weeks.

Opening 17 cents higher, Home topped 3.00 for an advance of about 24. Calgary jumped about 20 to 2.65 and Okalta picked up 7 with Calmont, Davies and Royalite in fair demand.

Augite was a point up at 38 1-2 on turnover of more than 30,000 shares and Bobjo, Falkenham, Federal Kirkland and Ronda edged higher. Central Patricia and East Malartic added a few cents with Madsen Red Lake and Preston about steady. Little Long Lac and Wright-Hargreaves gained 5 cents and Siscoe lost 3.

National Steel Car and Canadian Car were one half higher at 69 and 17 three quarters, respectively. Massey-Harris preferred closed up 2 at 63.

The common held at 7 1-2. Rumors of Bond refunding kept interest alive in the implement company's issues.

Slightly lower were Eldorado, Mining Corporation and Sherritt Gordon. Noranda was higher at 79 7-8.

Beverly Baxter Classes Members Of Parliament

London, Dec. 24—(CP)—Here is how A. Beverley Baxter classes members of parliament:—

"If they are drinking milk they are Liberals—a fast disappearing body. If they are drinking creme de menthe you know they are contemplating joining Churchill's glamor boys; if they are drinking tea, you know they will vote like gentlemen for their party, even if they do not know what they re voting on. Therefore I think tea is the foundation of British liberty."

The Canadian member-writer was speaking at an Empire tea centenary luncheon. January 10, 1939, is the actual date of the centenary of the first auction of Empire produced tea.

MILITARY NOTES

Military notes for this district announce authority has been granted to conduct a provisional school of instruction in artillery at Napanee for the 47th Field Battery, R.C.A., commencing on January 10th.

GREATEST ARMIES

The advantage in the fighting was said to have been with the government's seasoned mountain troops, defending well-fortified hilltop positions.

Insurgent were unable to advance their machine-gun platoons to take the summits of government-held hills, these reports said, and government rifle fire mowed down waves of Insurgents attempting to charge up the slopes with fixed bayonets.

Government bulletins and dispatches from Insurgent territory agreed that General Franco's long-awaited offensive had begun.

Border sources estimated 500,000 men were engaged in the battle area extending from Tremp 100 miles south to the Grosa Mountains.

The Insurgents' main goal and the Government's prize possession was the little industrial town of Artesa, called the "key to Catalonia."

Success or failure of Franco's drive, both sides acknowledged, may decide the two-and-a-half-year-old war.

One point in the Government's favor was that the Insurgents struck at the same sector where their attacks failed Dec. 15 when, according to some quarters, an espionate plot gave their plans away.

Stopped on Two Sectors

On the second morning of his offensive Franco apparently had been stopped in the Balaguer and Lerida sectors. His troops, however, were said to have broken through at least the first line of Government defences near Tremp and in the Grosa Mountains, at the two extremes of the battle front.

Casualty lists ran into the thousands, although the Insurgents—strong in artillery and aviation—were believed to have lost less than the Government.

Since dawn yesterday and through the night the crash and rumble of artillery fire and the stutter of machine-guns and automatic rifles have echoed through the Segre Valley.

SURVIVORS SPEED

muscles were tied in knots.

"We thought Steve was going to get pneumonia. He was in a bad way at first.

"Conditions were terrible. I don't remember sleeping much. We couldn't. It rained incessantly, except for brief periods when we were pelted by hail and snow. It was cold, miserably cold."

No Disorder In Crash.

McDowell said he was in the engine room when the Patterson struck the rocks.

"There was no disorder," he said. "We went ashore through the pounding surf in our boats. We got our provisions ashore by rigging a line from ship to beach.

"Imagine me, a survivor of 'the hurricane' getting into a shipwreck like that," he said. McDowell was one of the players in the movie 'The Hurricane', and was cast as an officer on the ship Katopua.

"That movie shipwreck was all planned, and besides, the water was warm where we filmed it around Catalina Island. But that Alaska . . ." he shivered.

"I used to think it was cold when I worked on a refrigerator ship, but I'll go back to one of those any time."

FALLING TREE INJURES SOUTH BAY RESIDENT

Struck by a falling tree, Thomas W. Rose, aged resident of South Bay, Prince Edward County was rushed to Prince Edward County yesterday afternoon suffering with a fractured leg and broken collar bones.

The injured man was assisting in the felling of a tree and had walked sufficiently far away, he thought to be in a safety zone. He was pinned beneath the branches as the large tree crashed to the ground. Mr. Rose celebrated his golden wedding anniversary last summer.

NOTED BARITONE HOME

Toronto, Dec. 24 (CP)—Leslie Allen, noted baritone who once sang before King George and Queen Elizabeth, is home here to spend his first Christmas in Toronto since he left fifteen years ago to sing in England. Christmas Day also is his parents' 40th wedding anniversary.

ITALIAN SAILORS CHASED, JEERED

Montevideo Police Rescue 60 Visitors Chased by Crowds

Montevideo, Uruguay, Dec. 24—(AP)—Police were called out last night to rescue 60 Italian sailors from jeering cafe crowds who chased and taunted them in answer to Fascist salutes.

The police protection was necessary to escort the sailors, on a world "prestige" cruise, back to the cruiser Eugenio II Savoia after fist fights in which one civilian was injured and about 50 arrested.

Trouble broke out when the sightseeing sailors, riding in buses, sang Fascist songs and gave Fascist salutes before crowded sidewalk cafes. Later the Italians told police they were amazed to hear shouts of "Long live Republican Spain," "Long live France" and "anti-Fascist" cries returned by the Uruguayans.

The sailors rushed the patrons of one cafe, but immediately several hundred citizens gathered and repelled their attack, chasing the Italians to the Plaze Independecia where police rescued them. Many suffered bruises.

Bicyclist Kidnapped, Drugged, Robbed, Held 3 Days

Toronto, Dec. 24 (CP)—Patrick Kelly, 30-year-old factory employee, told Toronto and suburban Islington police last night of being kidnapped by two men, blindfolded, drugged, held for three days and robbed of $54.

Kelly arrived home late yesterday. He said the men stopped him while he was riding his bicycle Tuesday, forced him into their automobile and after blindfolding him and drugging him took him to Hamilton, where he was imprisoned in a house.

There, he declared, his pay of $54 was taken. He was fed only bread and butter while held. Today, he told police, he was taken from the house and driven out to the highway, where he was able to hitch-hike home.

EXTENDED LENIENCY

Portland, Ore., Dec. 24 (AP)—John Collier, 38, laborer, landed in police court yesterday on a charge of vagrancy.

"Your honor," he pleaded to Municipal Judge Julius Cohn, "I've been in jail for the last eleven Christmases. I'd like to be out this one."

Judge Cohn replied that it seemed reasonable a man should have one Christmas out of twelve on the outside and extended leniency when Collier promised to do his best to find a job.

The Sinews of Trade

In the early days Canadian trade was conducted in its simplest form. There was little money in circulation; settlers exchanged furs and the produce of their farms for simple necessities of local manufacture and rare luxuries imported from abroad.

As the fabulous resources of the country became known, the tide of colonization swept inland. Population increased and trade developed between adjoining communities. Trails became highways; the canoe, bateau and Durham boat gave way to the steamer; the pack horse and wagon were supplanted by the railroad; and a steady stream of furs, timber, staves, wheat and flour flowed toward the ports for shipment overseas.

Each phase of development brought new and diversified demands for commodities and services. Accurate up-to-date news of available goods, of current prices and markets became increasingly important to consumers, producers and merchants alike.

The newspapers recognized the need and were quick to provide this essential information. Every issue recorded the current fluctuations in prices and supplies, the arrival and departure of ships and all other data of vital importance to trade.

Maintenance of this service and extension of its scope to meet each new development have contributed much to the expansion and prosperity of Canadian trade.

Today the daily newspapers serve Canadian trade more thoroughly and effectively than ever. Every day throughout the country more than two million copies are distributed and read. Their pages provide a complete and reliable guide to markets upon which the business men of Canada depend.

The Father

By FLORENCE MELLISH

Hiram Knight hurriedly entered his old-fashioned parlor and approached the marble-top center table upon which rested the family Bible with its heavy leather mountings and brass clasps. He opened it, and slowly turned the yellow pages until he came to the one marked "Birth." in fine Spencerian chirography.

Yes, Roberta Simms was right! Leave it to that village busybody to keep tabs on the ages of all the girls in Shawomet. The page certainly showed that his last daughter, Sybilla, was twenty-eight years old. How time had flown!

"Girls are almost on the shelf by that time," Roberta Simms had smirked, "and it is all on your account, Hiram. Sybilla is much too sweet to be left to stand alone after you're gone." Thirty-five years ago, Hiram Knight had been adamant to Roberta's blandishments.

Now, old Hiram winced. He had never before thought of that possibility, and it had taken that village busybody to open his eyes .Well, she was some good. But to accuse him of having no thought for his daughter! He, who had done nothing else but think of the welfare of his children ever since they were born, and particularly after their mother had died!

But Hiram Knight had been a subtle man, and none might know his subtlety. Not one of his four daughters, long since happily married, had ever suspected the unseen hand of their father guiding their various destinies.

Now it was Sybilla, the gentle flower of his flock, who needs must be the one to choose to stay with him regardless of her own future!

It worried him so that he became almost ill with fret; and one day he querulously told Sybilla to call up "Dr. Jim" in the city, and have him come out.

Dr. Jim Blair came, prescribed, and administered a sedative to the worried old man, who immediately became drowsy. Just as he was drifting off into sleep, he heard something just as Sybilla was closing the door. It was not meant for him to hear!

"He'll never leave this old home. Jim, and I'll never leave him."

Once more destiny had knocked at the door of his father-heart and given him his cue to go on with the play! Hiram Knight drifted happily into a peaceful sleep.

"He's a wonderful doctor—I'll be all right after another visit," he said the next day. "I like that man, don't you, Sybilla?" He chuckled.

To Sybilla's gentle surprise, he arose and began to look over the old house, with a new interest as though considering certain possibilities, and then took to his couch when the doctor was announced. He grandly waved Sybilla from the room, and turned twinkling eyes upon the doctor.

"There isn't a thing the matter with me," he declared to the astonished physician. "Have you noticed them building the new high school on the corner?" he continued irreleventiy.

"Why, yes, and it's going to be a big one—they need it badly around here—the population warrants it," said Dr. Jim heartily.

"A lot of people will move around here when it is finished. They'll want to be near because of the children—won't they?"

"That's a fact, Mr. Knight — it will attract folks from all round."

The old man nodded satisfiedly.

"This old house is within a stone's throw of the school, church, drug store and grocery store."

"Yes."

"I'm not sick," said Hiram Knight. "I've been worrying about Sybilla. I didn't know what was making her look so peaked, but I found out yesterday when I heard you two talking." He looked in the direction of the front door.

As Sybilla entered, flushed and anxious, her father chuckled.

"The doctor's thinkin' of movin', he said.

"Going away?" she whispered, looking fearfully at Dr. Jim, who smiled reassuringly at her.

"No, Sybilla — our problem has been solved—I'm coming here!"

Not failure, but low aim, is crime.

Public School Pupils Take Part In Entertainment

Shannonville.—The senior room of the Shannonville Public School was filled to capacity on Thursday night on the occasion of its annual Christmas entertainment. At eight o'clock when it was scheduled to start every seat had been taken and many were forced to stand. The concert offered by the pupils of the school was an outstanding display of amateur talent. Recitations, songs, musical numbers, drills, readings, dialogues were presened without a flaw and as a result the crowd gave their vociferous applause at the conclusion of every number. One thing that caught the fancy of the crowd was the perfect timing of the children in their drills and also the splendid manner in which their voices blended together in their songs. The program was very lengthy and due to the perfect training of the children and the splendid behind-the-scene efforts of Mr. Coukell, Mr. Harold Burtt, and Miss Stillson, little time was lost between scenes. There was no partiality shown to any one child in the Christmas concert, every child was detailed to do a certain part and everyone performed perfectly. The program follows: Chorus, by the whole school; recitation, Donald Brant. The chairman for the evening, the Rev. A. E. Pepper, then addressed the crowd briefly. Mr. Pepper said that it was with the keenest of anticipation that he came to attend the concert. Christmas concert is the main event in the school term for the children. Such things as this concert would save the world from war. If it were not for Christmas concerts Christmas would not seem real. The speaker remarked that it was impossible to enjoy Christmas if people did not understand God. Drill, "March of Mechanical Dolls" Dialogue, "Escaped Bear"; Chorus, Junior boys and girls, "Up In Santa Land"; recitation, "The Best Tree of All"; guitar solo, Charles Mayell; dialogue, "Samuel's Proposal"; chorus, Junior boys; recitation, Dorothy Noyes; chorus, Senior room, "Don't Wait Till the Night Before Christmas"; dialogue, "Spelling Class." This dialogue, in which members of the junior room performed, was highly humorous and kept the crowd in an uproar. Cowboy song, Senior boys and Junior boys; guitar solo; dialogue, "Naughty Mouse"; drill, twelve Senior girls; chorus, "By Low Lands"; recitation, "Old St. Nick"; song, six Senior girls; dialogue, "Mother Goose's Christmas"; chorus, Senior room; chorus by the whole school. At this point, the Rev. A. E. Pepper on behalf of the crowd, congratulated the teachers and pupils for their splendid efforts. Mr. Coukell, principal of the school, responded for the teachers. Everybody then joined in singing the National Anthem.

Santa Claus then arrived and helped to distribute the presents but was unable to remain until all the presents were distributed due to a previous appointment.

In the Shannonville correspondence of the twenty-first, one item should have read United Church Sunday School instead of Trinity Church.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Little, Mr. and Mrs. Malcolm Little were recent guests of Mr. and Mrs. Douglas Thompson of Foxboro.

Mr. and Mrs. Carman Bailey of Windsor were Tuesday tea hour guests of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Little.

Mr. and Mrs. Leonard Mason and Miss Edna Smith of Belleville were recent guests of Mr. Wm. Murphy.

Mr. Roy Doherty of Deseronto was in the village during the past week visiting with friends.

Miss Marion Maracle has returned to her home after vacationing in Trenton and Toronto with friends.

Minto

Minto—The Y.P.U. met in the church on Thursday evening. After a hymn, Mr. Delve led in prayer. Mrs. Murney Johnston then took charge and a hymn was sung. Edna McMaster led in prayer. Annis Johnston read the Scripture lesson and a reading was given by Mrs. Albert Tweedie. Miss Eva Hagerman sang a solo and the Rev. Mr. Delve gave a splendid topic on "Unemployment and Prison: War and Peace". Della McMaster gave an organ solo. The meeting closed with a hymn and the Benediction.

Nearly everyone from here attended the parade in Stirling on Saturday, and it was greatly enjoyed by the children.

Mr. and Mrs. Ira Bristol spent Thursday evening with Mr. and Mrs. Will West in Stirling.

Born—In Stirling on Sunday to Mr. and Mrs. Harold Morgan (a daughter), Beverley Jean. Congratulations.

Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Belcour and Glen were Sunday guests of Mr. and Mrs. Ira Bristol.

Mr. and Mrs. Will Wright, Laura, and Mr. W. Hagerman had tea on Friday evening at the home of Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Tanner.

Miss Mae Clements of Toronto is spending a couple of weeks' holiday with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Richard Clements.

Mr. and Mrs. George McMaster had tea on Tuesday evening with Mr. and Mrs. Fred Bateman.

The Misses Mary and Nora Forestell and Ethel Hagerman who are taking the short course in Stirling are home for the holidays.

Mr. and Mrs. Sherman Brady, Ruth and Donnie spent Monday in Madoc.

The factory meeting was held on Friday afternoon with a good number in attendance, and a considerable change was made. Mr. Leslie McKeown of Bonarlaw was hired for next year as cheese maker and Mr. B. C. Tucker as president. Directors, Thomas Clements, Charles Morgan, Fred Cooke, George McMaster, Ern Broadworth, Bert Hogle. Auditors, Ernest Sarles and Leslie Thompson. It was decided that everyone draw their own milk.

Mr. Jack Donahue our past cheese maker has been here nearly twenty years and his services have been appreciated.

Roslin Children Present Christmas Entertainment

Roslin—On Wednesday evening, Dec. 21st the Roslin public school held their annual Christmas concert and tree in the Anglican Church Hall.

The hall presented a pleasing appearance with streamers of red and green, evergreen boughs and gaily decorated Christmas trees laden with gifts, in the centre of the stage was a glowing fire place.

Rev. J. W. Macdonald very capably acted as chairman for the following program.

"Opening Chrous" by all pupils of the school; Address of Welcome Bruce McMaster; Song, by the juniors, "Up on the Housetops"; Recitations, by Donald Bates, Lois Reid, Eileen Reid, June Sills, Reta Slingerland, Isabell Bates, Shirley Morgan, Milton Grey; A drill, "Points of the Christmas Star"; Song, "When teacher stays out late a night"; Dialogue, "A mouse to the rescue." Recitation, Teddy Welsh; Dialogue, "Bertha as teacher"; Recitation, by Jean Howes; Dialogue "Behind the Sofa"; "Wreath Drill"; Dialogue, "Mother Goose Christmas" Tap Dance, Helen Welsh, Mrs. G. Burleigh played her accompaniment; Recitation, Keith Harrison; Dialogue, "A letter to Santa"; Christmas Tableau; Pantomime, "O little Town of Bethlehem"; Chorus, "Don't wait till the night before Christmas to be good."

During the program Rev. F. C. Beazer, Rev. H. B. Herrington and Dr. H. E. Welsh spoke briefly, complimenting the teacher, Miss Melburne and the children on their splendid entertainment and wishing for all happiness in the coming holiday season. The program closed with the singing of the National Anthem, after which Santa Claus arrived and distributed gifts from the tree. Mr. Charles Chapman acted as Santa claus. The proceeds of the evening amounted to $11.70.

Melrose Concert Well Attended

Melrose—Melrose United Church Sunday School held their Christmas tree entertainment at the church hall on Tuesday evening and it was largely attended. Rev. W. D. Craig assisted as chairman, commenting favorably on the numerous items which were included on the lengthy program of music, recitations, dialogues, drill and pantomime. At the conclusion of the program which was keenly enjoyed by the audience Santa Claus arrived in all his splendor assisting with the distributing of the presents, candy and nuts to the children.

On Monday evening Mr. and Mrs. Homer Demille celebrated their golden wedding anniversary, several relatives were present to join with them on the happy occasion. Their many friends of Melrose extend to them also their heartiest congratulations and wish them more happy years of wedded life.

On Sunday Mr. and Mrs. W. McMeachan entertained the former's mother, Mrs. A. Pringle and other relatives, it being the occasion of Mrs. Pringle's birthday. Mr. and Mrs. I McConnell, Port Hope, were also present. Mrs. McConnell is a sister of Mrs. Pringle and Mr. F. Davis of Melrose is a brother. Congratulations are extended to Mrs. Pringle from her many friends here and hope to see her enjoy many years of health and happiness with her family.

Mrs. W. W. McCabe, Mrs. C. A. Knapp and Mrs. A. Winter, Napanee, were Friday guests of Mrs. E. Badgley.

Mrs. C. Cameron, Pittsburg, has returned home after several days' visit with Mr. and Mrs. C. MacFarlane.

Mrs. Leslie McLaren, Salem, spent a few days recently with her father, Mr. Ryerson Badgley.

Mrs. C. Hagerman, Salem, spent a few days last week with her parents Mr. and Mrs. S. Sherman.

Picton

Picton—Another sign of a mild winter—a large snake was seen basking in the sunshine on Mary St. on Wednesday afternoon.

A number of friends spent a jolly social evening on Tuesday, at the home of Mrs. Frances Kelner, York St. Mrs. Kelner has been confined to her home for some weeks with a broken bone in her foot, and was pleasantly surprised when her friends appeared with well filled baskets to spend the evening.

The lovely watercolour sketches of Miss Boswell, depicting life in rural Quebec, have been greatly admired at the Public Library. They are delightful. The sketches showing the wayside shrine; the parish church: and the outside bake oven; make one think of scenes from that Canadian classic "Maria Chapdelaine."

Many Picton friends attended the interment service of the late Chas. Jeffery of Belleville, in Glenwood Cemetery here, on Monday afternoon. Mrs. Geo. Leslie and Messrs Ruben and Charles Bedborough of Picton, are a niece and nephews of the deceased.

Major Medhurst returned on Tuesday evening from spending a few days in Ottawa.

Police report $20.00 worth of groceries stolen from parked cars on Saturday night.

Interesting Entertainments Given in Plainfield District

Plainfield.—The Christmas entertainment for Plainfield United Church Sunday School was held in the Orange Hall on Thursday evening and was well patronized. The chief number on the program was a pageant entitled "Following the Star." A young couple touring the Holy Land desire to see the birth of Jesus in the manger and are assured this by the inn-keeper at Bethlehem. They follow the star and not only realize their ambition but are impressed as never before with the true meaning of the birth of Jesus.

Following are the characters: Mary of today—Miss Irene Murphy; Joseph of tday—Mr. Wm. Doran; The Inn-keeper—Mr. Vernon Emerson; Mary, the mother of Jesus—Mrs. Ralph Wilder; Joseph, her husband—Mr. Ralph Wilder; First, second and third kings—Kenneth Kleinsteuber, Norman Pennington, and Carl Platt; The Shepherds—Oscar Moore, Garfield Hall, Harold Carleton and Garnet Denyes; Gabriel—Mr. Sherman Parks; Angels—Misses Phyllis Hall, Olive Hall, Helen Hall, Margaret Carleton, Helen Carleton, Nellie Hodgen and Mrs. Ann Telford; The Pilgrim—Allan Reed; Choir—Mr. Clarence Hall, Mr. Fred Prindle, Mrs. Clarence Hall, Mrs. Bernice Moore and Mrs. Everson; Pianist—Mrs. Arthur F. Hall. The group were trained by Mrs. Harry McCreary, Mrs. J. F. Everson and Mrs. Clarence Hall.

Other numbers on the program were songs by Jean and Marion Sills; a recitation by Inez Prindle; a drill, "The Days of the Week" by the Beginners' Class, trained by Mrs. Harry Harrison; a parade of Toy Soldiers, consisting of ten youths who were also trained by Mrs. Harry Harrison.

Miss Irene Murphy, the public school teacher, contributed a play, "Christmas in Pumpkin Hollow." This included fifteen of the older school children.

A very successful Christmas entertainment was given in Zion Hill United Church on Wednesday evening. Miss Phillips, public school teacher at Maple Leaf, Mr. Thos. Bedford of Zion Hill schools and Mr. and Mrs. Roblin Dulmage deserve much credit for the splendid program given. Instead of having three entertainments as in several former years, it was decided to unite and have but one in the church. Rev. J. F. Everson of Plainfield acted as chairman for the following numbers at the close of which Santa Claus arrived and distributed the many gifts from the tree, which were received by young and old, with childhood satisfaction and enjoyment.

Recitations—Betty Ray, Douglas Cronkright, Anita Dulmage, Irene Cronkright, Franklin Ray, Jean Sheffield, Beverley Nolan, Teddy Ray, Irene Atkins, Greta Martyn, Evelyn Cronkright, Joyce Lott, Allan Lott. A Wish, by five girls—Irene Sine, Douglas Nolan, Dorothy Sills, Ruth McMullen, Kenneth Nolan and Ray Widden. Dialogues given were entitled, "Christmas Stocking", "Getting Even With Sister's Beau", "Gypsies in Camp", "Keeping Store", "Waiting for the Doctor", "Friday Afternoon Composition", "Coon Concert", "Good-Bye", "Learning to Say 'Yes'", "Cora's Callers", "Telling the Story." Vocal numbers were given by Marion Sills, Bessie and Dorothy Sills, Jean Sills. Motion song, "Hush-a-Bye." Drills, "Upside Down Drill", "Scarf Drill". Tableau, "The Tale the Fire Told." Readings—Mr. Roblin Dulmage and Mr. Geo. Cornish. Monologue, Gwen Ray. Choruses, "Jolly Santa Claus" and "Merry Christmas." The program was opened with a Recitation and a "Welcome Chorus" after which prayer was offered by the minister. Mr. Cecil Ketcheson, superintendent of the Sunday School, in a well-worded speech, thanked all who had helped to make the entertainment a success.

Mrs. Helen Shepherd, of Toronto, has returned home after spending a couple of days with her brother, Mr. Frank Hicks, who has not been in good health for some time and was accompanied his sister to the city where he expects to remain during the winter.

The remains of the late Mr. Robert Parks, who formerly lived in Plainfield, but who later resided in Coe Hill, were interred in Victoria cemetery on Thursday afternoon.

Among those who are planning to entertain friends for Christmas are: Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Marshall; Mr. Robt. A. Hall; Mr. and Mrs. Norman Hall; Mr and Mrs. Ralph Wilder, Mr. Hartford Ross and Mr. and Mrs. E. S. Denyes. Mr. and Mrs. Harry Harrison expect to spend Christmas with her mother, Mrs. Arkles, of Caselton.

Miss Beryl Platt has been confined to the house for several days with illness.

Mr. Kenneth Denyes has gone west to spend the Christmas vacation with his brother, the Rev. George Denyes of Rathwell, Manitoba.

Quartette—Hawthorne Family.

Address—Rev. Mr. Hunter.

Dialogue—Bargains—Mrs. Clark's Class—Misses M. Brett, Audrey Smith, Betty McCoy and L. Young.

Santa Claus.

Miss Helen Whytock, of Ontario Ladies' College, Whitby, is spending the holidays at her home, Madoc.

Miss Williams of the Public School Staff, is spending the Christmas holidays in Kingston.

Mrs. Gavin Wallbridge is spending the Christmas holidays with Mr. and Mrs. A. R. Clute, Toronto.

Miss McDermid and Miss Phelan of the High School Staff left on Thursday to spend the holidays at their respective homes, Martintown and Port Rowan.

Miss Grace Garrett of Public School Staff is spending the holidays at her home in Elginburg.

Miss Aileen Kelly of Toronto is spending Christmas holidays at her home in Madoc.

On Thursday night the C.G.I.T. girls of Trinity United Church sang Christmas carols to the sick and shut-ins. Afterwards they were entertained at the home of their Sunday School teacher, Mrs. Frank Phillips.

The relief committee of the Women's Institute who have been preparing to bring Christmas Cheer to needy families in Madoc, their supplies were very generously supplemented by thirty-five baskets of fruit and vegetables which were donated by Mr. Irwin, principal of Madoc Public School, staff and pupils.

Walk boldly and wisely in that light thou hast; There is a Hand above will help thee on.—Bailey.

Take from man hope and sleep, and you will make him the most wretched being upon earth.—Kant.

The first condition of happiness is not to have what we want but to want what we should have.

Advent Hymn

(By George Allen Kingston, Toronto)

Holy babe in stable born
On the first glad Christmas morn;
Mother to the inn denied,
Christ the manger glorified;
Soon abroad through all the earth
Is proclaimed His lowly birth.

King of kings on humble cot,
Lord of lords in lowly lot,
Poor in gold, but rich in grace,
Gift of God to fallen race,
Saviour of a lost mankind,
To High Heaven's mercy blind.

Wise men from the East afar
Followed Heaven's guiding star;
Shepherds also, watching near
Saw the glorious light appear:—
Hark! The hosts of Heaven sing
"Glory to the new-born King."

Shepherds, heralds, wise men three,
Round the sacred hostelry,
Voices lift with one accord
Praise to their redeeming Lord;
Thus the Christ is ushered in,
Saviour of a world from sin.

Saviour Christ, Thou still art King,
Loyal tribute here we bring;
Humbly bow we at Thy feet,
Praying Thee our souls to greet,
And in joyous, glad acclaim
Sing we praise to Thy blest name.

Art lives on Nature's aims — is weak and poor; Nature, herself, has unexhausted store.

Nurture your mind with great thoughts; to believe in the heroic makes heroes.—Disraeli.

Dickens' "The Chimes"—A New Year's Fantasy Part 7

By William Sherb and David Vormelker

TOBY SAW THE TOWER AND THE BELLS SWARMING WITH DWARF PHANTOMS AND ELFIN SPIRITS.
THEY WERE EVERYWHERE FLYING THROUGH THE AIR AND OVER THE HOUSES FAR BELOW. SUDDENLY THE CHIMES CEASED.
THE PHANTOMS MELTED AWAY, AND OTHER SPIRITS APPEARED, STANDING IN THE SHADOWS OF THE CHIMES.
AFTER PROMISING TOBY A GLIMPSE OF THE FUTURE AS IT MIGHT BE, THEY TOO DISAPPEARED. BY HIS SIDE STOOD THE SPIRIT OF THE CHIMES.

NEWS ODDITIES AND BRIEFS

PADDING OF FAT SAVES MAN'S LIFE AS CAPS EXPLODE

Redmond, Ore., Dec. 27 (AP)—Dr. R. W. Christiansen says John Howard can be thankful he is a little on the hefty side, has "padding" under his belt. Howard had two dynamite caps in his pocket. They exploded. On thin persons, the doctor said, such an explosion would have damaged vital organs. On Howard—it made only a flesh wound.

CHRISTMAS PRIVILEGES GIVEN KINGSTON PRISONERS

Kingston, Ont., Dec. 27 (CP)—Santa Claus came to penitentiary prisoners here Christmas bearing gifts in the shape of extended privileges. Radios were installed, and lights-out times extended for three hours Christmas Eve. Band concerts and musical programs were given by military bands from the Garrison, while Christmas dinners included such extra delicacies as Chistmas cakes and puddings, candies, nuts and fruit.

POSTAL CLERKS ALWAYS STRIVE TO PLEASE

East Moline, Ill., Dec. 27 (AP)—Super-super service is what one person asked of the East Moline postoffice. And he got it. During the Christmas holidays two 1 1-2 cent stamps were found in a mail box, with a note directing that they be attached to two stampless envelopes previously mailed. A clerk granted the "needle-in-haystack" request — after a diligent search.

DOCTOR OUT GRIPS STATE COLLEGE'S "ROCK CRUSHER"

Emporia, Kas., Dec. 27 (AP)—Professors were making a physical survey at the State Teachers College here. Student after student took a try at the dynamometer, which tests one's grip. When all scores were in, far afront was Tony "Rock Crusher" Lohkamp, 240-pound No. 1 athlete. He'd scored 89. Then up stepped Dr. E. W. Geldrich of the psychology department. He gripped the dynamometer. Eyes bulged. His score—92.

THE WEATHER

Toronto, Dec. 27 (CP)—A deep disturbance is moving eastward across Northern Ontario and another storm appears to be developing near New York while high pressure and decidedly cold weather covers the greater part of the west portion of the continent. Snowfalls have occurred in Ontario and western Quebec with part rain in the lower lake region and strong winds and gales prevail on the Great Lakes. It has been fair in the Maritimes and in nearly all sections of the west.

Lake Superior — Northwest gales and decidedly cold with snow in eastern districts. Wednesday, strong northwest winds; mostly fair and decidedly cold.

Manitoba—Mostly fair and decidedly cold tonight and Wednesday; probably snowflurries on Wednesday.

Saskatchewan — Northwest to northeast winds; partly cloudy and decidedly cold tonight and Wednesday.

Alberta—Partly cloudy and quite cold today and Wednesday.

Why the Weather!

By Major A. H. Thiessen
Science Service Meteorologist

How cold is it? The householder often desires to know the outside temperature. Contrary to common belief and practice, it is not easy to measure accurately the temperature of the free air. A thermometer simply indicates its own temperature, and the problem is to get it to take on the temperature of the air. To do this, whirl the thermometer in the shade for a minute or so and then read it quickly. Better still, hang it up in a thermometer shelter, which is a box with sides like outside window shutters. If you want to read your thermometer from the inside, attach it to a bracket on the outside of a north window.

BOLD STAND OF 21 REPUBLICS ADDS STRENGTH

Christmas Made Uncomfortable for Dictators, Says London Newspaper

'MORAL GESTURE'

American Nations Will Not Tolerate Totalitarian Interference

London, Dec. 27 (CP-Havas)—The "bold and independent stand" taken by the Pan-American Conference at Lima made this Christmas a very unsatisfactory one for the dictators, the News Chronicle (Liberal) said today.

"Cordell Hull (United States Secretary of State) has had neither an easy nor an enjoyable task in steering the twenty-one American republics represented at the Lima conference into a joint declaration of policy," the newspaper said. "National suspicions, conflicting economic interests and widely differing political systems all helped to complicate the problem. In such circumstances it would be easy to exaggerate the significance of the declaration of continental solidarity now endorsed."

Europe's Disrupting Forces.

The Times (Independent) linked the stiffening of the United States attitude toward Germany to the work of the Lima meeting and said "recent developments in South America have certainly played no small part in influencing the attitude of the United States Government toward the present regime in Germany."

The News Chronicle emphasized the importance of the Lima declaration as "moral gesture of the Western Hemisphere to potentially disrupting forces in Europe."

"The American republics have made it clear that they will not tolerate totalitarian interference in their internal affairs," said the Liberal organ. "Lima is only one of the several indications that the front against Fascism is stiffening and that the moral forces of democracy which appeared at one time to be moribund are at last beginning to assert themselves."

Licence Plates As Holiday Gifts Popular

Neatly packaged, holly-wrapped 1939 automobile licence plates became one of the city's most important Christmas presents from friend to friend and relative to relative, it was revealed today by a check of the register of licences issued by Major S. E. Vermilyea, local issuer.

"Yearly the habit of giving friends new licences for Christmas has become a more popular one. This year we sold more of them, admittedly as presents, than ever before," stated Major Vermilyea. "We haven't as yet, however, checked the exact number."

Motorists have a longer period of grace this year before new licences are required, it is noted by the office. This year the new plates are not compulsory until the end of March. But as usual a last minute rush is expected to be experienced. "If they apply now before the rush, they can get better service than if they wait until the last minute," reminds the office.

DIES WATCHING HOCKEY

Olds, Alta., Dec. 27 (CP)—Adam Love, about 65, died suddenly last night while watching a hockey game here between Turner Valley Oilers and Olds Elks. Mr. Love, a farmer, was an Elks supporter and had attended almost every game here for years. Turner Valley won the game 5-4.

SNOW, COLD AND POOR VISIBILITY KEPT SPEED DOWN

Campaign to Reduce Accidents Also Given Much Credit for Decrease

88 IN TORONTO

Master of Ridley College and Wife Killed by Radial Car

(By The Canadian Press)

Lowest number of Yuletide fatalities in several years, 11 persons died in traffic accidents throughout Ontario during the long holiday week-end. A campaign to reduce accidents at the Christmas holiday season was given much credit for the decrease. Snow, cold and poor visibility combined to make driving dangerous in some sections of the province.

Three of the victims were Detroit residents. They died in the flaming wreckage of an automobile at Maidstone, 12 miles east of Windsor, Saturday night.

A New York Central Railway flyer struck the rear end of the auto as it crossed the tracks. The car caught fire and exploded. Victims were Mrs. Evelyn Gillespie, 31; her 12-year-old son, Donald, and John Rubin Dean, 34.

Going to Christmas Party

The vigorous campaign waged in Toronto to reduce traffic accidents resulted in one death compared to three in 1937. Robert Bird, 15-year-old messenger boy, was killed when he was knocked from his bicycle and crushed beneath wheels of a wagon cart Sunday.

There were 88 accidents reported to Toronto police Saturday and Sunday compared to 107 last year and the number of injured was 24 this year compared to 79 in 1937.

Car Struck by Radial

Only traffic deaths Monday were reported from Welland where Charles E. H. Thomas, 53-year-old Master at Ridley College, St. Catharines, and his wife were killed when their car was struck by a radial car. The Thomas' 16-year-old son escaped with minor injuries.

Other deaths:

Leamington: David Radekop was killed when struck by car while walking on wrong side of street Christmas Eve.

Cornwall: Hugh O'Reilly, 37, killed when the car he was riding in somersaulted over a 12-foot bank on the ice of Black River.

Owen Sound: John Blair, 60, received injuries Saturday night that led to his death shortly after he and a companion who suffered cuts and bruises were struck by a car.

Ingersoll: Mrs. Sarah Murray of Toronto, killed Saturday when her husband's car collided with a truck.

Merritton: Mrs. Fred Trowbridge killed when struck by car as she was crossing a street with her husband, who suffered head injuries.

Faulty Furnace Blamed

Falls down stairs and monoxide poisoning accounted for four more deaths. A post mortem examination showed Hiram W. Morris, 87, and his 52-year-old daughter, Margaret, whose bodies were found in their London home Sunday, died from carbon monoxide gas poisoning. A faulty furnace was blamed.

Mrs. Bessie Woodhouse, 78, of Forest and Joseph Serunas, 42, of St. Thomas died after falls.

ANKLE DEEP IN SLUSH

Vancouver, Dec. 27 (CP)—Rising temperature and rain last night turned Vancouver downtown streets ankle deep with slush after the city's first snowfall of the year. The four-inch blanket of snow which came just 24 hours too late to give Vancouver a white Christmas, was melted on downtown streets but still covered suburban districts.

508 Lives Are Lost in U. S. During Three-Day Celebration

New York, Dec. 27 (AP)—Violent deaths marred the three-day Christmas celebration in the United States with a total cost of more than 500 lives. A country-wide survey placed the figure today at 508.

The toll was approximately the same as that for last year, but in 1937 Christmas fell on Saturday and there was only a two-day observance.

The automobile was the biggest single death factor, accounting for at least 395 fatalities.

Twenty-two persons were killed by fire; nineteen died by suicide; twelve in railroad crossing crashes, and six drowned. Homicides and miscellaneous accidents were responsible for the remainder.

Ohio led the death parade with 42 other large state tolls included Texas 40, New York 39, Pennsylvania and California 35 each, Michigan 28 and Illinois 22.

THUMBS DOWN ON REICHSBANK'S PROPOSAL

Dr. Hjalmar Schacht, president of the Reichsbank, is shown, left, conferring with Montagu Norman, governor of the Bank of England, during the German financier's visit to London to expound his scheme for the evacuation of the Jewish population of Germany under a "goods voucher" system. Refugees received by other nations would receive vouchers from the German government representing the value of part of their German possessions. The value of these vouchers would be taken out in German trade. P. S.—The proposal was turned down. Many commentators called it a "ransom scheme".

Fire, Hurricane, Seasick Crew Feature 24 Hour Sea Drama

By TOM HORGAN

Gloucester, Mass., Dec. 27 (AP)—Fire at sea, a hurricane and a seasick, landlubber crew produced an action-packed twenty-four hours aboard the little Brigantine Florence C. Robinson on her way to Tahiti last month—and 22-year-old Captain Sterling Hayden has written a fast-moving account of it.

Essentially a note from one good sailor man to another, it was sent to Captain Ben Pine, racing skipper of the Gloucesterman Schooner Gertrude L. Thebaud, recent unsuccessful challenger for the International Fishermen's Trophy, aboard which the six-foot-four Hayden won unanimous praise as Thebaud's navigator in its series of races with the Bluenose of Lunenberg, N.S.

Now Hayden is sailing the little Brigantine down among the Attols which bewitched Stevenson, Gauguin and O'Brien.

Skipper's Own Story.

The following, somewhat disconnected, are excerpts:

"I watched the glass go down all night and was tempted to take in some sail, but did not as I wanted to get across the Gulf Stream as soon as possible, but the next morning she started howling and we hove to under storm tri-sail. I think the wind was blowing 70 in the puffs, and you know what kind of a sea was running. I thought she would stand on end, but she turned out to be quite an able little vessel, though she got thrown down to leeward something awful. But there wasn't much to do about it and we just let her blow.

Fore-Topsail Loose.

"The fore-topsail got loose and in about ten minutes there wasn't enough left to make a deck chair. With all that sail adrift she lay right in the trough and took it green over both rails."

Then, relates Hayden, the foresail blew out of its gaskets and he and Arthur Hansen, Boston (Herald-Traveler) newspaper photographer, the only non-seasick members of the company, went aloft to secure it and Hayden was blown from the yard, but miraculously saved his life by sliding down the rigging.

"We were both blown right off the yard like a shot out of a gun. I remember going by Art and yelling at him to hold on. Then I saw a wire ahead of me, so gaffed onto it on the way by and slid down the deck just as fast as Angus used to shift ballast.

Hayden gave a vivid idea of conditions below in the following:

Stove Washed Out.

"All the boys were in a bad way as the stove was washed out and we had nothing hot to eat." The galley stove backfired and set the place afire, Hayden wrote, but the crew doused it with a fire extinguisher.

"We caught a walloping big shark and nailed his tail to the jib boom end, hoping for wind, and sure enough, about half an hour later, she freshened, and we finally picked up the trades. That first 24 hours we ran 218 miles."

And that perhaps, gives you some idea of what Masefield was talking about when he wrote "I must go down to the sea again".

SEEKS ASSISTANCE OF BRITAIN, U. S.

Japan Willing to Give Assurance but Needs Currency Cooperation

Tokyo, Dec. 27 (CP-Havas)—Japan is offering Great Britain and the United States certain important assurances concerning their interests in China in return for Anglo-American co-operation in reorganizing the Chinese currency situation, it was reported here today.

Foreign Minister Hachiro Arita had long talks yesterday with the British Ambassador, Sir Robert Craigie, and Joseph Grew, the United States Envoy.

Currency Crisis in China.

These sources said apan is proposing to offer certain guarantees for foreign interests threatened by the events of the last two years to win foreign collaboration in monetary matters.

ERROL FLYNN MAY LOSE HIS YACHT

Exceeds Tonnage Imposed on Alien - Owned Craft

Los Angeles, Dec. 27 (AP)—Errol Flynn, adventurous Irish motion picture actor, today faced loss of his $25,000 racing yacht Sirocco because it exceeds tonnage and length limitations imposed by the United States government on alien-owned craft.

Although technically no alien may own a boat, Norman Neukom, assistant United States Attorney, said the government ordinarily limits such vessels to 20 feet in length and five tons. Flynn's yacht is over 60 feet long and is listed at 31 tons.

Neukom said a libel action would be filed against the boat.

Flynn's attorney, O.R. Cummins, said the actor had no knowledge of the government's rule when he purchased the vessel.

ENTIRE PROVINCE SWEPT BY STORM, SNOWFALL HEAVY

Weather Turns Colder With Second Snow Storm Today

TRAFFIC IS STRUCK

Strong Wind Blows at 60 Mile Rate Across Province

The worst snowstorm of the winter borne by winds of near gale velocity, blew over Ontario today leaving in its wake snow-blocked highways and railways, crippled communication and power systems and minor property damage. The forecast was for "much colder" weather and continued gales.

Almost every section of the province was hit. From the east came reports of a six-inch snowfall that turned to rain. Blizzards blew over most of Western Ontario and in the north, necessitating the calling out of highway and railway snowploughs. A 40-mile gale and intermittent blizzards blew down the Niagara Peninsula.

Industry Halted.

Industry was halted in Owen Sound when a terrific sleet storm cut off the city's power supply from the Eugenia Falls power plant thirty miles distant. Factories closed shortly after re-opening after the extended Christmas week-end. The city was without electricity for lighting or other purposes.

The 50-mile-an-hour wind blew down telegraph wires leading into Owen Sound and the city's only communication with other centres was by telephone. Telegraph wires also were blown down at Niagara Falls and other peninsula cities. Many automobiles were stuck in snowdrifts.

Returning Traffic Delayed.

The storm struck last night when the flow of homeward bound Christmas highway traffic was at its heaviest. It continued today with no indication of an immediate let-up. Numerous highway accidents were reported. The storm was blamed for a collision near Welland between a radial car and a motor-car in which Mr. and Mrs. C. Thomas were killed.

Heavy winds—but no snow—blew over Toronto during the night and early today. First reports indicated no damage was caused. In the east, 4¼ inches of snow, the heaviest of the season, fell upon Ottawa while Kingston reported a six-inch fall. Sideroads in that district were blocked.

Power-line poles were snapped at Welland by a 40-mile-an-hour wind and highways throughout the peninsula were rendered dangerous by a heavy coating of ice. Temperatures dropped 12 degrees during the night to far below freezing. Several automobiles skidded into ditches.

Snowploughs Used.

Snowploughs were called out at Stratford following the worst storm of the season. Six ploughs were needed to open blocked highways there after a five-inch snowfall. Nearly a foot of snow fell at Brantford and more than four inches at Galt. Drifts two feet deep in places resulted in many cars being stalled.

At London, a heavy all-night snowfall turned to light rain by morning, leaving streets and sidewalks coated with ice. The stiff wind made roads nearly impassable in places. Strong north-westerly gales blew light snow over Windsor.

In Northern Ontario, railway snow ploughs were called out for the first time this season as a blinding snowstorm swept that area.

Show of Force Inspired By a Report Mussolini Would Seize Djibouti

Mediterranean Fleet Would Assist in Demonstration

FRANCE ACCEPTS NOTE

Italy Denounces the Accord Made With France in 1935

Paris, Dec. 27 (AP)—French fears that Premier Mussolini may try to seize Djibouti by force were reported today to have inspired a plan to show Italy the power of France's Tunisian forces.

The French General Staff, informed sources said, has arranged a powerful display of fast French motorized forces for an inspection trip next month by Premier Edouard Daladier in Tunisia, French North African Protectorate.

These units, military sources said, should serve to remind the Italian Premier that he must count on the defence of Tripoli, capital of Italian Libya, should he threaten Djibouti, Red Sea port in French Somaliland and terminus of the railway to Italian Ethiopia.

Fleet to Take Part

A large part of the French Mediterranean fleet is scheduled to greet the Premier with thunderous salutes when he goes to Corsica, French Mediterranean Island Department, and Tunisia early in January.

Italians started agitating for Tunisia, Corsica, Nice and Savoy Nov. 30. Yesterday France told Italy she accepted an Italian note denouncing an Italian-French accord of 1935 regarding Italian rights in Tunisia but that the accord must remain the basis for Italian-French negotiations.

Reports that the Italian leader was considering a quick military move to seize Djibouti in hopes he could get it without war were published by Petinax, political commentator, in the newspaper L'Orde.

Progaganda Used.

He cited reports from Ethiopia that the Italians there were conducting a violent anti-French campaign among the natives and also published reports that veteran troops had relieved untrained tribesmen who heretofore have mounted guard in western Ethiopia.

The French press recently has united in pointing out that Djibouti is almost defenceless against the superior Italian military strength in Eritrea and Ethiopia.

The French general staff, however, was believed to count on the superior French strength in Tunisia, Algeria and Morocco to show Mussolini that Djibouti would prove to be a poor exchange for Tripoli.

Leadership Challenged.

The defence of the French Empire was part of the program which enabled former Socialist Premier Leon Blum to triumph in the Socialist Congress this morning against a challenge to his leadership by Paul Faure, veteran Socialist leader.

Blum put forward, however, a plan for unified action by Great Britain, the United States and France in a strong "peace by might" bloc.

He abandoned his domestic program of cooperation with the Communists in the face of party opposition and by that move appeared to have saved party unity.

New Map-Making Machine Made To Keep Pace With Changes

By STEPHEN J. McDONOUGH

Richmond, Va., Dec. 27 (AP)—The National Geographic Society announced today that it had been forced to develop a new map-making machine to keep pace with the changes being made in national boundaries by Hitler, Mussolini and the Japanese armies in China.

"Things are getting to the point where our maps are almost obsolete a few months after we print them," a representative of the society said. He demonstrated the work of the machine to early arrivals for the meeting of the American Association for the advancement of science which opens here today.

It is a camera which photographs with great precision the names of cities, towns, rivers, states, counties, and geographical boundaries so that when a master map is being prepared for reproduction several experts can work on it at once to locate them speedily and accurately.

The machine is now being used to prepare a new map of Europe and Africa, which will be completed as soon as the European governments decide what land belongs to which.

When the Sino-Japanese war simmers down the society will go to work on the reconstructed map of Asia.

The maps are distributed to about 3,000,000 persons throughout the United States, Europe and Asia and are used by mariners and aviators when other maps are not available.

SIR JAMES SEXTON LABOR MAN DIES

Leader of Britain's Dock Workers for Half a Century

Liverpool, Dec. 27 (CP)—Sir James Sexton, veteran Labor leader, died at his home here today. He was 82 and had been in frail health since a serious illness last year.

He was a leader of Britain's dock workers for half a century and from 1918 to 1931 sat in the House of Commons for St. Helen's.

After being knighted in 1931 he told one interviewer to "cut out the 'sir' because I am still the Jimmy Sexton who worked as a dock laborer". He ran away to sea at the age of 13 and was a member of the crew that made the stormy and perilous journey from Egypt to Britain with the huge "Cleopatra's needle" aboard their ship. The ancient monument was placed on the Thames embankment in London.

BRIGADIER DYER DIES AT AGE 79

Five Times Mentioned in Despatches During Great War

Minnedosa, Man., Dec. 27 (CP)—Brigadier-General Hugh M. Dyer, C.B.C.M.G., D.S.O., five times mentioned in despatches during the Great War, died here Sunday night after a two weeks' illness. A prominent agriculturist, he was 79.

Born in County Dublin, Ireland, he was educated at the Royal Naval School, New Cross, London, and came to Canada in 1881, settling in this district 50 miles north of Brandon.

When the Great War broke out he went overseas as second in command of the 5th Battalion with the rank of major. He was twice wounded and in 1917 was made Brigadier-Commander of the 7th Infantry Battalion. Near the close of the war he commanded Canadian troops in the Deaford area of England.

He is survived by four sons, three here and Harry in British Columbia.

MRS. (DR.) MOORE IN CHARGE OF MUSIC

Mrs. (Dr.) Moore was in charge of the music at the Dundas Street Mission Christmas tree, which was so important an item in the success of the entertainment on Friday evening.

ONLY TWO FIRES MAR FIREMEN'S HOLIDAY

Two minor fires disturbed the holiday quiet of the Belleville Fire Department over the week-end. A small bonfire on Moody Street early Sunday night sent fire squads racing to that part of the city while a chimney fire on Herchimer Street early today gave firemen a busy fifteen minutes. No serious damage resulted in either case.

WOLVES SEEN NEAR BAPTISTE LAKE

Claimed to be part of a large pack of wolves roaming the wild country in the vicinity of Baptiste Lake, three more venturesome than the rest started to cross the lake on the ice over the weekend. Fired at by Henry Hontoon, caretaker of a group of summer cottages in that district, the animals raced back into the thick undergrowth, apparently frightened by the shots.

Midnight Mass Is Celebrated at St. Michael's Church

At the Church of St. Michael the Archangel, beautifully decorated for the occasion, Midnight Mass was celebrated on Christmas Eve, with a large congregation present at the service.

At the entrance to the church, brilliantly lighted trees and Christmas decorations were most effective, the front of the church being especially illuminated with floodlights.

At eleven-forty the procession of children to the crib took place. As the procession passed through the aisles, the girls' voices were heard singing very sweetly, "Angels We Have Heard on High," the responses being taken by nine boys in the choir. The boys also sang, in splendid style, "O Holy Night." Those taking part were Robert Lucy, Tommy Hutchinson, Robert Plurey, John Dunlop, George De Carlo, Fraser McAuley, George Shepherd, Gordon Donavon, Basil Donoghue.

Solemn High Mass was celebrated at midnight with Rt. Rev. J. F. Nicholson, V. G., as celebrant, Rev. C. E. Baker, deacon, and Rev. J. J. Collins, sub deacon. The beauty of the altar was enhanced by red vigil lights and white flowers.

The sermon was eloquently delivered by Rev. Francis Gallery C. SS. R., Toronto, and Monsignor Nicholson extended Christmas greetings to the congregation and to the citizens of Belleville.

Under the direction of Mrs. Jas. Grant, the choir sang Gounod's "Missa Angelicum" and their rendition of this impressive Mass was all that could be desired.

At the Offertory a double quartet including Mrs. G. Clapp, Miss Dorothy Grant, Mrs. J. M. Triaisch, Miss Anne Lafferty, Messrs. Edward Brown, Harold Davidson, L. S. Shiels and Ted Doyle, sang "Adeste Fidelis." Solos were sung at Holy Communion by Mrs. Clapp, Mr. Davidson, Mr. Brown, Mr. Harold Barrett, and Mr. Shiels. At the end of Mass, Mr. John O'Gorman sang "Silent Night, Holy Night." Miss Dorothy Grant presided at the organ.

Masses were also celebrated at seven, eight-thirty and ten-thirty o'clock, Rev. Father Gallery preaching the sermon at each Mass. Solemn Benediction celebrated after the ten-thirty Mass concluded the ceremonies for the day.

During the day many visited the crib, where the scene at Bethlehem was beautifully represented.

Forty Men Work At Clearing Streets Of Heavy Wet Snow

Officials of the city works department early this morning began the wet task of digging the city out of the heaviest and most troublesome snow storm of the year, a four-inch fall which covered the district late last evening, and today melted into a slushy, packed mass.

Forty men, twenty-five of whom were paid employees and the remainder from the relief rolls, seven trucks and one city snow plow, took up the task of clearing the business section of the city early in the day, and from there spread their attack on the snow in the residential sections. It was a slow, uncomfortable job of shovelling heavy semi-liquid which oozed away in rivulets of water as it was loaded on the trucks.

Crossing Front Street this morning became an adventure fraught with possibilities of danger and discomfort. Snow piled high at the curbs by the passage of the snow plow lay in a deceptive mass, waiting but the pressure of a foot to dissolve in cold wetness, precipitating the citizen up to well above his shoe tops as he stepped from the walk. Automobiles and trucks which sped along the main streets flung a spray of water and melted snow high on either side, drenching unwary pedestrians on the walks thoroughly.

"All we hope is that it doesn't freeze now. If it does we're licked" reported officials of the city department of public works laboring heroically at the task of clearing the streets. "This has been one of the worst jobs we've tackled in some time."

Merchants Expect Fewer Changes

Buying of Useful Gifts Helps to Make Recipients Want to Keep Them

Bare windows along Front Street this morning revealed the extent of Christmas shopping this year, which was generally reported by merchants to be one of the heaviest since pre-recession years.

But, were there the usual number of post-Christmas disappointments, perplexities and post mortems when gifts were laid out in the usual manner on Christmas morning?

Storekeepers and clerks questioned during the final hectic hours of last minute buying on Saturday evening said "no." Like the social welfare organizations of the city which have been stressing the desirability of donating useful things of lasting quality, so have customers insisted, and merchants made a point of advocating gifts that recipients would prize for their utility. Storekeepers and their help devoted much time to the task of helping buyers select the right things, it was revealed by a check. The buyers for the most part responded heartily to the friendly suggestions and gift buying co-operation.

There may be duplication of presents and stores during the latter end of the week may expect to receive many gifts back for exchanging, but there will be less of this this year. Gifts such as woollen blankets, sweaters, winter clothing and other seasonal effects such as were bought heavily this year are generally not duplicated, it was explained by one merchant. This year has been a year of "useful giving", it was stated by this store owner.

Among the heavy purchases this year were listed ski equipment, accessories for outdoor sports of all kinds; skates, toboggans, sleds. Clothing, which has become a perennially popular gift, was even more popular this year. "I don't know how many mackinaws, mitts, woollen blankets and other things like that we've sold," declared the store manager.

Cardinal Bird Visitor in City

With brilliant scarlet plumage, and the black ring that encircles its bill attracting attention of winter-bound residents of the city, a cardinal bird, a specimen rarely if ever seen in this part of Canada, made its home for the past two days in the yard of Dr. M. E. Branscombe on Queen Street.

Sometimes seen in the Niagara district during the summer months, these fine-feathered songsters are natives of the south and middle United States, but are rarely encountered this far north of the border.

Northern Youth Sustains Painful Injuries

Rushed thirty-four miles from the wooded fastnesses of his home near Princess Lake to Bancroft Red Cross Hospital, on Saturday, twelve-year-old Carl Parks, son of Mr. and Mrs. Seymour Parks underwent an emergency operation following an accident in which a sharp stake was driven into his stomach.

The youth suffered the painful injuries after he had jumped on a sleigh-load of wood.

Dr. Lumb assisted by nurses performed the operation after Parks had been rushed overland to the Bancroft Hospital. The latest reports state he is progressing satisfactorily.

Police Blotter

'Twas the night before Christmas and all around the police station everything was quiet. Not even the inebriates who celebrate this festive season of the year graced the inner sanctum as kindly police officers steered what few near-offenders there were at large to the safety of their homes. Eleven knights of the road, however sought the warmth of the cell-block in which to spend the night. Sunday and Monday nights saw the regular quota of benighted travellers with the Monday night contingent being regaled with music from one of their number who displayed a marked efficiency on the Jews Harp.

A young lady resident of Front Street told police today that she had been assaulted in an apartment of a man who had invited her to spend the evening there. Police are investigating the affair in which it is claimed another friend of the lady in question administered his own idea of justice to the alleged offender.

POLICE COURT

A number of cases that have been pending in the police court for some time, were disposed of by Magistrate E. J. Butler, K.C., today. Despite the lengthy holiday, there was an absence of serious crime in the district, James Duncan pleading guilty to a reckless driving charge after an accident on Saturday afternoon was fined $10 and costs or $27 in all. The fine was paid.

A local resident pleaded guilty to being "found in" in a common gaming house and was assessed $3.00 and $9.50 costs, while another resident pleaded guilty to "keeping a common gaming house" and was remanded for sentence until Friday.

Thomas Matthews was charged with being intoxicated but did not answer when his name was called and was remanded until Friday. "I think we know where Tommy is," said a court official.

A young man, who has been before the court for some time on several charges of breaking, entering and theft, and who underwent mental examination at Ontario hospital at Kingston, was sent to the Boys' Training School at Bowmanville for the unexpired term of his sentence to that institution and sentence was postponed on the charges before the court until that term had been served.

Alton Williams of Harold, facing two charges of theft and on remand from a previous court, when he pleaded guilty, was sentenced to serve three months in the Ontario Reformatory and three months indeterminate. Williams was at liberty on probation from a recent conviction at Campbellford. In sentencing the young man, Magistrate Butler told the accused, "All gangsters start with petty crimes but I am of the same opinion as the Crown Attorney, that you were not the ringleader in these thefts." Charles Carter, also of Harold, and with Williams during these thefts, was given one year determinate in the Ontario Reformatory and also the unexpired term of three months and twenty days of a period of parole. Mr. Donnan read three county jail convictions, one suspended sentence and one reformatory term to the court and asked for a stiff sentence because said the Crown Attorney, "I think he is the ringleader of the boy just sentenced."

Henry Brauner was remanded till Friday on a charge of theft.

Tweed Man Injured When Auto Skids

Smith's Falls, Dec. 27.—Tracy Quinn of Tweed, is a patient in the hospital today in a serious condition as a result of injuries sustained in an automobile accident early yesterday morning when the car he was driving skidded on Highway No. 15 at the entrance to Smith's Falls and crashed into a guard rail. Mr. Quinn sustained concussion of the brain, four fractured ribs and severe lacerations about the head and face.

PAGING SANTA CLAUS

By

Jane Corby

Tony had not dared look at Jan since that first searching glance for fear that he would take her in his arms. But now he turned to her.

"You will come with me?" he asked.

"You're going on to Moose River?" was all she said.

Tony nodded. Jan, walking back to get Pussy-puff's basket and her own bag, saw the stricken look on the young bridegroom's face. Immediately she turned back to Tony and explained to him that the bride's arm was broken, and that the quicker she had medical attention the better. Tony agreed at once to take them along too.

"Do you suppose that they have a doctor—?" began the young husband.

"Oh, yes. I'll call Dr. Curtis as soon as we get to Moose River. He's at his winter camp near there," Jan explained.

Tony looked at her, the sudden realization that she had been going to Brad Curtis darkening his eyes. He scarcely heard the driver's parting admonitions as he helped transfer the luggage and put the honeymooners in the back seat.

So Jan had not been running away from him; she had been running to Brad Curtis. He, Tony, had lost out after all.

CHAPTER XXVIII

The air had cleared now and from somewhere behind the clouds a brilliant sliver of moon illuminated their path with sudden glory. They drove on in silence for a while, Jan's thoughts in a whirl as she tried to argue with herself that she must not be misled by the joy she had felt in seeing Tony once more. She must go on just as she had planned. She did wish she could stop this unreasoning wave of happiness that made her hands tremble so that she had to lock them firmly in her lap!

"How—h-how did you come to find us?"

"I was coming to bring you home, of course. You see, I thought you were running away."

"Well, I was!" Oblivious to the young couple in the back seat Jan leaned forward and spoke earnestly.

"Tony, I couldn't face Mr. Deverest tonight. It would have been bad enough to see him some other time and explain this whole foolish business, but to tell him about it on the very night he was announcing his engagement to someone else, and with Paul watching me, and everyone laughing—oh, I just couldn't!"

"So you ran away. Once you told me I didn't have the courage to be practical. That I was always pretending I had everything I wanted. I thought you were brave enough to face the music."

Jan shrank back miserably into her corner.

"You think I am a coward?"

"You know best what you can do, I suppose. Still, I don't think it was very sporting to run off and leave Dora all alone—"

But she hadn't been going to leave Dora for long, Jan explained. She had been going up to meet Dr. Curtis and they would probably fly back on Christmas day. There would be plenty of time to explain to Mr. Deverest and Paul before Dora came home.

"But Paul's bringing Dora home from the hospital today," Tony said.

"Today?"

It was to be a surprise for Jan, Tony told her. Paul had not wanted her to know until she was ready to go to the party that Dora was to be at the Christmas celebration, too. To Jan's quick questions Tony explained that it had all been arranged days before and that everything, even a wheel chair, was in readiness for her little sister.

"But of course if you aren't there," Tony finished.

They were within sight of the town now and he slowed down as a big red truck lumbered toward them across a narrow wooden bridge. All at once he stopped and pulled on the brake. There was a hail from the truck driver and Tony, lowering the window on his side, leaned out into the cold crisp air.

"Are you looking for the bus?.. Yes, on this road....about fifteen miles back. I have some of the passengers here. They're all right, but you'd better get on to the others as fast as possible.

The truck drove away and they sped on in the deep tracks it had left across the bridge. Jan turned resolutely to Tony.

"I'm going back. I don't know how we can get there now, but I've got to be back if Dora is coming home."

A new sort of gladness came in to Tony's face as he heard her. He drove on through the narrow village streets with their steep roofed houses blanketed in snow. For the first time since he had heard Paul's voice that morning he felt some of the joyousness of the Christmas season. The little houses looked as if they had been stamped on Christmas cards, so neatly did they stand in their own fenced-in-yards. Lights from their windows were mellow on the snow drifts beneath them.

On they drove, asking directions of the few who hurried along the streets, and calling "Merry Christmas" as they continued on their way.

The small boarding house that served as hotel in the town was, they discovered, the only place that had a phone. Here a friendly woman made them welcome and as comfortable as she could, while Jan talked to the telephone operator and finally managed to get Brad Curtis's telephone number. It seemed a long time before she heard his clear, precise voice, but when he spoke the homely room in which they stood, the ancient instrument in her hands, and all the doubts and fears of the day seemed to vanish as she knew somehow they would. He agreed at once to help.

"Unfortunately, I haven't my car here. Can't you get someone to drive you up the Mountainville Road? It's only three miles from where you are."

"Yes, of course. Tony is here with the car. We'll be there in fifteen minutes."

There was silence at the other end of the wire for a second or two, and when Brad Curtis spoke again he sounded less exuberant.

"Oh, Tony is with you? Well, come along."

When they drove up to the long rambling lodge that fitted into the hill as if the trees of which it was made had shaped it themselves, Brad was standing in the open doorway and had by this time regained control of himself. His greeting to Tony was cordial. He listened attentively to the account of the accident and led the bride into the small room which he had furnished as an office. When he came out again he was getting into a white coat, and to Jan's query he replied that the arm was undoubtedly broken, but not badly, and that he could put up the honeymooners for the next twenty-four hours.

Then Jan, her face flaming, told him how she had started out the morning before to visit him. How the bus had been delayed until Tony finally caught up with it and had driven her on. She stumblingly explained that now instead of being able to help him celebrate Christmas she would have to get back to New York as soon as possible.

"I just found out about Dora, you see. She wanted to surprise me by coming home unexpectedly. I didn't know you had given her permission to go home tonight."

"You can take my plane, of course." Dr. Curtis looked inquiringly at Tony, who nodded agreement.

"You mean fly?" Jan's eyes were shining as she realized that the problem of miles that lay between her and her dear Dora had been disposed of by those few simple words. Dr. Curtis smiled at her indulgently. They could rest as much as possible, he told them, while he had the runway cleared of snow and got the plane out of the hangar. They could leave in about half an hour.

It was wonderful to relax at last before the great roaring fire and sip the delicious hot chocolate Jan made; to talk gayly to Tony once more; to reward Dr. Curtis's kindness by her obvious delight in this lovely shadowed room where they waited.

Only once before they left did she have a moment to speak to Brad alone. Tony had climbed into the plane and was warming up the motor.

"I had planned such a different evening," she began.

Dr. Curtis shook his head, smiling.

"You will be much happier this way. Tony is a grand chap. One look at your face as you came in tonight with him—and I knew."

He put both hands on her arms and drew her toward him. For a minute his lips rested against her forehead, then: "Merry Christmas, Jan!"

CHAPTER XXIX

Were all runaways as glad to be back home as she was? Jan wondered. Even runaways who had accomplished nothing by their escapades, who were still faced with all the problems they had tried to escape? She decided that it was Dora's happiness which had communicated itself to her. How could anyone remain downcast or fearful, seeing a person so bubbling with happiness as her once fragile sister? Dora was still thin almost transparency, but she sat up really straight in her wheel chair and her blue eyes were radiant when she announced that Paul was going to take her to the party himself.

After that, there was nothing for Jan to do but get ready. Up to that very moment she had been wavering; she would go, and when the climax came she would just smile and show she had known what was coming. They wouldn't like it very well, finding out how she had fooled them all, but they'd just make the best of it; they'd have to, with Mr. Deverest and his fiancee right there! But each time that her thoughts had reached this point Jan's heart misgave her—she couldn't, she couldn't go through with it. She wouldn't go to the party!

Now that she knew Dora was going, however, there was no help for it; Jan had to go too. But she lingered so over brushing Dora's curls and fastening a sprig of holly at one side, that Dora protested.

"Please hurry, Jan," she said. "I can't wait any longer to see how that blue dress looks."

And: "Oh!" she said, when she saw Jan in it. You look as if you'd stepped out of a painting."

"That's the way the dress is supposed to look, silly," said Jan, kissing her. The dusky red hair had been caught carelessly on top of her head, with a mass of little curls jumbled into an old-fashioned topknot. The golden eyes were a little shadowed with fatigue, making them look large and mysterious. There was a soft knock on the sitting room door.

"From Mr. Deverest," said the boy who handed her a square white box.

Jan undid the ribbon after glancing at the nam, "Miss Jan Payson," on the outside of the box Inside was a mass of orchids.

"With that dress! How lovely!" The ecstatic Dora touched one of the deep purple centers with her finger.

Jan looked at the enclosed card. There was a mistake—the box was from Tony. She read:

"Chin up! Christmas is coming. Tony."

Jan pinned the magnificent orchids in place, her eyes filled with sudden tears, but smiling too, so that she looked at the flowers through little scintillating stars. Evidently she couldn't do anything with Tony—or without him. Then Paul was at the door, ready to propel Dora's chair to the roof and Jan had to go along too.

The roof garden had been transformed into a regular dream of a Christmas party; that was her first thought. Dora reached up and caught her hand as they all stood for a moment in the doorway. "Oh, Jan!"

In the centre of the dance floor stood a Christmas tree, so tall that the electric star at the top seemed very far away. It was decorated as a Christmas tree should be decorated, Paul pointed out firmly.

"I wasn't going to have one of these modern, arty trees, all pale blue or red lights, with white lacquered branches. This is a real Christmas tree."

It was, too. The great, spreading boughs were festooned with honest strings of popcorn and gaudy tinsel; candy-stuffed transparent stockings dangled alluringly among the glittering baubles that shone, hundreds of them, all over the tree; there were candy canes and gingerbread men and the only concession to modernity which Paul had made were the electric lights that took the place of candles.

The room was full of light and music and the excited happy talk of many people. Jan's eyes, travelling from the orchestra—each man garbed as Santa Claus—fell on a familiar figure seated at a table near the edge of the dance floor. Wasn't that Mrs. Mallord? And Jack! And all those boys crowded at nearby tables? Why, they were the neighborhood boys — Jack's club!

"I'll find our table," Paul called after Jan as she ran over to greet Mrs. Mallord.

"You're lookin' grand, darlin'," Mrs. Mallord told her admiringly.

"Hi!"

Jack, behind her, grinned broadly when his shout made her turn. The other boys, uncomfortable in their impressive surroundings, but happy, responded bashfully to her greeting. A shriek from Molly, the telephone operator, carried half across the room. Jan went over to the table where Molly and Fay Elkins—with their escorts—were enjoying their position as "guests of the house," as Molly put it. Paul came over to claim Jan and led her to the table where Dora was waiting. There were four places, Jan noticed in sudden panic.

"Excuse me." Paul did not sit down as Jan took her place. He left them and went over to stand beside the tree, assuming the role of master of ceremonies. The girls of the ensemble, who had danced so often with Jan, came prancing in, silver sleighbells jingling from red harnesses strapped across their shoulders. From that moment on the whole room became one rollicking affair, strangers as well as friends shouting and laughing across tables to one another. In between the planned numbers the audience danced in the space around the tree.

"I had no idea Paul could be so funny!" gasped Jan, choking with laughter after a particularly hilarious introduction of a "snowflake dance." Dora leaned forward, her cheeks suddenly pink.

"Jan, I want to tell you something."

"You look as if it is a happy something," said Jan.

"It is. Paul and I—" Dora hesitated, and began again. "I—Paul—oh, Jan, he loves me! He wants to marry me and take care of me always!"

"Dora, darling," Jan jumped up and threw her arms around her sister, "I'm so glad!"

"But aren't you surprised, too?" Dora asked when Jan was back in her chair.

"Some," said Jan, "but not so very much. It's sooner than I expected, though."

"He's so thoughtful," Dora said, "and, Jan, don't you think that touch of white in his hair makes him look distinguished—like a diplomat, sort of?" Dora rattled on and Jan listened, happy in her sister's happiness, but apprehensive of what the night would bring.

CHAPTER XXX

Jan jumped when someone behind her said suddenly, "Here I am!" Before she could turn, Tony had slipped into the vacant place by her side.

"Oh, Tony!" she cried. Then, lowering her voice, "Is Mr. Deverest here?"

"Yes. But don't you worry about him. I fixed that up all right."

Jan stared at him unbelievingly. Tony, smiling at Dora, ignored Jan's concern. "Have I missed much of the fun?" he asked.

"Some," said Jan. "But it wasn't important. There'll be lots more, I guess."

"Shall I tell him?" Dora broke in, and without waiting for Jan's nod she made the announcement of her engagement. Tony expressed a gratifying amount of surprise and delight.

"Engagements seem to be in the air," Jan added. "I suppose Mr. Deverest will be announcing his any minute," she said nervously.

"Oh, him!" Tony answered lightly. "Jan, will you look the other way while I speak privately to Dora?"

Laughing, Jan fixed her gaze on Mrs. Mallord's broad back across the room.

"Dora," Tony began, "I'm in a spot. I want to propose to a girl and I've never done it before. Now, as an engaged girl who has experienced a proposal, I want your advice. Maybe you'll listen to what I've prepared, and see how it sounds to you. I know it won't be so good as Paul's, but let me rehearse it anyway."

Jan, turning swiftly, opened her mouth to speak, but Dora forestalled her.

"Go ahead, Tony," she invited. "I'll be glad to tell you what I can to improve your technique."

"All right—here goes." Tony drew a deep breath. "Now we'll pretend I'm talking to the girl. I begin something like this—

"'D-darling, I l-love you....'"

"Good!" Dora interrupted, clapping her hands.

"You think that'll do?" Then," Tony went on, "I thought I might say 'Will you marry me?'"

"Oh, not so quickly!" Dora objected. "I think you ought to tell her about her—her smile, and the way you feel when she looks at you, and how happy you think you can make her....you know, lead up to the final question."

"Something like this? 'When I look at you....'" he had turned toward Jan and suddenly their eyes met. For a long moment silence hung between them, then Tony spoke again, huskily:

"Jan—will you?"

"Yes, Tony," said Jan.

"Darling!"

Both turned at a delighted little chuckle from Dora.

"Well," Tony defended himself, "I told you I didn't know how to propose."

"Oh, that was all right," Dora giggled. "I wasn't laughing at you. I was laughing because you thought your proposal wouldn't be as good as Paul's. But all he said was—just what you said!"

They were interrupted by flying cotton snowball and presently the air was thick with them. The dancing girls had started throwing them and Jack's club, feeling at home for the first time, had entered into the spirit of the occasion with enthusiasm. Even Mrs. Mallord, Jan saw, was throwing snowballs back as fast as they came her way.

Paul dodged over to their table and, after a while, when the snowballs had been reduced to mere fragments of their original fluffiness, he tapped his fork against a glass to get attention. Then in the sudden stillness he put his hand on Tony's shoulder:

"Ladies and gentlemen," he announced, "there's no need to ask if you're having a good time. And I'm sure you want to thank the man responsible for it. May I present your host, William Anthony Deverest!"

Tony bowed and grinned while they cheered him to the echo. Jack's club members, with fingers between their teeth, gave the shrillest demonstration the Devon Arms had ever heard.

"I can't begin to thank you for this reception," said Tony when he could make himself heard. "But I want to tell you that you'd better cut it short, because each person is to get a present from that tree and there are a lot of people here."

He made his way to the centre of the floor, and at a signal from Paul, several of the hotel employees hovering in the doorway rushed forward to help him. Twenty-four Santa Clauses from the orchestra lined up behind them and as each present was detached from the tree Tony read aloud the name on the gift and then shouted:

"Paging Santa Claus! Another gift for special delivery."

At that point a Santa Claus would detach himself from the group, seize the gift and go in search of the recipient. Soon the room was full of red figures bearing gifts and as Tony read each name Jack and his friends took up the cry:

"Paging Santa Claus!"

Under cover of all the excitement Jan, very white, leaned close to Paul.

"You've made a terrible mistake!" she whispered. "And it's all my fault. That's Mr. Deverest's chauffeur, Tony Williams. I introduced him here as Mr. Deverest because you seemed to think...."

"What do you mean Deverest's chauffeur?" Paul interrupted, genuinely astonished. "I know Tony Deverest—I knew his chauffeur, too—the last one he had. He fired him about a month ago. That's Tony Deverest all right, up there at the Christmas tree. Listen!"

Tony's voice came clearly to Jan's doubting ears:

"There's just one present left on the tree and I'm going to call the one for whom it is intended up here to receive it. Will Miss Jan Payson please come forward?"

Jan sat motionless—unable to rise.

"Go on, Jan," whispered Dora. "Don't you hear Tony calling you?"

As in a dream, Jan rose and made her way through the tables. The blue dress rippled softly about her and her face, beautiful and serious, was turned toward Tony. When she reached the tree he took her hand and guided it to a small white package almost hidden in the green branches.

"Open it," he said softly, and she obeyed. The outer wrappings removed, there was disclosed a tiny jeweler's box. Jan's amber eyes widened questioningly.

"Paul called you William Anthony Deverest," she murmured, bewildered.

"Paul was right," said Tony. "And you've promised to be Mrs. William Anthony Deverest."

He took the box from her and out of it he took a ring. It was set with a marquise diamond and a breathless "Oh!" came from those who managed to catch a glimpse of its flashing beauty. But Jan scarcely looked at it as Tony slipped it on her finger. Her eyes were on his face and she did not move them even when he turned to the audience and said, his voice full of pride and tenderness:

"I am happy to tell you that Miss Jan Payson has promised to marry me. That's true, isn't it?" he added softly to the girl beside him.

For answer Jan took a step closer and Tony, his arms around her, could barely catch her whispered, "It's a promise."

Flushed and radiant, they turned to see Paul, who had jumped to his feet glass in hand, proposing a toast to their happiness.

"Let's all drink to the bride-to-be!" he shouted. Glasses clinked all over the room, but above their tinkling Jan clearly heard Mrs. Mallord declaring in a voice that mingled tears and laughter:

"Weddin's are even better than funerals, I always say."

AFTER CHRISTMAS

The great annual winter festival of Christmas is past, but its influence goes on during the year. While there are few who could continue on the high plane of the Christmas season, in their interests for others, their enjoyments and their full expression of life, the results of Christmas linger on month after month. So powerful is it that many look sadly upon its passing, feeling that it is the high peak of celebration with the family life enthroned as the centre of interest.

Christmas is the time of the year which provides the occasion of most of the finest sentiments and motives which dominate the human heart. There are no regrets that man has reached so high a plane. He knows he has been made happy making others happy.

So powerful is the appeal which has always been felt by a large portion of the population of the earth in the birth of Christ. At the basis has been that fact with the desire to celebrate that event, which has moulded world history, directing life into new channels. What would have been history of the world without the results of that Life, no one can imagine. For nearly two thousand years these influences have been at work.

The spirit which gave rise to the celebration is of such a character that it must go forward.

The following days carry on the spirit of Christmas, the child with his toys, the parents in watching the reaction of the young to the world of good hings about them. This week it seems that mankind is resting, as it were as he passes the last few days of the old year. With the coming of the new year, he looks forward through the coming winter months to the outburst of spring.

The world was fortunate this year in the fact that the celebration of Christmas fell at the first of the week. It meant two days of celebration, it provided greater opportunity for the religious observance of the day which fell on Sunday and extended the pleasures and rejoicing over two days.

This week is a sort of lull. Christmas scenes are revived and the people are in happy mood.

LOANS BY BRITAIN

Not long ago, the British Prime Minister pointed out the strength of British resources and finance. This was a potent influence and perhaps the turning point in the Great War when the Central European powers were defeated.

The Daily Commercial News of Toronto contains a very elucidating editorial on "John Bull, Lender" in which it states:

"It is almost a commonplace to say that Great Britain could only stand out for a short time if her imports of food supplies and raw materials were cut off. This is repeated frequently in time of crisis, and it applies indirectly to the vital need of adequate naval protection. But even with her enormous trade, she still sells much less in goods to other nations than she buys from them. She has what the economists call an "adverse" balance of trade. How does she make up this deficit?

"There are many ways in which it is met. Her great shipping and other services are among them. But first of all is the immense capital investment that John Bull has placed in all parts of the world. From these investments flows the steady return of interest payments, estimated by experts at around $1,100,000,000.

"In Canada, for instance, Britain has some $2,750,000,000 placed. In South America she has a heavier investment. There are huge sums in other dominions and colonies, altogether about $8,600,000,000.

"In short, people abroad owe John Bull about $15,000,000,000, or about $300 for every Briton.

"There is at present a sort of competition in foreign lending in which Germany has taken a hand. Turkey is a good example of this. And it is interesting to note some of John Bull's investments which are not so familiar outside financial circles.

"Here are some of John Bull's debtors, with the amounts the governments owe him:

Russia (czarist bonds are almost worthless)	$1,500,000,000
Japan	375,000,000
Mexico	300,000,000
Turkey	210,000,000
Rumania	160,000,000
Portugal	150,000,000

"It is apparent from this that Britain's commitments are of immense value in the real international sense."

"All human situations have their inconveniences.—We feel those of the present, but neither see nor feel those of the future; and hence we often make troublesome charges without amendment, and frequently for the worse."—Franklin.

"Penetration or discernment has an air of divination; it pleases our vanity more than any other quality of the mind."—Rochefoucauld.

"True dignity is never gained by peace, and never lost when honors are withdrawn."—Massinger.

"Dignity consists not in possessing honors, but in the consciousness that we deserve them."—Aristotle.

"The root of all discontent is self-love."—J. F. Clarke.

"Every noble work is at first impossible."—Carlyle.

LITTLE MIRETE

Sieur de Montcalm was the king's own knight,
And true to his command
He vowed to serve his country well
In a strange and dangerous land.
But there was sorrow round his hearth
When it was time to go,
And little Mirete cried in his arms
Because she loved him so.

Unfailingly in far New France
Where treachery was rife,
He kept his pledged word to the king
Through days of endless strife,
And always when the night was still,
And to a candle's glow,
He said a prayer for little Mirete
Because he loved her so."

And when a friend returned from court
Who bore reluctantly
Sad tidings from his lonely home
Across the great, broad sea,
He read the message in his eyes
And murmured very low,
"I am sure it must be little Mirete
Because I loved her so."

To a realm more fair than sunny France
There came with vision clear,
Out of the darkness of defeat
A true knight without fear,
And who should run to greet him
Her bright face all aglow,
But little Mirete with outstretched arms
Because she loved him so!

'TWAS THE DAY AFTER CHRISTMAS—somewhat different from the night before Christmas when all through the house not a creature was stirring, not even a mouse. The day after Christmas, for most people, is an anti-climax, after seemingly building up for an awful let-down. Broke, but happy, chin up, facing the opening of the New Year. One year ago this column deplored the fact that Christmas in China gave the lie to peace on earth and good will to man, an undeclared war filling the land with sorrow and suffering. Christmas in Spain could not have been merry for very many, and the war god is still scattering his death dealing bolts to destroy human life, while sorrow walks with hunger and thirst and pain and sickness. Other European countries missed the true Christmas spirit this year, countries where fear rode triumphant, where a carelessly spoken word might lead to prison and even death. Thank God for the British Empire and liberty of speech and action, thank God for Canada with all of its joys and privileges which we do not appreciate enough because we have never experienced the reverse.

GERMANY AND RUSSIA TRIED TO ABOLISH GOD, forgetting that it is written THE FOOL HATH SAID IN HIS HEART THERE IS NO GOD. Those countries also attempted to destroy Christmas, but the Christmas Spirit could not be purged from the hearts of men and women and children of Good Will, where it was hidden from all but the Omnipotent One who planted that spirit in human hearts as an antidote to personal selfishness, and that biggity germ which creates and maintains dictators, temporarily.

SUGGESTION FOR SCRIPTURE READING BY MODERN DICTATORS:

PSALMS 37—35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40

"I have seen the wicked in great power, and spreading himself like a green bay tree. . . . Yet he passed away and lo he was not: yea I sought him, but he could not be found. . . . Mark the perfect man and behold the upright, for the end of that man is peace. . . . BUT THE TRANSGRESSORS SHALL BE DESTROYED TOGETHER; the end of the wicked shall be cut off. . . . But the salvation of the righteous is of the Lord; He is their strength in the time of trouble. . . . And the Lord shall help them, and deliver them from the wicked, and save them, because they trust in Him."

HOLLYWOOD HAD A GOLDEN CHRISTMAS, splashing money around like water, and is looking forward to a New Year celebration which will be principally liquid moonshine followed by severe headache and a superfluity of that dark brown feeling leading up to a recital of that classic carol "What Fools These Mortals Be".

A THREE THOUSAND DOLLAR SILVER COFFIN encloses the remains of that big business tycoon, head of a twenty million dollar wholesale drug concern who shot and killed himself when officers arrived to arrest him on charges of defrauding his company and the public out of millions. It was also alleged that he was a former convict, finger-prints of the convict and the financial king being said to be identical. It's a long, long lane that has no turning.

"Last night I spoke to over 5,000 people at the local auditorium."

"What did you say to them?"

"Peanuts, popcorn and chewing gum!"

WORLD'S WEATHER

To be able to tell the world well in advance of sudden storms is a cherished ambition among meteorologists. Many of them are likely to agree with Clifford J. MacGregor, weather man and explorer, that a step in that direction would be the establishment of a chain of weather stations north of latitude 70.

MacGregor spent fore than a year in Northern Greenland, his ship locked in the ice, and throughout that period he kept tabs on the weather and periodically supplied civilization with data on magnetic conditions. He set sail from Newark, N.J., in the schooner General A. W. Greely, in the summer of 1937, and tied up at the same dock again early last month.

He collected so much Arctic weather data he says it will take a year to compute his magnetic records alone. It was not MacGregor's first experience with the Arctic. He had spent years at similar work in Alaska.

It is common knowledge among meteorologists that the weather in temperate latitudes depends almost wholly on what happens in the polar regions. All of the northern hemisphere is affected by Arctic conditions and all of the southern hemisphere by what goes on in the Antarctic. MacGregor is one of many scientists who have tried to solve the mystery of what makes those weather wheels go around.

The expedition, MacGregor says, discovered "quite a permanent low" north of Greenland, through which there seemed to be a drift of polar air masses toward the United States and the Atlantic Ocean. It is the accumulation of air masses on the ocean that produces such things as the Ohio Valley floods and unseasonably warm winters.

No doubt the presence of such a mass on the Atlantic blocked recent progress of continental wind systems off the coast and not only held a recent storm over the New England States, but intensified it to the proportions of a small blizzard.

Six or more stations northeast of Point Barrow, Alaska, located variously in Greenland, north of Cape York, Melville Island, Ellesmere Land and Victoria Land are suggested by MacGregor. He says an important result besides telling the temperate zones what weather to expect, would be to determine flying conditions against the time when air travel will extend to the "top of the world."—Sarnia Observer.
